[15]"He flies across the path of the Vindhya mountains." vindhyavīthīplavaṃgamaḥ: Literally, "leaping or flying along the vindhya-path." Commentators differ as to the interpretation of this somewhat obscure reference. We tend to follow the interpretation of Cg, who takes the epithet as a reference to the southern passage of the sun during the winter season, which brings it across this southernmost mountain range of the madhyadeśa. This interpretation is explicitly followed in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 306). Cr takes the term plavaṃgama in its sense of "leaping monkey," and understands that the sun is the master of the monkeys of the Vindhya region. Pagani (1999, p. 1156), who translates as we do, nonetheless notes that the choice of the term plavaṃgama recalls that the sun is the father of the monkey king Sugrīva (p. 1673). Ct, Ck, and Cm (as an alternative) understand vindhyavīthī to be a term for the suṣumnā nāḍī, or subtle yogic channel of the body.

[16]"the golden one . . . reddish in hue" piṅgalaḥ . . . raktaḥ: Literally, "yellow . . . red." We take both terms in the sense of the colors that presumably reflect the appearance of the sun at its rising and setting, respectively. The commentators acknowledge these meanings but offer additional esoteric senses. Several, including Cg, derive the meaning of the latter term from one sense of its verbal root √rañj, "to please," with the idea that the sun pleases or delights all creatures.

[17]"I do homage to you, you of the twelve forms." dvādaśātman namo 'stu te: The commentators generally see this as a reference to the sun's passage through the twelve months or the twelve nakṣatras, or lunar mansions. Some commentators, such as Cr, add the explanation that the sun is the governor of the twelve Ādityas, or vedic solar divinities. Cg offers only this latter interpretation, listing the Ādityas by name. The epithet in the vocative and the enclitic pronoun te, "to you," mark a shift in the passage at which reference to Āditya shifts from the third to the second person. This shift is seen again in the variant of line 36 found in D7 and the texts and printed editions of Ct (=GPP 6.105.18cd). Several of the translators make a shift at earlier points in the passage. However, at line 43 (=GPP 6.105.22), the passage clearly reverts back to the third person. See note 29 below.

[18]"Homage to him who rises on the eastern mountain and who sets on the western mountain." namaḥ pūrvāya giraye paścime giraye namaḥ: Literally, "Homage to the eastern mountain, homage to the western mountain." Our translation follows the interpretation of Cg, who understands the references, by a kind of lakṣaṇā, to be to the sun, who is situated on the respective mountains at his time of rising and setting (pūrvāya giraye pūrvabhāgasthagiryupalakṣitāya paścime giraye paścimabhāgasthaparvatopalakṣitāya). Among the translators consulted, only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 307) follows this interpretation. Others render literally. Cg makes no comment on the seemingly irregular dative form paścime for the expected paścimāya. D7,10,11,T3,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cr correct the locution, as it were, substituting paścimāyādraye, "to the western mountain."

[19]"Homage, homage" namo namaḥ: All the commentators agree that the repetition is expressive of a high degree of reverence.

[20]"to him of the tawny horses" haryaśvāya: We follow Cg in taking this epithet, normally used of Indra, to refer to the sun's tawny steeds (śyāmāśvāya). Interestingly, both Cm and Cr see the reference here to be to Rāma, who has a tawny monkey (hariḥ), whom Cm identifies explicitly as Hanumān, as his mount. (harir hanumān aśvo vāhanaṃ yasya saḥ. anena rāmāvatāraḥ sūcitaḥ—so Cm.) See 6.78.27; 6.90.5–7; 6.95.15; 6.116.24; and notes.

[21]"to the victorious one . . . who offers victory" jayāya jayabhadrāya: Our interpretation of these two terms, like that of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 307), follows that of Cg. Cg's second interpretation of the first term, which we have explicitly followed, is that the term jaya stands for the one who is victorious (jayatīti jayo jayī). According to his first interpretation, the term means "he who offers victory to his worshipers (upāsakānāṃ jayakarāya)." Cm's interpretation is similar to this latter one of Cg. Ct and Ck understand the term to mean both "he who grants victory all the way to the Brahmaloka," as well as the name of a celestial gatekeeper of Brahmā (brahmalokāntasakalajayapradāya jayākhyabrahmadvārapālamūrtaye ca). Cg glosses the second term as "he who provides both victory and auspiciousness (jayabhadrayoḥ pradātre)." Cm suggests, "he who extends auspiciousness and the conquest of disease and sin on the part of his worshipers (upāsakānāṃ rogapāpādijayaṃ bhadraṃ kalyānāṃ ca prayacchatīti jayabhadraḥ). Ck and Ct, as their second interpretation, suggest that Jayabhadra is the name of a second gatekeeper of Brahmā. According to them, Jaya and Jayabhadra were forced by a curse to take lower births in the forms of Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa, respectively (jayabhadrākhyadvitīyadvārapālamūrtaye ca . . . imāv eva śāpavaśato 'vatīrṇau rāvaṇakumbhakarṇau).

[22]"to the swift one" sāraṅgāya: The term is highly polysemic, having at least thirty meanings, referring to various animals, plants, deities, instruments, etc. Its basic meaning seems to be "spotted or variegated." Commentators vary considerably in their understanding of the term. We follow Cg and the first interpretation of Cm, who, more out of consistency than conviction, take the reference to be to the movement of the sun. Cg bases his interpretation on the purāṇic statement that the sun traverses the distance of two thousand yojanas in the space of a half second. (sāraṃ śīghraṃ gacchatīti sāraṅgas tasmai. ekena nimiṣārdhena dvisahasrayojanaṃ gacchatīti purāṇaprasiddhiḥ.) This interpretation is also followed by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 307). Ct and Cm (fourth alternative) take the term to refer to him who is to be realized by means of the sacred syllable om (sāraṃ praṇavas tatpratipādyāya—so Ct). This interpretation is followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1808), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 307), and, in a footnote, Dutt (1893, p. 1472). Pagani (1999, p. 1156), alone among the translators, renders the term literally as "moucheté."

[23]"who is the lord of Brahmā, Lord Śiva, and the imperishable Viṣṇu" brahmeśānācyuteśāya: Literally, "to the lord of Brahmā, Īśāna, and Acyuta." Commentators agree that, by the mention of the names of the divinities of the trimūrti, their stereotypical functions, viz., creation, destruction, and preservation, respectively, are intended.

[24]"the bringer of the thaw" himaghnāya: Literally, "the destroyer of the snow."

[25]"to Viśvakarman, the maker of all things" viśvakarmaṇe: Literally, "to Viśvakarman."

[26]"to Agni" vahnaye: Literally, "to fire (vahni)." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cm (as an alternative) read instead haraye, "to Hari." Normally, this is an epithet of Viṣṇu, but it also applies to other deities, here, of course, specifically of the sun.

[27]"the eye of all the worlds" lokasākṣiṇe: Literally, "to the witness of the worlds."

[28]"and then creates it anew . . . he dries up, scorches, and inundates the world" sṛjate punaḥ / pāyaty eṣa tapaty eṣa varṣaty eṣa: Literally, "he creates again . . . he desiccates (lit., causes to drink up), burns, and showers." The reference here is to the common vedic observation that the sun draws up the waters with his rays and returns them in the form of rain. D9–11,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read srjati prabhuḥ, "the lord creates," for srjate punaḥ, "he creates again."

[29]"he" eṣaḥ: Note that the narrative has switched back to the third person. See note 17 above. According to Cg, the previous verse marks the end of the teaching of the Ādityahṛdaya per se, but Agastya continues here to praise the divinity who is addressed in that hymn (evam ādityahṛdayam upadiśya punar api tatpratipādyadevatāṃ stauti).

[30]"He is the agnihotra sacrifice as well as the reward of those who perform it." eṣa caivāgnihotraṃ ca phalaṃ caivāgnihotriṇām: Literally, "He is the agnihotra and the fruit of the agnihotrins." The agnihotra is an oblation to agni consisting of milk, oil (ghee), and sour gruel. Ct, who also offers an esoteric meaning of this phrase, notes that the reward of the sacrificers consists of the attainment of heaven and that the sense is that Āditya provides it (svargāpavargarūpaṃ phalaṃ tat pradaś ca).

[31]"He is all the vedas" vedāś ca: Literally, "and the vedas." D9–11,M1–3, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead devāś ca, "[He is all] the gods as well."

[32]"He, Lord Ravi, is everything." sarva eṣa raviḥ prabhuḥ: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead sarveṣu paramaprabhuḥ [D10—paramaḥ prabhuḥ], "He is the Supreme Lord in all [worlds]."

[33]"lost in the wilderness" kāntāreṣu: Literally, "in the forests."

[34]"so long as he praises the sun" enam . . . kīrtayan: Literally, "praising him." The idea, of course, is that one should recite the Ādityahṛdaya in times of trouble.

[35]"this hymn" etat: Literally, "this."

[36]"three times" triguṇitam: We agree with Ck, Ct, and Cr, who understand the term adverbially to mean "thrice" (saṃjātatriguṇaṃ yathā tathā japtvā—so Ck and Ct; trivāram—so Cr). Dutt (1893, p. 1473), Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 350), and Pagani (1999, p. 1157) all take the term adjectivally to indicate that the hymn is replete with the three guṇas, or "virtues." We find this interpretation unpersuasive. See note 41 below.

[37]"you will be victorious" vijayiṣyasi: D5–7,9–11,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the third person singular vijayiṣyati, "he will be victorious."

[38]"great-armed warrior" mahābāho: Literally, "O great-armed one."

[39]"you shall slay" vadhiṣyasi: D7 and the texts and printed editions of Cr read instead jayiṣyasi, "you shall conquer." Dutt (1893, p. 1473), Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 350), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 307), and Pagani (1999, p. 1157) all appear to translate this variant, despite the fact that D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the variant jahiṣyasi, "you shall abandon." However, Cr, who reads the variant jayiṣyasi, glosses, haniṣyasi, "you shall kill."

[40]"free from care" naṣṭaśokaḥ: Literally, "whose grief was destroyed." According to Ct and Ck, Rāma's grief consists of his anxiety with regard to Rāvaṇa (naṣṭo rāvaṇaviṣayacintārūpaśoko yasya saḥ). For these two commentators, the reference would be to what they see as Rāma's anxiety or feigned anxiety in line 1. See note 1 above.

[41]"and intoning that hymn" japtvā tu: Literally, "but having intoned or muttered." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead japtvedam, "having intoned this." D7,G2, and the text of Cr read instead japtvā triḥ, "having intoned thrice." See note 36 above.

[42]"the mighty warrior" vīryavān: Literally, "the mighty one."

[43]"his eyes fixed on Rāvaṇa" rāvaṇaṃ prekṣya: Literally, "having seen Rāvaṇa."

[44]"forth to battle" yuddhāya: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead jayārtham, "for the sake of victory."

[45]"Exerting himself to the utmost" sarvayatnena mahatā: Literally, "with great and total effort."

[46]"determined" dhṛtaḥ: D9–11 and the texts and printed edition of Ct read instead vṛtaḥ. This is apparently translated only by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1809), which renders, "He stood vowed to kill."

[47]The meter of the last four lines is puṣpitāgrā.

Sarga 94

Before verse 1, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of seven lines [3031*]: "Then, in great excitement, Rāvaṇa's charioteer drove Rāvaṇa's chariot swiftly forward. It was a crusher of hostile armies, and, with its lofty banners, it looked like the heavenly city of the gandharvas.[1] It was yoked to the finest horses,[2] which were harnessed with trappings of gold. It was filled with instruments of war and garlanded with flags and banners. It brought destruction to the forces of one's enemy and delight to one's own. As the charioteer drove that chariot onward,[3] it made the earth rumble, and it seemed to swallow up the sky.[1–7]"

[1]"the heavenly city of the gandharvas" gandharvanagara-: Literally, "the city of the gandharvas." Several of the commentators note that the comparison is based on the wonderful appearance of the chariot. Cg quotes [Varāha]mihira, who describes the wonders of the celestial city of the gandharvas.

[2]"to the finest horses" paramasampannair vājibhiḥ: Literally, "with horses endowed with excellence." The compound seems elliptical and the commentators attempt to remedy this by explaining that the horses are endowed with all the best qualities of chariot-horses, such as speed, and so on (paramai rathavahanocitāśvaguṇair javādibhiḥ saṃpannaiḥ—so Ct and Ck; Cr similarly).

[3]"Rāvaṇa's charioteer drove Rāvaṇa's chariot . . . the charioteer drove that chariot onward" sa rathaṃ sārathiḥ . . . rāvaṇasya ratham . . . codayāmāsa sārathiḥ: Literally, "the charioteer, the chariot . . . the charioteer urged on Rāvaṇa's chariot." The seven lines (three and one-half ślokas) constitute a single sentence in the original. For this reason, the repetition of the words ratha, "chariot," and sārathi, "charioteer," in lines 1 and 7 has attracted the attention of the commentators. Ct, Cm, and Cg excuse the redundancy on the grounds that so many adjectives (modifying the chariot) intervene between the statement of the subject and object in line 1 and the verb in line 7 that the author has had to repeat the two lines for the sake of recalling the subject and object (dvitīyarathasārathiśabdāv anekaviśeṣaṇavyavadhānāt pūrvoktāvismaraṇāya tadanuvādakāv eva—so Ct). Cs, however, understands that the first set of terms refers to Mātali and Indra's chariot, whereas the second refers to Rāvaṇa's charioteer and chariot. In his opinion, the latter drives Rāvaṇa's chariot toward Rāma's. He understands that if one construes the syntax in this fashion, the efforts [of other commentators] to find a rationale for the repetition of the two words are fruitless (sārathir mātalir yaṃ rathaṃ codayāmāsa taṃ prati rāvaṇasya sārathī rathaṃ pracodāyāmāsety anvayenānayo rathasārathiśabdayoḥ punaruktatābhītyānuvādatāñgīkaraṇaprayāsa ubhayor aphalaḥ).

1–2. "with its great flagstaffs" mahādhvajam: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read the redundant mahāsvanam, "with a loud noise."

"it displayed weapons that were like the weapons of Indra himself" darśitendrāyudhāyudham: Literally, "by which Indra-weapon[like] weapons were displayed." G1,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct (unnoted in the critical apparatus) read āyudhaprabham for āyudhāyudham. The compound would then mean "displaying a radiance like that of Indra's weapons." Cg, who shares the critical reading, offers several additional interpretations. His first is the same as ours. His second is "in which appeared weapons that were like the bows of Indra [rainbows] by virtue of their own extraordinary radiance (svaprabhāviśeṣaviracitendracāpāny āyudhāni yasmin dṛśyante tādṛśam)." Cv understands similarly. Cg's third, and final, interpretation, taking āyudha in the sense of "bow," is "displaying a bow that was equal to the bow of Indra (yadvāyudhaṃ dhanur darśitendradhanustulyadhanuṣkam)."

Following 2ab, Ś2,Ñ,V2,3,B,D1–4,7–13,G1,2, the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr, and the printed editions of KK (in brackets) insert a passage of one line [3032*]: "[the chariot . . . It glowed with a fearsome radiance.] It seemed like a flying palace being drawn[1] through the sky by water-laden storm clouds."

[1]"being drawn" uhyamānam: D9–12 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dīpyamānam, "blazing brightly."

3. "of thousand-eyed Indra" sahasrākṣasya: Literally, "of the thousand-eyed one."

Following 3cd, V2,3,B3,D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of one line [3034*]: "who was swiftly twanging his bow, which was bent like the crescent moon." The critical reading of this line seems contextually inapposite, as the accusative of the participle visphārayantam, "twanging," forces us to understand that it is Mātali who is engaged in this activity. D6,10,11,T2,3,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead visphārayan vai, in which case the agent of the action is Rāma, which seems far better contextually, if not textually. Ñ1 and B2 insert this line following 4ab, where it makes better sense contextually.

4. "on our right flank . . . to kill me" yathāpasavyam . . . hantum ātmānam: Literally, "to the right . . . to kill [one or my]self." The term apasavyam, literally, "not left," is somewhat ambiguous as it can mean both "from or on the right" and "in a contrary manner." Here, as at 6.45.33, the commentators take the term in two opposite senses. The issue has to do with whether a movement is auspicious or inauspicious for the person undertaking it. Under normal circumstances, an auspicious movement is one that keeps the object toward or around which one is moving on one's right (pradakṣiṇa). Moving toward or around something that is on one's left (apradakṣiṇa) is normally considered inauspicious. In the present passage, the interpretation depends on how one understands Rāma's reading of Rāvaṇa's movements. We believe that, in this context, the best interpretation is that of Ck and Ct, who take the term in its normal sense of "to the right." The idea is that Rāvaṇa, in keeping Rāma on his right, is proceeding in what he believes to be an auspicious manner and is thus hoping to achieve his goal of killing him. (apasavyaṃ pradakṣiṇam . . . anena rāvaṇena . . . ātmānaṃ māṃ hantuṃ matiḥ kṛtā. prathamaprādakṣiṇyena rathasaṃcāralakṣaṇasunimittasaṃpādaneneti śeṣaḥ.) Cg and Cr, on the other hand, understand apasavya to mean apradakṣiṇa, or "[a movement] to the left or counterclockwise." Cg argues that the sequence yathāpasavyam should be broken up to read yathā + ā + apasavyam, that is, "in such a way as to be counter [ā] clockwise." Cg then understands that, in proceeding in this fashion, Rāvaṇa is suicidal and therefore determined to kill himself (ātmānam) rather than Rāma. Cg further notes that proceeding from the left is a sign of impending destruction (apasavyatayā gamanaṃ vināśadyotakam ity arthaḥ). Cr introduces a theological note in an effort to represent both interpretations. He argues that Rāvaṇa is proceeding with an intention to kill the Self (ātmānam), that is, the Supreme Spirit (paramātmānam), in other words, Rāma. Moreover, Cr continues, in so acting, Rāvaṇa is determined in effect to bring about his own destruction (apasavyam apradakṣiṇam . . . anena rāvaṇenātmānaṃ paramātmānam api . . . hantuṃ matiḥ kṛtā kiñcātmānaṃ svam eva samare hantuṃ matiḥ kṛtā). Cf. 6.45.33; 6.53.42; and notes. See notes to verses 9 and 15 below.

5. "remain vigilant" apramādam ātiṣṭha: Literally, "stand in such a way as not to be negligent." Cg understands that Mātali is to remain vigilant in regard to keeping Rāvaṇa's chariot on his right, since to approach from the left (as Cg believes Rāvaṇa is doing) is to invite disaster. (tad apasavyagamanasya vināśahetutvād apramādam ātiṣṭhan (v.l.) sāvadhānatām avalambamānaḥ. apasavyatāṃ pariharann ity arthaḥ.) Ct and Ck also understand that Rāma expects Mātali to approach Rāvaṇa from the right (prādakṣiṇyena).

6. "with a steady heart and eye" avyagrahṛdayekṣaṇam: Ct and Ck believe that Rāma is instructing Mātali to keep his mind and eyes focused on [his own] horses (avyagram aśvīyahṛdayekṣaṇam—so Ct).

7. "Indra, the smasher of citadels" puraṃdara-: Literally, "the smasher of citadels."

"I am merely reminding you" smāraye tvām: Literally, "I would cause you to remember." Ck and Ct understand that Rāma is reminding Mātali of his hereditary occupation as a charioteer (sahajaṃ sārathyakarma).

9. "Then, keeping . . . on his right" apasavyaṃ tataḥ kurvan: Literally, "making [the chariot] not left." The commentators, respectively, treat this term as they do at verse 4 above. Cg, in keeping with his earlier interpretation, understands that Mātali is trying to avoid placing his own chariot on [Rāvaṇa's] left, that is, in an inauspicious position or direction (svarathasyāpasavyatāṃ pariharann ity arthaḥ). This interpretation is rendered only by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 309), who translates, "in a counterclockwise movement." See notes to verse 15 below.

"Mātali discomfited him" rāvaṇaṃ vyavadhūnayat: Literally, "he shook or agitated Rāvaṇa." Commentators who share the critical reading, including Cm, Ck, Ct, and Cr (who corrects to the expected vyavādhūnayat), take the verbal root √dhū in its basic sense of "to shake, agitate, disturb," glossing, "he shook (akampayat—Ct, Cr; kampayati sma—Ck; cālayāmāsa—Cm)." All the translations consulted that follow the text of Ct understand the verb to mean "to cover or envelop." D6,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read vyavadhānayat, "he covered." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 309), who reads with Cg, understandably renders, "hid." See note to verse 10 below, where the verb used is avadhūnayat.

"with the dust raised by his own wheels" cakrotkṣiptena rajasā: Literally, "with the dust stirred up by wheels."

10. "red and wide with rage" tāmravisphāritekṣaṇaḥ: Literally, "whose eyes are red and dilated." See notes to 6.19.22–23.

"assailed" avadhūnayat: Cr, as he did in the previous verse, corrects to the expected avādhūnayat. The verb is virtually identical to that used in the previous verse, where translators rendered it variously as "agitated or covered." Most translators understand as we do, with the exception of Dutt (1893, p. 1475), who translates, "covered," apparently in an effort to be consistent with his rendering of the previous verse. Cg, having read avadhānayat in verse 9, is under no pressure to be consistent and glosses, "he struck (prāharat)." See note to verse 9 above.

"who faced him in his chariot" rathapratimukham: We understand the compound, as do Ck and Ct, who gloss, "facing with his chariot (rathena pratimukhaṃ saṃmukhaṃ rathapratimukham—so Ct)." Some translators understand the term to mean that Rāma is facing Rāvaṇa's chariot. This interpretation is also plausible.

11. "endowed with great blazing energy" sumahātejāḥ: Ś2,Ñ1,B1,D1–4,6–11,13,T3,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sumahāvegān, "of tremendous speed or striking force." The variant adjective would refer to the arrows rather than Rāma.

"put patience aside" dhairyaṃ . . . lañghayan: Literally, "jumping over or transgressing patience or fortitude." Given the critical reading, one is obliged to take dhairyam, normally, "courage, fortitude, firmness," in its sense of "patience, passive endurance." The idea is that Rāma, in his fury at Rāvaṇa's attack, abandons his somewhat detached demeanor and throws himself into the battle. Among the translators consulted, only Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 196) shares this reading, rendering, "soverchiando . . . la sua fermezza." Ñ2,B3,D5,10,11,T1,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read lambhayan, "causing to obtain," for the critical edition's lañghayan. Commentators and the translators who follow them understand the verb here in one of two ways. Ck(?) and Ct take the phrase to mean "acquiring courage for battle along with anger (roṣeṇa saha dhairyaṃ yuddhārabhaṭīṃ lambhayan prāpnuvan—so Ct)." Cr glosses "joining (yojayan)" for lambhayan, taking pāda b to mean "joining courage [with anger]."

"of Indra" aindram: Literally, "belonging to Indra." Ct and Cm offer an alternative explanation. Their interpretation is based on a frequently cited notion that the word "indra" is derived from a verbal root $\sqrt{id}$ and that it can be understood in the sense of "supreme lordship." (Cf., for example, Sāyaṇa on ṚV 1.3.4 and Kṛṣṇamitra's commentary to AmaK 1.1.41.) The adjectival derivative aindram would thus mean "belonging to the supreme deity," that is, Rāma. In other words, they understand that Rāma takes up his own bow. (kiṃcaindraṃ pārameśvaram idi pāramaiśvarya ity ukteḥ. nijāyudhaṃ jagrāhety arthaḥ—so Ct.)

14. "Terrifying . . . omens" utpātā dāruṇā: For similar passages listing inauspicious omens, see 6.26.21–30; 6.31.3–12; 6.41.30–34; 6.45.31–37; 6.53.41–45; 6.94.14–27; and notes. See, too, note to 6.4.6.

"They presaged destruction for Rāvaṇa and victory for Rāghava." rāvaṇasya vināśāya rāghavasya jayāya ca: Literally, "[they were] for the destruction of Rāvaṇa and for the victory of Rāghava." V3,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read rāghavasyodayāya, "for the success or prosperity of Rāghava," for rāghavasya jayāya.

15. "It rained blood" vavarṣa rudhiraṃ devaḥ: Literally, "the god rained blood." The god in question, as Cg notes, is Parjanya, the vedic rain god, and some translators, including Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 309) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1811), add either the name Parjanya or "the god of rain." A Sanskrit idiom for "it is raining," is devo varṣati, and we have translated accordingly. Other translators attempt to cope with the phrase variously. Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 309) takes the subject to be "the Gods"; Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 353) uses, simply, "Dieu"; Dutt (1893, p. 1475) translates literally, "the god"; and Pagani (1999, p. 1158) similarly offers, "la divinité." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 197) avoids the problem by taking a rationalist stance and translating, "una nube." See 6.83.33 and note for the identical phrase. For blood raining down, see 6.26.22; 6.31.5; 6.41.33; 6.45.926*–36; 6.83.33; and notes. Cf. note to 6.76.2, 1674*, lines 5–7.

"to the left" apasavyam: This verse lends additional complexity to the discussion of the poet's use of the term, since, in this case, unlike those earlier in the sarga, the movement is unambiguously inauspicious. It seems as if Cg's earlier gloss, apradakṣiṇam (verse 4 above), which he repeats here, must be correct in this context. Ck and Ct, who earlier understood the term to mean pradakṣiṇa, evade the apparent trap by reading the ill-attested (D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck) variant vyapasavyam, literally, "non-non-left." Ct and Ck explain that the term means "moving to the left or in such a way that it is opposite of right (vyapasavyaṃ vigatam apasavyaṃ pradakṣiṇaṃ yathā tathā vāmāvartā ity arthaḥ)." Although we appreciate Cg's consistency in handling the term throughout the sarga, we believe that its inherent ambiguity permits it to be interpreted in opposing senses.

16. "vultures" -gṛdhra-: Ct, Cg, and Cm note that the appearance of these carrion eaters is a sure sign of Rāvaṇa's impending death (anena rāvaṇasyāsannamaraṇatvaṃ sūcitam—so Cg). Cg and Cm quote a text identified as the Śakunārṇava to the effect that vultures circling above someone's house presage his impending demise (tad uktaṃ śakunārṇava āsannamṛtyor nikaṭe caranti gṛdhrādayo mūrdhni gṛhordhvabhāga iti). See, for example, 6.41.31; 6.83.33; and notes.

17. "Laṅkā . . . the very ground" laṅkā . . . vasuṃdharā: The commentators and the translators who follow them are divided as to whether to understand the term vasuṃdharā, "the earth, ground (lit., bearing wealth)," to be a modifier of or in apposition with Laṅkā or, on the other hand, to take the two terms separately, as we have done. The former interpretation is that of Ct and Ck, who regard vasuṃdharā as a term modifying Laṅkā (vasuṃdhareti laṅkāviśeṣaṇam). Cg and Cm, however, take the term to refer to the territory surrounding Laṅkā (laṅkāparyantabhūmiḥ).

"an untimely twilight" saṃdhyayā: Literally, "with twilight." We agree with Ck and Ct that one ought to supply the phrase "even though at the inappropriate time (akāle 'pīti śeṣaḥ)." We know from pāda d that it is daylight and so the sudden twilight is both untimely and eerie.

"as crimson as a japā blossom" japāpuṣpanikāśayā: Literally, "resembling a japā blossoms." Most likely the japā is the deep red Hibiscus rosa-sinensis (L), a plant commonly found throughout India and used in worship, āyurvedic medicine, etc. Cf. Meghadūta 1.36 [paścād uccair bhujataruvanaṃ maṇḍalenābhilīnaḥ sāṃdhyaṃ tejaḥ pratinavajapāpuṣparaktaṃ dadhānaḥ], where Kālidāsa, too, compares twilight to the color of japā flower. See Brockington 1984, p. 106 and Brandis 1873, p. 28.

18. "flew past" saṃpraceruḥ: Literally, "they moved about together." Ś2,Ñ2,V2,3, B2,4,D1–3,8,10–13,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read instead the facilior saṃprapetuḥ, "they fell together."

"accompanied by violent gusts of wind" sanirghātāḥ: The term has various other meanings, several of which could be apposite here. Most translators consulted who share this reading understand the term to refer to the crashing of thunder, but we feel, given the adjective mahāsvanāḥ, "with a loud or thunderous sound," that this interpretation verges on the redundant.

"Then . . . clearly ominous" tadāhitāḥ: Literally, "then not beneficial." Both GPP (6.106.24) and NSP (6.106.24) print tadā hitāḥ, "then beneficial," which is clearly incorrect.

"they plunged" viṣādayantyaḥ: Literally, "[those meteors] causing [the rākṣasas] to despair."

19. "and as the rākṣasas prepared to strike, it seemed as if something held back their arms" rakṣasāṃ ca praharatāṃ gṛhītā iva bāhavaḥ: Literally, "as the rākṣasas were striking, their arms were held back, as it were." Ck and Ct suggest that we supply the phrase "[because they] were paralyzed with fear (bhayāt stabdhā iti śeṣaḥ)."

20. "pallid and bright white" sitāḥ śvetāḥ: Literally, "white, white." The reading, though well attested, is irredeemably awkward and redundant. Commentators who share the reading ignore it. Translators who share it adopt various strategies to cope with this. The simplest one, adopted by Dutt (1893, p. 1476) and Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 309), is simply to collapse the two terms into one, "white," so that there are only three colors of the sunlight. The alternative strategy, which we and Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 353) follow, is to attempt to differentiate the two terms. Roussel thus renders, "pâl, blancs." Pagani (1999, p. 1159) in a variant of this appears to take the two terms as different qualities of the two colors yellow and red (brilliants et clairs). The text of Cg and printed editions of it (VSP and KK 6.108.26) show a variant unattested in the critical apparatus and unnoted in the apparatus of GPP, viz., sitāśvetāḥ, which Cg explains as "white and black or dark (sitā aśvetāś ca)." This variant is rendered in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 310), who renders, "white and dark." Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1811), which reads with the critical edition, and Ct nevertheless translate as does Raghunathan.

"played across Rāvaṇa's body" patitāḥ . . . rāvaṇasyāṅge: Literally, "fell on Rāvaṇa's body." D9–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read the textually and contextually inferior variant agre, "in front of," for aṅge, "on the body."

"like veins of variegated ores on a mountainside" parvatasyeva dhātavaḥ: Literally, "like the ores of a mountain."

21. "shadowed" anugatāḥ: Literally, "followed."

"howled angrily and inauspiciously" praṇeduḥ . . . saṃrabdham aśivam: We follow Cr and Cg, who read the two terms saṃrabdham and aśivam adverbially with the verb praṇeduḥ, "they howled." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 353), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 309) and Pagani (1999, p. 1159), reads the two terms less plausibly as adjectives modifying the word mukham, "face," in pāda c. The howling or shrieking of jackals is a common ill omen in the literature. See 6.22.24; 6.31.7; 6.45.32,34; 6.53.42; 6.83.33; and notes. Cf. 6.41.32 and note.

22. "directly in the face" pratikūlam: Literally, "unfavorably, contrarily." We follow Cg, who glosses, "in his face or facing him (abhimukham)." Cf. 6.4.41 and note.

"blinding him" kurvan dṛṣṭivilopanam: Literally, "making a cutting off of sight."

23. "And yet, there was no rumbling of storm clouds." vinā jaladharasvanam: Literally, "without the sound of water-bearers [i.e., storm clouds]." The idea here is that the thunderbolts come from a cloudless sky, lending an uncanny quality to the event. The reading, nevertheless, is awkward as it is difficult to conceptualize what the sound of the thunderbolts might be in the absence of thunder. D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Cr, and Ck read instead vinā jaladharodayam, "without the arising [i.e., appearance] of clouds," an evident attempt to improve the text.

24. "dust storm" pāṃsuvarṣeṇa: Literally, "by a shower of dust."

25. "In a fearsome assault upon his chariot" kurvantyaḥ kalahaṃ ghoram . . . tadrathaṃ prati: Literally, "making a fierce attack or assault directed toward his chariot." Unlike most translators, we understand the term kalaha in its sense of "battle, warfare" and see the phrase tadrathaṃ prati, "toward his chariot," as the locus, or adhikaraṇa, of the verbal phrase kurvantyaḥ kalaham. Other translators consulted take the term kalaha in its more common sense of "quarrel" and understand the participial phrase to mean that the birds are squabbling among themselves. They therefore understand the phrase tadrathaṃ prati as the locus of the principal verb nipetuḥ, "to descend or fall," in pāda c.

"sārika birds" sārikāḥ: Literally, "sārikas." This bird is generally identified as a type of mynah (Acridotheres tristis). See note to 6.26.29. In a footnote, Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 310) identifies the bird as either Turdas salica or gracula religiosa.

26. "sparks . . . and tears" sphuliṅgāṃś ca . . . aśrūṇi: The weeping of horses is a stereotypical portent of calamity for their master. The fact that the horses additionally emit sparks from their hindquarters is, perhaps, suggestive of the magnitude of the occasion. Cf. 2.53.1 and note. On the weeping of horses, either as an evil omen or a sign of grief, see MBh 4.37.6; 5.141.1; 6.2.33; and 6.3.42, See, too, Buddhacarita 6.53 and Karṇābhāra 11. See, too, 6.26.23; 6.65.18; 6.83.33; and notes.

"so that they poured forth both fire and water equally" mumucuḥ . . . tulyam agniṃ ca vāri ca: The phrase seems slightly enigmatic. Like several other translators, we understand it more or less as does Cg, who explains that in the act of shedding both tears and sparks, the horses are equally emitting both fire and water (evam agniṃ ca vāri ca tulyaṃ yathā bhavati tathā mumucuḥ). Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 198), whose line 6.90.31ab is identical to 25cd, translates similarly. He also, however, provides a footnote (p. 307, n. 86) in which he observes that his commentator (Cl) glosses the phrase tulyam agniṃ ca vāri ca as "water that was equal to fire (agnitulyaṃ vārīty arthaḥ)." Gorresio then notes that, in conformity with this reading, one might translate, "Gocciavano i suoi cavalli acqua pari a fuoco o fervente come fuoco." He further notes that he believes the commentator to be mistaken in this interpretation but that it is grammatically possible. In this case we might understand that the horses are sweating or urinating a fiery fluid.

27. "appeared . . . presaging . . . destruction" vināśāya . . . saṃprajajñire: Literally, "they arose for destruction."

28. Following verse 28, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of two lines [3040*]: "Upon observing those favorable portents presaging Rāghava's victory, he[1] became immensely happy and thought that Rāvaṇa was as good as dead."

[1]"Rāghava's victory, he" rāghavasya jayāya: The verse as represented in the critical edition and in the printed editions of the text of Ct does not specify exactly who the subject of the sentence is. Ct thinks it must be either Lakṣmaṇa or Mātali. His first alternative is followed only in the translation of Dutt (1893, p. 1476). Cr, on the other hand, understands that the subject is the host of gods and other supernatural beings (devādisamūhaḥ) who were said, in verse 13 above, to have assembled to watch the battle. Most translators who follow the text of Ct, however, understand the subject to be Rāghava, i.e., Rāma. Printed editions of Cg and Cm read a variant unattested in the critical apparatus, rāghavaḥ svajayāya, "Rāghava . . . for his own victory," where Rāma is unambiguously the subject. This reading apparently informs the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 310). M1,T1,G1,2 similarly show the variant nominative singular rāghavaḥ.

29. "that augured well for him" ātmagatāni: Literally, "gone to the self," i.e., referring to him. Cr glosses, "reaching or come to him (ātmānaṃ gatāni prāptāni)," while Cg explains, "which had appeared for his sake (ātmārthaṃ prādurbhūtāni)." Cf. note to 6.92.26 above.

"he redoubled his valor in battle" cakāra yuddhe 'bhyadhikaṃ ca vikramam: Literally, "he made increased valor in battle."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 95

1. "great" sumahat: According to Ct, the adjective refers not to the intensity but to the length of the battle, which he notes takes many days (sumahad anekadinavyāpi). This interpretation is followed only by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1812), which renders, "prolonged." On the chronology of the Yuddhakāṇḍa, see Introduction, p. 17, note 1 and note to 6.4.4.

"that terrified all the worlds" sarvalokabhayāvaham: Cr thinks that the battle is terrifying to all beings because victory [for Rāma] is uncertain (vijayasyāniścayāt sarveṣāṃ bhayakārakam).

2. "stood motionless" niśceṣṭaṃ samatiṣṭhata: Commentators offer slightly different reasons for the motionlessness of the troops. Ct, Ck, Cg, and Cm all understand that they are absorbed in watching the battle (tadyuddhadarśanapāravaśyād iti śeṣaḥ—so Ck, Ct). Cr understands that the troops remain motionless but retain their weapons because of the uncertainty of the victory of either combatant (vijayasyāniścayād dhetoḥ).

3. "those two mighty warriors—man and rākṣasa" balavannararākṣasau: Literally, "the powerful man and rākṣasa." Like most commentators and all translators consulted, we understand balavat, "mighty," as an adjective in composition with the dvandva nararākṣasau, i.e., balavantau nararākṣasau. Cg, however, appears to take the word separately, as an adverb in the sense of "exceedingly (atyantam)," which, according to him, modifies vyākṣiptahṛdayāḥ, yielding "their attention exceedingly riveted."

"their attention was riveted" vyākṣiptahṛdayāḥ: Literally, "whose hearts were captivated." We understand the compound as does Cg, who glosses, "their minds focused on watching the battle (yuddhadarśanasaktacittāḥ)." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 355), however, followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 310), takes the verb $vi + \bar{a}\ \sqrt{kṣip}$ in its other sense of "agitated," and understands the compound to mean "le coeur palpitant," echoed by Shastri as "their hearts beating rapidly."

4. "Although their hands were filled with all sorts of weapons" nānāpraharaṇair vyagrair bhujair: As several of the commentators note, we must read the instrumental bhujaiḥ, "with arms or hands," as an adjective, "characterized or marked by arms or hands (bhujair upalakṣitā iti śeṣaḥ—so Ct)." The adjective vyagraiḥ, "occupied, engaged," has been understood variously by the different translators. Grammatically, however, since it must modify bhujaiḥ, there is little scope for interpretation. The most plausible reading, given the semantic range of vyagraiḥ, seems to be the one we have offered. A second possibility, one Cr suggests, is to take nānāpraharaṇaiḥ as a bahuvrīhi modifying bhujaiḥ, "having arms in which there are various weapons," and reading vyagraiḥ, "eager [for battle]," as an independent adjective. This interpretation is clearly followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1812), which renders, "impatient for action"; Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 355), "prêts (à la lutte)"; Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 310), "ready for combat"; and Dutt (1893, p. 1477), "arms uplifted for a fight." The interpretations of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 310), "though their arms had eagerly snatched their weapons," and Pagani (1999, p. 1160), "les bras chargés d'armes diverses," are similar to ours.

"their minds were filled with astonishment" vismitabuddhayaḥ: Literally, "having amazed or astonished minds."

"they stood there, gazing at that battle" tasthuḥ prekṣya ca saṃgrāmam: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read sarvaṃ te for saṃgrāmam, yielding the awkward sense "they stood there watching everything." No translator consulted renders this literally. The texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm (KK,VSP 6.109.4) read sarpantaṃ prekṣya saṃgrāmam for the critical reading, yielding "watching that battle as it moved." This variant is not noted in the critical apparatus. Cm, the only commentator to remark on this reading, glosses, "as it approached (samīpam āgacchantam)." Among the translators, only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 310) follows this reading, rendering, "that fight, which moved to and fro, and came too close to them."

5. "the rākṣasas . . . the monkeys . . . both armies, their eyes wide with astonishment" rakṣasām . . . cāpi vānarāṇām . . . vismitākṣāṇāṃ sainyam: Literally, "the army of the rākṣasas and the monkeys, whose eyes were astonished."

"seemed frozen as if in a painting" citram ivābabhau: Literally, "looked like a painting." We follow Cm and Ct, who understand the simile to be the stereotypical Sanskrit figure for absorbed or astonished immobility (citralikhitam iva). Compare Abhijñānaśākuntalam of Kālidāsa 1.4.1. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 355), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 310) and Pagani (1999, p. 1160), takes the term citram in its adjectival sense of "strange, wonderful," translating, "l'aspect des deux armées était étrange," but, given the context, this is not persuasive.

6. "grimly determined" kṛtabuddhī: Literally, "with their minds made up or determined."

"fixed in their enmity" sthirāmarṣau: We read the compound as a bahuvrīhi, whose literal sense is "whose intolerance or indignation was firm." Several of the translators consulted apparently take it as a dvandva, offering variants on the idea of "steadfast and indignant."

7. "thought . . . realized" iti . . . iti: There is no explicit verb, only the quotation markers.

"I must surely die" martavyam: We agree with Cg, who glosses, "death is inevitable (maraṇam avaśyaṃbhāvīti)." Ct, closely paraphrasing Ck, comments, "one must strike at one's enemy who takes the form of death (mṛtyurūpaśatrau prahartavyam ity artha iti katakaḥ)." All translators consulted, with the exception of Pagani, understand that Rāvaṇa, upon observing the ill omens that have attended his return to the battlefield, is grimly resolved to die fighting. Pagani (1999, p. 1160) understands that Rāvaṇa is still determined to slay Rāma and thus is thinking, "Il faut le tuer."

9. "Indra, smasher of citadels" puraṃdara-: Literally, "the smasher of citadels."

"the chariot-javelin" rathaśaktim: This term, which has bedeviled the minds and exercised the ingenuity of commentators and translators alike on earlier occasions (see 6.33.21; 6.59.13; and notes), continues to present ambiguities here. We have translated in accordance with our understanding of the earlier passages and of the commentaries on them. However, here, apparently because the chariot in question is the great celestial car of the king of the gods, the commentators are more inclined than they were earlier to understand the term śakti in its sense of "power" rather than, or in addition to, its sense of "javelin." Thus, Ct glosses, "rathaśakti means either the supernatural power of the divine chariot or a particular part of the chariot (rathaśaktiṃ divyarathavaibhavaṃ rathāvayavaviśeṣaṃ vā)." Cm, who notes the critical reading as a variant, glosses it exactly as does Ct. Ck and Cr understand the term only in the first of these two senses. Cg has a similar understanding but avoids any specific reference to "wonderful" or "supernatural power," glossing, merely, "the strength of the chariot (rathabalam)." This, in turn, is reminiscent of Cm's principal reading, rathaśaktam, which Cm reads as a pūrvanipāta compound, śaktaratham, "powerful chariot," glossing, "strong or firm chariot (dṛḍharatham)." Although the critical apparatus quotes Cm's variant comments, no manuscript with this reading is attested either there or in the apparatus of KK.

10. "to return blow for blow" kṛtapratikṛtaṃ kartum: Literally, "to make a counteraction to the action." Cr understands that Rāma wishes to cut down Rāvaṇa's flagstaff in retaliation (dhvajacchedanam ity arthaḥ). Compare verse 26 below and notes.

11. "impossible to withstand" asahyam: Literally, "unbearable or unendurable." Cg glosses, "impossible to look upon (durdarśam)."

Following verse 11, D7,9–11, KK (in brackets), and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck insert a passage of one line [3042*]: "Filled with blazing energy, Rāma took aim at the banner and shot his arrow."

12. "came to rest on the ground" jagāma . . . mahīm: Literally, "it went to the earth." Some translators (Raghunathan 1982, vol. 3, p. 311; and Gita Press 1969, vol. 3, p. 1813) understand that the arrow actually enters the ground, a common occurrence in the epic, but this is not explicitly stated here.

13. "seemed to blaze up on the battlefield with a fire born of anger" krodhajenāgninā saṃkhye pradīpta iva cābhavat: Ñ,V2,3,B2–4,D5,6,9–11,T,G2,3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of all southern commentators consulted substitute for 13cd, while D7 inserts after 13, a passage of one line [3045*]: "Seeming to blaze with indignation, he became inflamed with wrath." Given the strength of the textual support for 3045*, one wonders at the critical editors' choice.

14. "In an uncontrollable rage" roṣavaśam āpannaḥ: Literally, "having gone to the control of anger."

"poured forth" vaman: Literally, "vomiting." Cg, the only commentator to remark on the critical reading, takes the verb $\sqrt{vam}$ in its literal sense but reads the phrase as a figurative usage. He glosses, "seemed to be vomiting [a hail of arrows] (vamann iva)." Only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311) renders this reading, translating, "he vomited floods of arrows as it seemed." Ñ2,V1,3,B3,4,D2,3,7,10,11,13,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read vavarṣa ha, "he rained," for [mahad] vaman.

"celestial" divyān: Ñ,V,B2,4,D5,7,9–11,T1,G1,3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead dīptaiḥ, "blazing," which modifies "arrows (śaraiḥ)" in pāda d.

15. "Riddled though they were" te viddhāḥ: Literally, "they, pierced." D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Cr, and Ck read instead te divyāḥ, "those celestial [horses]." Ct puts forth this adjective as the reason for the horses' ability to avoid stumbling and for their invulnerability to Rāvaṇa's weapons (skhalanādyabhāve svasthahṛdayatve ca hetuḥ—divyā iti).

"the tawny steeds" harayaḥ: Cg glosses, "of a tawny or bay color," noting that this term is used because these are, in fact, the horses of Indra [who is well known by the epithet Haryaśva, "he of the tawny steeds"] (harayo haritavarṇā indrāśvatvād iti bhāvaḥ). See note to 6.78.27.

16–17. "Rāvaṇa . . . loosed . . . He also hurled" rāvaṇaḥ . . . mumoca: Literally, "Rāvaṇa released." Verse 17 consists entirely of a list of weapons and other objects hurled by Rāvaṇa. It is therefore necessary, as Cg suggests, to understand that the principal verb of verse 16 also governs these weapons (mumocety anuṣajyate). We have rendered the verb with two different English verbs in order to accommodate the different types of weapons. See notes to verse 18 below.

"mountain peaks, and trees" giriśṛṅgāṇi vṛkṣāṃś ca: It seems unusual for the well-armed warrior Rāvaṇa to be using the crude weapons normally associated with the monkeys. Perhaps this is a sign of his increasing desperation.

18. "His heart and energies unflagging, he continued to loose his arrows by the thousand" sahasraśas tato bāṇān aśrāntahṛdayodyamaḥ: D5,6,T,G3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read these pādas (= cd) after 20cd. This order of the text is represented only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311). Ñ2,V1,2,B2,D9–11,T3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read abhrānta-, "not confused or not swerving," for the critical reading aśrānta-, "unflagging." See notes to verse 19 below.

"he continued to loose . . . he let fly" apātayat: Literally, "he caused to fly or fall." As in the previous verse, we have rendered a single verb in two slightly different senses to accommodate the different weapons employed.

"invested with the power of magical illusion" māyāvihitam: Literally, "furnished with māyā." Cg, Ck, and Ct understand the term to be used here to explain how, apparently, Rāvaṇa is able to shoot such bulky items as maces, mountains, and so forth from his bow (dhanuṣā kathaṃ gadādimocanam ity atrāha māyeti—so Cg). Cg glosses the term as "performed through the use of his power that can create miracles (āścaryakaraśaktikṛtam)."

19. "It was . . . deafening, and consisted of innumerable weapons" tumulam . . . abhavat . . . naikaśastramayam: Literally, "it was tumultuous, consisting of many [lit., not one] weapons."

"unendurable" durdharṣam: V,B3,4,D4–7,9–11,S, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead tadvarṣam, "the hail of those [weapons]" or, reading tad varṣam, "that hail." This provides an explicit and continuing subject for the verbs at least through 20ab. The critical reading, although lacking this substantive, appears to us to assume it in any case.

"it sowed panic everywhere" trāsajananam" Literally, "giving rise to fear."

20. "Missing Rāghava's chariot, it fell upon the monkey host" vimucya rāghavarathaṃ samantād vānare bale: Literally, "having released Rāghava's chariot, from all sides on the monkey army." The line is elliptical and lacks any finite verb. We interpret with the commentators, who understand that Rāvaṇa's missiles, diverted from their intended target, i.e., Rāma's chariot, land unintentionally on the monkey troops. Ct and Cm, for example, explain, "'releasing Rāghava's chariot' means that [the hail of weapons], having been discharged with an excess of rage, overshot Rāma's chariot, its intended target, and fell on the monkey army (rāghavarathaṃ vimucya krodhātiśayena yuktatvāl lakṣyabhūtaṃ rāmaratham atikramya vānare bale 'patat—so Ct)." Cg interprets similarly but understands that Rāvaṇa's arrows miss their targets not because of his excessive rage but because they are diverted by the arrows Rāma discharges in his own great fury. (krodhātiśayena prayuktai rāmaśarair nivāraṇāl lakṣyabhūtaṃ rāghavarathaṃ vimucya vānarabale 'bhavat. tatrāpatad ity arthaḥ.) This interpretation has been followed by all translators consulted, with the exception of Dutt (1893, p. 1478), who understands that Rāvaṇa intentionally diverts his attention from Rāma's chariot and deliberately fires upon the monkeys.

"with unbroken concentration" niḥsaṅgenāntarātmanā: Literally, "with a detached inner mind." We understand the term here with Cg, who glosses, "characterized by an undistracted mind (avyāsaktena . . . manasopalakṣitaḥ)." The idea here is that Rāvaṇa, undeterred by his failure to destroy Rāma's horses and chariot, continues to fight on with great concentration. This interpretation has been followed in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311). Ct, Ck, Cm, and Cr, however, all take the term niḥsaṅgena to mean that Rāvaṇa has given up all hope of life (prāṇāśāsaṅgarahitena [antarātmanā]—so Ct, Ck, and Cm).

"continued to loose his arrows" mumoca ca: Literally, "and he released." No explicit object for the verb is provided, so, like Cg, who adds the word "arrows (bāṇān)," we have supplied the ellipsis.

"he quickly filled the entire atmosphere with his shafts" sāyakair antarikṣaṃ ca cakārāśu nirantaram: Literally, "and with arrows, he quickly made the atmosphere so that it had no gaps." Ñ2,V1,2,B3,D2,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read cakāra sunirantaram for cakārāśu nirantaram, yielding the sense "he made the atmosphere so that it was completely without gaps."

21. "exert himself with such concentration" vyāyacchamānam . . . tatparam: Literally, "striving . . . intent on that." We follow Cg's interpretation of these two terms, which, according to this reading, continue the representation, in verse 20, of Rāvaṇa shooting with fierce concentration. This interpretation is also followed by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311). Cg comments, " 'vyāyacchamānam' means 'making effort,' while 'tatparam' means 'intent on battle.' (vyāyacchamānaṃ vyāyacchantaṃ yatnaṃ kurvantaṃ. raṇe tatparaṃ saktam.)" Ct and Cm understand the participle vyāyacchamānam to mean "setting in motion (pravartayantam)," no doubt an elliptical reference to the hail of arrows, etc., mentioned in the previous verses. This idea is expressed by Cr, who glosses, "scattering (vistārayantam)." He further sees an explicit, if elliptical, object in the form of the sequence tat param. For Cr, this is a reference to "that intense or unequaled shower [of weapons] (paraṃ tad varṣaṇam)." Ck and Ct, however, take the phrase tatparam adverbially in the sense of "after that (tadanantaram)."

"smiled faintly" prahasann iva: Literally, "laughing softly or smiling gently." Cg construes the phrase adverbially with the finite verb saṃdadhe, "he nocked," and as having the sense "effortlessly (anāyāsena)." This, in turn, is rendered by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311) as "playfully."

22. "hundreds of thousands" śatasahasraśaḥ: D7–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead śataśo 'tha sahasraśaḥ, "by the hundred and by the thousand." The critical reading, too, could be rendered similarly. Indeed, Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 200) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 311), both of whom share the critical reading, do so. We, however, prefer our reading in that it appropriately magnifies Rāma's supernatural martial skills, which he deploys in this ultimate battle.

Following verse 22, D7,G1, and KK (in brackets, following 6.109.23) insert a passage of one line [3049*]: "With their torrents of arrows, those two seemed to leave no room for air in the sky." No translation consulted renders this verse. However, the line is a close variant of 25cd. See notes to verse 25 below.

23. "by the two warriors" tābhyām: Literally, "by those two."

"it looked as if there were a second shining sky composed entirely of arrows" śarabaddham ivābhāti dvitīyaṃ bhāsvadambaram: Literally, "there appeared, as it were, a second shining sky formed by arrows." We agree with Ct and Cm, who gloss the participle -baddham, normally, "bound," in its sense of "made, fashioned of (-racitam)." The usage is similar to that of the root √bandh in such constructions as setubandha, "construction of the causeway." The idea here is that the heroes shoot their arrows so thickly and rapidly that they create the illusion of a second glowing sky below the real sky.

24. "failed to hit its precise mark, caused excessive damage, or failed to achieve its intended purpose" nānimittaḥ . . . nātibhettā na niṣphalaḥ: Literally, "none was without a target, none pierced excessively, none was fruitless." The precise meanings of and distinctions among these three terms are difficult to ascertain with certainty. If, with Ct, Ck, and Cm and most of the translators consulted, one takes the first term, animittaḥ, to mean that an arrow failed to hit its target (lakṣyam aprāpya vartamānaḥ—so Ct, Ck), then the other two terms, it would seem, become otiose. In order to maintain a meaningful distinction among the terms, we follow the interpretation of Cg, whose gloss on this first term, animittaḥ, is "missing the precise spot on the target (lakṣyaviśeṣoddeśarahitaḥ)." He appears to follow Cv, who glosses, "[striking] another part of the target (lakṣaṇād aparārdhaḥ)." Cr explains the term as "missing its mark by virtue of excessive excitement in battle (yuddhotsāhanimittakatvena nimittarahitaḥ)." Among the commentators, Cv, Cg, Cm, and Cr read the second term, nātibhettā, with the critical edition. Cv and Cg understand the reference to be to an arrow that is shot with excessive force and does too much damage. They gloss, "cutting excessively because of a want of measure [of force] (apekṣitapramāṇād adhikabhettā—so Cg; Cv similarly). Cm understands, "cutting excessively because of striking (praharaṇād adhikabhettā)." Cr similarly glosses, "rending excessively through striking (tāḍanād adhikavidārakaḥ)." G2,M2, and the text of Ck read the variant nātiyatnaḥ, "none had excessive effort," which appears to be a kind of gloss on the reading nātibhettā. Ct notes this variant and quotes Ck's gloss on it: "None had exceeded its effort in order to deflect [an arrow] fired by the enemy. The meaning is that an arrow discharged to deflect [another arrow] did just that. (nātiyatna iti pāṭhe paraprayuktanivāraṇāya yatnātikrānto na. nirvāraṇāya prayukto nivārayaty evety arthaḥ.)" Ś2,Ñ2,V,B2,D1–3,5,6,8–13,T3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nānirbhettā, "not not splitting." The double negative is simplified by Ct, who glosses, "fails to pierce (bhettā na)." See 6.37.11; 6.67.36; 6.93.15; 6.101.36; and notes. See, too, 6.99.24, 3132*, lines 7–8, and n. 4. For the third term, niṣphalaḥ, we follow the gloss of Cv, Cg, and Cm, who understand it to refer to "an arrow that, even though it strikes its target, fails to achieve its purpose (lakṣye patito 'pi prayojanākārī)."

Following 24ab, D5,6,7,9–11,S, insert a passage of one line [3050*]: "[Their arrows], striking one another, fell to the earth."

25. "The two heroes" tau: Literally, "those two."

"With their torrents of arrows" śaraughaiḥ: D9–11,G3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead śarair ghoraiḥ, "with fearsome arrows."

"they seemed to leave no room even for air in the sky" cakratuḥ . . . nirucchvāsam ivāmbaram: Literally, "those two seemed to make the sky airless." The idea is that they filled up the sky with their arrows, leaving no room for air. For nirucchvāsam, "airless, breathless," Ct and Cm gloss, "without a space (nīrandhram)," while Cg, more specifically, glosses, "without space for air or breath (ucchvāsāvakāśarahitam)." Cg wants to take the expression literally rather than figuratively, noting that the word iva, normally a particle expressing comparison or a figurative usage, is here merely ornamental (ivaśabdo vākyālaṃkāre). Compare the similar figure at 3049* (see note 22 above).

Following verse 25, D7,T1,G1, and KK (in brackets, 6.109.27) insert a passage of two lines [3051*]: "Although they stared unblinkingly, neither the monkeys and rākṣasas, standing on the ground, nor the gods and dānavas, hovering in the air,[1] could perceive the slightest gap."

[1]"hovering in the air" svasthaiḥ: Literally, "independent, contented." This reading, found in both the critical edition and KK, makes little sense in this context. Given the fact that the gods, etc., are being contrasted with the monkeys and rākṣasas, who are standing on the ground, we believe that both editions have mistaken the correct reading, khasthaiḥ, and we have translated accordingly.

26. "Rāvaṇa's horses . . . Rāma's" rāvaṇasya hayān . . . hayān rāmasya: Literally, "Rāvaṇa's horses . . . Rāma's horses." Cg, evidently reluctant to think of these great warriors simply targeting each other's steeds, takes the term to refer more broadly to the entire equipage, including the charioteers, etc. (haya ivānyatrāpi sārathyādau jaghnatur ity arthaḥ).

"trading blow and counterblow" kṛtānukṛtakāriṇau: Literally, "effecting action and following action." Compare verse 10 and notes above.

Following verse 26, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of six lines [3053*]: "Supremely enraged, the two engaged in an unparalleled battle. Tumultuous and hair-raising, the fight continued for some time.[1][1–2] And so, on the battlefield, those two immensely powerful warriors, Rāvaṇa and the elder brother of Lakṣmaṇa, fought on[2] with their sharp arrows.[3][3–4] For the lord of the rākṣasas remained furious with that foremost of the Raghus for having cut down his flagstaff.[4][5–6]"

Southern manuscripts and editions of Cg, Cv, and Cm, who read lines 3053*, end the sarga following 3053*, line 6, while the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct continue the sarga with no break following 3053*, line 2. See notes to the opening of sarga 96.

[1]"for some time" muhūrtam: We believe the term should be taken here in its common sense of an indeterminate period of time. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 356), however, followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1161), understands line 2 to mean that the battle became tumultuous within the space of a moment. He renders, "En un moment, la lutte devint effroyable . . ."

[2]"fought on" prayudhymānau: Literally, "fighting on." The verse has no finite verb, and we have translated the participle as if it were one.

[3]Lines 3–6 are omitted from the printed editions of Ct. GPP, however, in keeping with its effort to represent Cg and Cr as well as Ct, includes the verse in brackets between verses 6.107.28 and 29, assigning it no number of its own. In a footnote, GPP indicates that the verse is additional in the texts of Cg and Cr. The critical apparatus does not note the absence of the verse from the texts or printed editions of Ct.

[4]The meter of lines 3–6 is vaṃśasthavila.

Southern manuscripts and editions of Cg, Cv, and Cm, who read lines 3053*, end the sarga following 3053*, line 6, while the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct continue the sarga with no break following 3053*, line 2. See notes to the opening of sarga 96

Sarga 96

Like the critical edition, the overwhelming majority of manuscripts mark a sarga boundary at or shortly after verse 6.95.26, as various recensions and subrecensions insert one or more verses at that point (3051*, 3052* and/or 3053*). A sarga break, however, is not found in the texts and printed editions of Ct, which continue the sarga through to the end of the critical edition's sarga 96. Translations that follow the text of Ct show no sarga break at this point. Dutt (1893, p. 1479), who closely follows the text of Ct and frequently cites him in his notes, however, includes 3053* in his translation and begins a new sarga (his section CIX) immediately after it. Compare notes to verse 4 below. Shastri (1959, vol. 3, pp. 311–12) similarly and unexpectedly breaks the sarga and inserts 3053*.

With reference to 3053*, lines 3–6 (see notes to 6.95.26), found in manuscripts and printed editions of Cg (= VSP 6.109.28–29 and KK 6.109.29–30), Ck, quoted in the critical edition in the apparatus to 6.96.1, notes that some texts interpolate these verses and then insert a sarga break. He argues that this is incorrect, because the topic of the preceding sarga, viz., the tumultuous battle, continues unabated. He further notes that one does not see a sarga break in a number of manuscripts. (tumulaṃ romaharṣaṇam ity anantaraṃ prayudhyamānāv ity ādikaṃ ślokaṃ kṛtvātra sargaṃ vicchindanti puraḥ. paścāt tumulayuddhatvaṃ tv ekaprakāra(karaṇa?)tvāc ca nātra yujyate padacchedaḥ. kvacid anavacchedaś ca dṛśyate.) Cm and Ct paraphrase and expand Ck's comments. Cm's and Ct's comments may be found in the critical edition in the apparatus to 3053*. Cm's remarks are found in VSP in parentheses following his comments after VSP 6.109.29. Ct's remarks are found in GPP and NSP at his comments to 6.107.29. Of particular interest here is that, once again, Cm explicitly quotes Ck. This naturally leads us to seriously question the current, generally accepted scholarly consensus that Cm preceded Ck by at least a century. See Lefeber 1994 (Introduction to the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa), pp. 17–28 and see Introduction, pp. 105–107. See note to 6.78.19, where Cm again quotes Ck.

1. "watched . . . as Rāma and Rāvaṇa" rāmarāvaṇau . . . dadṛśuḥ: Literally, "they watched Rāma and Rāvaṇa."

"with amazement in their hearts" vismitenāntarātmanā: Literally, "with an astonished inner faculty."

"in this fashion" tathā: D6,T2,G,M, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cg read instead tadā, "then." Cg glosses this reading as "at the time of [the appearance of] the omens (tadā utpātakāle)." Cf. 6.4.6 and note.

2. "the two splendid chariot-warriors" tayos tau syandanottamau: Literally, "those two splendid chariots of those two." To avoid ascribing, as some translators do, intentionality to the inanimate chariots, we agree with Cg and Cs, who understand the term syandana, "chariot," here to refer to chariot-warriors, thus making Rāma and Rāvaṇa the subject of the verse. Cg, referring to passage 3054*, which ascribes anger to the chariots, remarks: "The anger and so on of the chariots is through the instrumentality of the chariot-warriors (rathayoḥ krodhādikaṃ rathikadvārā)." Cs proposes two interpretive strategies. The first is to read the verse as containing an implicit relative clause, such that it could be interpreted to mean "The syntax is: The splendid chariots of those two [Rāma and Rāvaṇa], who, enraged with each other and intent on slaying each other, pressed each other hard in battle (yau parasparam abhikruddhau parasparavadhe yuktau samare 'rdayantau rāmarāvaṇau tayoḥ syandanottamāv ity anvayaḥ)." Cs proposes, as an alternative, that we understand the term "chariot" here to refer, by secondary usage, to the chariot-warriors. He supports this by citing the well-known example, "the beds are crying," where the word "beds" stands for the children occupying them (mañcāḥ krośantītivad gauṇo vā prayogaḥ). A number of northern manuscripts as well as the printed edition of Gorresio (6.92.2b), perhaps in an effort to gloss this awkward reading, substitute saṃsthitau rathayos tadā, "then, standing in their chariots," for the critical reading. See note to verse 5 below.

Following 2ab, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3054*]: "Enraged at each other and charging toward each other . . ."

3. "Their charioteers . . . the movements exemplary of their skill as drivers" sūtau sārathyajāṃ gatim: Literally, "the two charioteers . . . movement produced from charioteership." The commentators gloss the term sārathyam with "extraordinary skill (atinaipuṇyam—Cr)" or "the work of a charioteer (sārathikarma—Cg)." Ct and Cm understand, "arising out of (or taking the form of—Cm) the charioteers' art or skill (sūtakarmanaipuṇyajām [-rūpām—Cm])." D6,7,9,T1,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Cm, and Cr read sūta- in place of sūtau, which yields the compound sūtasārathyajām, whose sense is "arising from the charioteer's art of the charioteers." Since this variant removes the charioteers as the subject of the sentence, translations that follow these texts generally are forced to take Rāma and Rāvaṇa as the subjects.

"driving in circles and in straight lines, advancing and retreating" maṇḍalāni ca vīthīś ca gatapratyāgatāni ca: Literally, "circles, lines, goings and comings." These are apparently technical terms associated with the art of chariot warfare. See Hopkins 1889, p. 197. Compare MBh 7.18.6, where the terms maṇḍalāni and gatapratyāgatāni are used similarly.

4. "at tremendous speed" gativegaṃ samāpannau: Literally, "attaining speed of movement." Dutt (1893, p. 1479), alone among the translators consulted, fails to render this phrase, substituting instead "and influenced by illusions." This would appear to reflect the readings of B2 and B4, which read, respectively, māyāvaśa-samāpannaiḥ and māyābalasamāpannaiḥ, "endowed with the power of magical illusion." This, in turn, raises an interesting question as to exactly why Dutt, who normally follows the southern recension and the text of Ct, should have included this reading. Compare the opening note above as to Dutt's treatment of the sarga break between the critical edition's *sarga*s 95 and 96.

5. "their splendid chariots" tayos tau syandanottamau: See note to verse 2 above.

6. "Then" tadā: Ñ1,D1–3,6,12,13,T3,M, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead tathā, "in this fashion."

7. "their yoke poles and battle standards brushed each other and their horses stood face to face" dhuraṃ dhureṇa . . . vaktraṃ vaktreṇa vājinām / patākāś ca patākābhiḥ sameyuḥ: Literally, "yoke came together with yoke, of the horses, face with face, and banners with banners." We agree with Cr's interpretation of the term dhura as "yoke pole (yugandharam)," since these projecting parts of the chariots would be more likely to touch each other as the vehicles stand head to head.

8. "fiery steeds" dīptān hayān: Literally, "glowing or blazing horses." The term is, perhaps, a bit odd when applied to horses, but it can mean "excited." Several of the translators who render this reading offer such adjectives as "spirited, ardent, etc." It should be kept in mind, however, that Rāvaṇa's horses were said to be emitting blazing sparks from their hindquarters at 6.94.26 (ad loc. and notes) as one of the evil portents confronting Rāvaṇa. So it is possible that we are meant to take the adjective literally here. Ś2,Ñ2,V1,3,B,D1–3,6,8,12,13,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Gorresio, and Lahore read instead the instrumental plural dīptaiḥ, which, more conventionally, modifies Rāma's arrows. Since Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 312) ignores the adjective entirely, this variant is rendered only in the translation of Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 201).

9. "The night-roaming rākṣasa" niśācaraḥ: Literally, "the night-roaming one," Ñ1,D4,7,9–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead daśānanaḥ, "the ten-faced one."

10. "seemed unaffected" jagāma na vikāram: Literally, "he did not go to transformation." Cg understands the term vikāra in its sense of "a change in facial expression indicating pain (vedanāsūcakamukhavikāram)." This interpretation appears to have informed Raghunathan's (1982, vol. 3, p. 312) translation, "he neither lost countenance."

"showed no signs of pain" na cāpi vyathito 'bhavat: Literally, "nor was he pained or injured."

11. "the night-roaming rākṣasa" niśācaraḥ: Literally, "the night-roaming one." D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead daśānanaḥ, "the ten-faced one."

"of Indra, wielder of the vajra" vajrahastasya: Literally, "of the one who has the vajra in his hand."

"roared with the crash of thunderbolts" vajrapātasamasvanān: Literally, "with the sound equal to the fall of the thunderbolt." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vajrasārasamasvanān, "with a sound that was equal to the best of thunderbolts or a powerful thunderbolt."

12. "caused neither . . . nor" na . . . pradaduḥ: Literally, "they did not give." According to Ct, Rāvaṇa's arrows are unable to injure Mātali for two reasons, one supernatural the other physical. Ct notes that Mātali cannot be injured since he is a divinity and therefore possessed of divine powers. He also remarks that arrows fired by Rāvaṇa as his chariot is being drawn away lack the ability to penetrate. (devatvena divyaśaktimattvāt. apasarpaṇakāle rāvaṇena prakṣiptānām ativedhasāmarthyāyogāc ca.) Cs claims, however, that Mātali's immunity derives not from any innate supernatural power but from the presence of Rāma (śrīrāmasānnidhyāt). Cs first quotes Ct and then goes on, as he often does, to ridicule his argument, saying that, since Rāvaṇa was granted the wealth of Indra and the other gods, how great could his charioteer (Mātali) be? He regards Ct's interpretation as an example of the popular saying intended to indicate someone's utter stupidity, "Having listened to the entire Rāmāyaṇa, one asks, 'Who is Sītā to Rāma?' (yat tu nāgojibhaṭṭena . . . vyākhyātaṃ tad yadendrādīnāṃ daśānanadattā vittā tadā kiyān ayaṃ yanteti vṛtte sati samagrarāmāyaṇaṃ śrutvāpi sītā rāmasya kiṃ bhāvinīty ābhāṇakam anukaroti)." This is a favorite proverb of Cs. Cf. note to 6.71.12.

"distraction" saṃmoham: Literally, "confusion, bewilderment."

13. "at that . . . as . . . never" tayā . . . na tathā: Literally, "by that . . . not thus." We follow the interpretation of Cg, Cm, and Ct (who reads yathā, "in such a way," for tayā, "by that"). Cr, alone among the commentators, understands that Rāma is not angered by either the attack on Mātali or himself but, nonetheless, drives back his foe with his weapons (mātales tayā dharṣaṇayātmanaś ca dharṣaṇayā [misprinted as ṣarṣaṇayā in GPP] na kruddho 'pi rāghavaḥ śarajālena ripuṃ vimukhaṃ cakāra). Pagani (1999, p. 1161), alone among the translators, appears to read ca for na, and thus understands that Rāma is, in fact, outraged by both of the attacks. She translates, "Furieux de cet outrage fait á Mātali et á lui-même."

"made his enemy recoil" cakāra . . . vimukhaṃ ripum: Literally, "he made his enemy one whose face was averted."

14. Following verse 14, D5–7,9–11,T,G3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read 6.96.29 followed by 3071*, line 1, for the first time. See notes to verse 29 below.

15. "by the sounds of maces, cudgels, and iron clubs" gadānāṃ musalānāṃ ca parighāṇāṃ ca nisvanaiḥ: Cg remarks that the sounds arise from the great velocity of these weapons (nisvanair vegajair iti śeṣaḥ). It should be noted that there has been no mention of these types of weapons in the duel since 6.95.17. This may have some bearing on the vulgate's sequence of verses mentioned in the note to verse 14 above, where Rāvaṇa deploys such weapons. See verse 29 and notes below.

16. "Since the seas were thrown into turmoil" kṣubdhānāṃ sāgarāṇām: We agree with Cm and Cg in reading the construction as a genitive absolute (kṣubdhānāṃ sāgarāṇāṃ satām—so Cm). Cg glosses the locative absolute for the critical edition's genitive absolute. Ct, however, reads the construction as an elliptical genitive and explains, "the inhabitants of Pātāla, which is the region below the agitated seas, became terrified (kṣubdhānāṃ sāgarāṇām adhodeśavartipātālavāsino vyathitā jātā iti śeṣaḥ)." Cr understands a simple possessive genitive in the sense of "the dānavas and the great serpents of the agitated oceans became terrified (kṣubdhānāṃ sāgarāṇāṃ dānavāḥ pannagāś ca vyathitā babhūvur iti śeṣaḥ)."

18. "were plunged into anxiety, praying" cintām āpedire: Literally, "they attained anxiety or brooding thought." We have supplied the participle "praying" to make it clear that the following verse is the direct speech of the celestial beings. The exact choice of the word "praying" was influenced by the participle japantaḥ, "intoning, muttering, praying," which occurs in 3064*, line 1, immediately following verse 19 in the southern recension. See notes to verse 19 below.

19. Following verse 19, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of six lines [3064*]: "Praying in this fashion, the gods, along with the hosts of seers, then watched that extremely terrifying and hair-raising battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa.[1–2] And the hosts of gandharvas and apsarases watching that incomparable battle cried, 'Only the sky has the appearance of the sky, the ocean alone is comparable to the ocean, and the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa can be compared only to itself.[1]'[3–5] Speaking in this fashion, they watched the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa.[6]"

[1]"Only the sky has the appearance of the sky, the ocean alone is comparable to the ocean, and the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa can be compared only to itself." gaganaṃ gaganākāraṃ sāgaraḥ sāgaropamaḥ / rāmarāvaṇayor yuddhaṃ rāmarāvaṇayor iva //: As noted by a number of commentators, including those who read the variant (see below), and the author of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1816), this is an example of the figure of speech known as ananvayālaṃkāra, in which the upameya, the subject of comparison, is represented as being unique and therefore having no possible upamāna, or standard of comparison, except itself. See Gerow 1971, p. 148. Ct paraphrases Ck, who observes that it is possible to compare the ocean and the sky because they share the qualities of blueness and expansiveness, whereas, in the case of the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, no object of comparison can be stated because of the impossibility of any other such battle. According to Ct, Ck therefore concludes that the figure of speech here is indeed ananvaya. Ct also notes that Ck regards the prior half of the verse as an example of upameyopamā, i.e., a comparison based on the very thing compared (Gerow 1971, p. 171). This last statement is not to be found in our transcription of Ck or in the critical edition's quotation of his commentary. (sāgaraṃ nailyavaipulyādināmbaraprakhyam ākāśatulyam iti vaktuṃ śakyam. evam ambaram api sāgaropamam iti śakyam. rāmarāvaṇayor yuddhaṃ tu tadatiriktatādṛśayuddhāsaṃbhavāt svatulyam ity eva vaktuṃ śakyam. tenānupamatvaṃ phalatīty ananvayo 'trālaṃkāraḥ. pūrvārdhe tūpameyopameti katakaḥ.) D10 and the texts and printed editions of Ct (GPP and NSP 6.107.51cd) read a variant on this popular and often-quoted verse: sāgaraṃ cāmbaraprakhyam ambaraṃ sāgaropamam, "The ocean is like the sky and the sky is similar to the ocean." Dutt (1893, p. 1480), Roussel (1903, vol. 3, pp. 357–58), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 313), and Pagani (1999, p. 1162) all render this very poorly attested reading.

20. "razor-tipped arrow" kṣuram: See note to 6.33.25. Ś2,Ñ2,V2,3,B1,3,D3, 6–11,13,G1,2,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead śaram, "arrow."

"With it, he cut off" acchindat: Literally, "he cut." Commentators correct the verbal form to the regular acchinat.

"Rāvaṇa's . . . head" rāvaṇasya śiraḥ: This verse raises yet again the vexed issue of the number of Rāvaṇa's heads at any given moment. Since, throughout the epic, Rāvaṇa is consistently referred to by epithets such as "ten-headed, ten-necked, etc.," and yet is often described as having only one, commentators have tended to adopt the position that Rāvaṇa shows his terrifying ten-headed form only when engaged in battle. Since here Rāvaṇa is in the greatest and most desperate battle of his life, the use of the singular to describe his head provokes a variety of responses on the part of the commentators. Cg believes firmly that Rāvaṇa has but a single head here, and he bolsters his opinion by quoting a line (App. I, No. 67, line 31 = GPP 6.109.3ab), which represents Rāvaṇa as having only two arms at this particular time. (Rāvaṇa's ten-headed form is normally associated with twenty arms.) (ekavacanāt tadānīṃ rāvaṇa ekaśirā eva yuddham akarod iti gamyate. ata eva vakṣyati vikṣipya dīrghau niśceṣṭau bhujāv añgadabhūṣitāv ity ādinā.) Ck, whom Ct also quotes to this effect, comments that the use of the singular suggests that Rāvaṇa's multiple heads are being cut off one after another, and so he proposes that we supply the word ekaikaśaḥ, "one at a time." Since the subsequent text will show that Rāvaṇa's severed head(s) keep growing back, Ck supports this argument by indicating that, if all his heads were cut off at once, this regrowth would not occur. (ekaikaśa iti śeṣaḥ. sakṛddaśaśiraśchede tu na punaḥ prarohaḥ). Cm and Cs offer a third position. According to them, Rāvaṇa's heads are unambiguously plural. They argue that the singular is used as a collective for a class of similar articles. They support this interpretation by citing a verse that describes Rāvaṇa as having ten faces and twenty arms and, when holding his weapons, is said to resemble Mount Maināka. Cs attempts to reinforce this interpretation by citing a verse he ascribes to "the masters (ācāryāḥ)," and one from the Padmapurāṇa, both of which clearly refer to Rāvaṇa's multiple heads. (śira ekavacanaṃ jātāv ekavacanam atrottaratra ca daśāsyo viṃśati bhujaḥ pragṛhītaśarāsanaḥ / adṛsyata daśagrīvo maināka iva parvataḥ // itīva tasyottamāṅgadaśakaṃ yugapan nyakṛntat. kṛttāni tāni punar eva samutthitānīty ācāryair apy ukteḥ. padmapurāṇe ca daśagrīvasya ciccheda śirāṃsi raghunandanaḥ / samutthitāni bahuśo varadānān mamāmbike // iti.) Cm offers two additional possibilities. The first suggests that the word "head" refers here to multiple heads because Rāvaṇa has those multiple appendages when he is in his battle mode (daśaśiraḥsahitasya yoddhṛtvābhidhānāc cchira ity atra śirāṃsīty uktam). As a final option, Cm proposes that the term refers to Rāvaṇa's principal head (pradhānaśiro vā). Cr, perhaps wisely, avoids taking a stance on this issue. Translators are similarly divided over the number of Rāvaṇa's heads. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 313), no doubt following Cg, translates śiraḥ, "head," as a simple singular as does Dutt (1893, p. 1480). Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1817) understands similarly but adds a footnote, "It seems Rāvaṇa appeared on the battlefield with a single head only during this combat." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 202) also takes the view that Rāvaṇa has only one head. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 358), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 313) and Pagani (1999, p. 1162), understands that Rāma cuts off only one of Rāvaṇa's many heads. Roussel translates, "l'une de ces têtes." For other discussions on the number of Rāvaṇa's heads, see notes to 6.47.106; 6.50.11; 6.90.31; and 6.92.20. See, too, 5.18.13,19; 5.20.24; 5.47.2–14; and notes. Cf. note to 5.20.26 on 518*. Cf., too, 3.30.8.

"majestic" śrīmat: The adjective can be taken either as a separate word to modify śiraḥ, "head," as we have done, or in composition with the compound "with his [glorious and] shining earrings ([śrīmaj]-jvalitakuṇḍalam)" to describe Rāvaṇa's earrings. We feel the former is preferable, because it emphasizes once again the majestic appearance of the rākṣasa lord as described at such passages as 5.47.2–14.

21. "As the three worlds looked on" dṛṣṭaṃ lokais tribhis tadā: Literally, "then [the head] was seen by the three worlds."

"But a new head exactly like it emerged from Rāvaṇa." tasyaiva sadṛśaṃ cānyad rāvaṇsyotthitaṃ śiraḥ: Literally, "And another head of Rāvaṇa similar to that arose."

22. "quick-handed . . . acting quickly, quickly" kṣipraṃ kṣiprahastena . . . kṣiprakāriṇā: The poet seems to enjoy the effect of the repetition.

23. "yet another appeared in its place" punar anyat sma dṛśyate: Literally, "once again, another appeared." D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead punar eva pradṛśyate, "once again [one] appeared."

24. "And so in this way" evam eva: D3,5,7,G2,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cr, Cm, and Cg read instead evam eka[śatam]. This yields the meaning, according to Cg and Cm, "one hundred and one times." Ck provides a devotional interpretation of the scattering of Rāvaṇa's one hundred heads. He claims that, in so doing, Rāma is performing pūjā to the hundred feet of Lord Indra of the hundred sacrifices in the form of the one hundred wheels [of his chariot] with [Rāvaṇa's] one hundred lotuslike heads (śatadhṛticakraśatapadaṃ bhagavataḥ pūjitaṃ rāmeṇa śataśiraḥkamalaiḥ). Ct quotes Ck, although the quotation is somewhat different than the one in our text of Ck. According to Ct, Ck is saying that, with the hundred head-lotuses of Rāvaṇa, Rāma is worshiping the hundred foot-wheels of Sarvatobhadra, the Lord's chariot (evaṃ ca bhagavataḥ sarvatobhadracakrapadaśatam). Cg believes, however, that the multiple decapitations are intended to slake the thirst of Rāma's long-thirsting arrows (punaḥ punaḥ śiraśchedanaṃ ciratṛṣitaśaratṛṣṇānivṛttyartham).

"all exactly alike" tulyavarcasām: We agree with Ck and Ct that the context best supports the meaning of the term varcaḥ as "appearance or form (tulyavarcasāṃ tulyākārāṇāṃ [śirasām])" rather than "splendor or brilliance," which most translators adopt.

"But still, there seemed to be no way to bring about the end of Rāvaṇa's life" na caiva rāvaṇasyānto dṛśyate jīvitakṣaye: Literally, "And yet, no end was visible with respect to the destruction of Rāvaṇa's life." The phrase is somewhat awkward. We follow the interpretation of Ck, Ct, Cg, and Cm, who understand antaḥ, "end," in the sense of "final decision, determination, resolution (niścayaḥ)." Cr, on the other hand, understands that we should read the genitive plural śirasām, "of the heads," from pāda b, in this phrase as well, yielding the sense "in the matter of the destruction of life there appeared to be no end to Rāvaṇa's heads (jīvitakṣaye jīvananivṛt[t]yarthaṃ rāvaṇasya śirasām anto na dṛśyate śirasām ity ubhayānvayi)."

26–27. "These are all the very same arrows . . . with which I killed Mārīca and Khara along with Dūṣaṇa. They are the very ones with which I killed Virādha . . . and Kabandha" mārīco nihato yais tu kharo yais tu sadūṣaṇaḥ / . . . virādhas tu kabandhaḥ . . . / ta ime sāyakāḥ sarve: Literally, "These are all the arrows with which Mārīca was killed and with which Khara, along with Dūṣaṇa, and Virādha and Kabandha [were killed]." Mārīca was killed by Rāma at 3.42.11–21; Khara, at 3.28.25; Dūṣaṇa, at 3.25; Virādha, at 3.3; and Kabandha, at 3.66–68.

"upon which I have always relied in battle" yuddhe pratyayikā mama: Literally, "trustworthy for (lit., of) me in battle." See 6.97.1–16 and notes, especially note to verse 4.

"so ineffectual" mandatejasaḥ: Literally, "whose blazing power is diminished."

Following verse 26, D7,10,11, KK (in brackets), and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of one line [3069*]: "with which I pierced the sāla trees, the mountains,[1] and Vālin,[2] and [with which] I made the ocean tremble.[3]"

[1]"the sālā trees, the mountains" sālā girayaḥ: Rāma pierces the sāla trees and the mountain[s] at 4.12.3.

[2]"Vālin" vālī: Rāma kills Vālin at 4.16.25.

[3]"I made the ocean tremble" kṣubhito 'mbudhiḥ: Rāma causes the ocean to tremble at 6.14.

29. A number of southern manuscripts read verse 29 as well as 3071*, line 1, for the first time following verse 14 above. See notes to that passage.

Following verse 29, Ś2,Ñ,B3 (reads twice),4,D5–11,T,G3,M1–3,5, the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators, and the edition of Gorresio (6.92.33) insert a passage of two lines [3071*]: "Then that tremendous and tumultuous hair-raising battle raged on in the air, on the ground, and then on the mountaintop.[1]"

[1]"in the air, on the ground, and then on the mountaintop" antarikṣe ca bhūmau ca punaś ca girimūrdhani: The commentators are in agreement that the battle rages in all these locations. Some attribute this to the divine capacity of both chariots to go wherever their masters wish (rathayoḥ kāmagatvāt tatra tatra kiyatkālaṃ sthiter iti bhāvaḥ—so Ct). Cg and Cm attribute this to the fierce determination of the combatants (āgrahāt). Several of the commentators note that the last phrase refers explicitly to the summit of Mount Trikūṭa. Only Dutt (1893, p. 1481) among the translators consulted understands that these locales are not the places in which the battle takes place but from which the celestial beings mentioned in verse 30 observe it.

30. "all night long" sarvarātram: Cg and Cm understand the term sarvarātram, literally, "the whole night," to mean "day and night (ahorātram)." Ñ,V1,2,B,D2,3,4,9, 13,T,2,3,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr read sapta-, "seven," for sarva-, "all," which makes the battle continue for a week. Ct reads with the critical edition, as do Cg and Cm, glossing the term as "day and night," since the singular, as he understands it, is used collectively (jātāv ekavacanam). Ct, however, offers a "higher" interpretation, according to which he dissolves the word sarva- into its two syllables, the first, "sa[r]," he notes, is the third consonant of the sibilant class, thus standing for the number 3, while the second syllable "va" is the fourth consonant of the class of semivowels, thus representing the number 4. Combining the two numbers, Ct comes up with an esoteric explanation, whereby the word, sarva-, "all," really means "seven [i.e., 3 + 4]." Thus, according to Ct, Rāma and Rāvaṇa's chariot duel goes on for seven [days and] nights, a fact he claims is supported by similar references in both the Padma- and Kālikāpurāṇas. (jātāv ekavacanam. tenānekāhorātrān ity arthaḥ. vastutaḥ śavarge sakāras tṛtīyas tena traya ucyante. yavarge ca vakāraś caturthas tena catvāra ucyante. militvā saptarātram ity arthaḥ. saptarātram eva ca tayor dvairathaṃ yuddham iti vakṣyamāṇapādmakālikāpurāṇayoḥ spaṣṭam iti dik.) This argument has proved influential, since most of the translations that follow the text of Ct (and Cr) understand that the battle goes on for seven days and nights. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 203), whose text reads "sapta-," naturally translates similarly.

Cm takes exception to the reading saptarātra, which he claims could only meaningfully refer to the duration of the battle prior to the arrival of Agastya (see notes to 6.94.27, App. I, No. 65, esp. line 4). This reading, Cm believes, cannot mean that the duel between Rāma and Rāvaṇa went on for seven days, because that would not be possible and because it is not heard of elsewhere in the Rāmāyaṇa. Therefore, Cm concludes that the correct reading is sarvarātram, which means "a day and a night." (saptarātraṃ mahad yuddham avartateti sambandhaḥ. agastyāgamanāt prāg eva siddhasya yuddhasyāyam anuvādaḥ. asmin pāṭhe saptarātrakṛtarāmarāvaṇayuddhasyāsmin rāmāyaṇe 'śrūyamāṇatvenānupapannatvāc ca sarvarātram avartateti pāṭhaḥ samīcīnaḥ. sarvarātram ahorātram ity arthaḥ.)

Cg expands on Cm's positions. His first alternative is Cm's second, i.e., that the proper reading is sarvarātram in the sense of "a day and a night," and that the reading saptarātram is thus incorrect (apapāṭhaḥ) on the grounds that it would lead to a contradiction of the chronology that will be set forth [at sarga 97.33]. As an alternative, Cg expands on Cm's idea that one can accept the reading saptarātram and understand sarvarātram to be incorrect. Like Cm, he understands that this can only be done if one calculates the number of days in the entire battle. To do this, he then lays out a chronology of the epic story from the time of Hanumān's burning of Laṅkā, which he places on the fourteenth day of the month of Phālguna. He then notes that Rāma reached the shore of the ocean on the full-moon day and lay on his bed of darbha grass on the first, second, and third days of the dark half of the month. The ascent of Mount Suvela is placed on the eighth day of the month and the beginning of the battle on the ninth. With this in mind, Cg argues that the entire war [culminating in the duel between Rāma and Rāvaṇa] took seven days. See notes to 6.4.4. For detailed accounts of Cg's chronology, see notes to 6.48.12; 6.80.55; and 6.97.33. (sarvarātram ahorātram ity arthaḥ. saptarātram ity apapāṭhaḥ. vakṣyamāṇadinasaṃkhyāvirodhāt. yadvā sarvarātram ity apapāṭhaḥ. saptarātram ity eva samyakpāṭhaḥ. phālgunacaturdaśyāṃ hanumatā laṅkādāhaḥ. paurṇamāsyāṃ rāmasya samudratīraprāptiḥ. prathamādvitīyātṛtīyāsu darbhaśayanam. aṣṭamyāṃ suvelārohaṇam. navamyāṃ yuddhārambha iti saptarātraṃ rāmarāvaṇayuddham itīdaṃ cetas tu navame 'hanīty atra vistṛtam.)

31. "continued night and day without stopping for an hour or even a moment" naiva rātriṃ na divasaṃ na muhūrtaṃ na ca kṣaṇam / . . . virāmam upagacchati: Literally, "it did not go to a pause for a night, a day, a muhūrta, or an instant."

Following verse 31, D5–7,10,11,T,G1 (after 28),2 (after 28),3,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of four lines [3074*]: "Then the great driver of the chariot of the foremost of the gods, failing to perceive Rāghava's victory in that battle between those two—the son of Daśaratha and the rākṣasa lord—hurriedly spoke these words to Rāma[1] as he stood on the battlefield.[2]"

The meter is puṣpitāgrā with a hypermetric pāda a.

[1]"great . . . between those two . . . Rāma" tayoḥ . . . mahātmā . . . rāmam: D6,T2,3,M2, 3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg omit the word tayoḥ. M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg likewise substitute the disyllabic word mahān, "great," for the trisyllabic mahātmā, "great or great-minded." D6,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read enam for rāmam. As a result, the verse as it appears in the text of Cg is in a different meter, apparently a type of ardhasamavṛtta, where pādas a and c have eleven syllables each, and b and d each have thirteen.

[2]"as he stood on the battlefield" raṇagata-: Literally, "gone to or located on the battle[field]." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read raṇarata-, "devoted to or delighting in battle."

Sarga 97

1. "Why . . . do you merely match him blow for blow" kim . . . tvam enam anuvartase: Literally, "why do you follow or imitate him?" We follow the interpretation of Cg, who glosses, "you merely use an astra to counter an astra (astrasya pratyastrayogamātraṃ karoṣi)." Ck glosses, "you follow or imitate your opponent (pratibhaṭyam anuruntse)," while Ct similarly understands, "you imitate this dangerous [adversary] (etat pratibhayam anusarasi)." Cm understands the verb anuvartase to mean "you ignore or underrate (upekṣase)." Most translators consulted follow the suggestions of Ct, Ck, and Cg. Dutt (1893, p. 1482 [misprinted as 1481]), however, who apparently misunderstands Ct, renders, "Why dost thou . . . fear him?"

"as if you knew no better" ajānann iva: Literally, "as if not knowing." The phrase is elliptical, and we have chosen to leave it that way in translation. The commentators and some translators offer a variety of suggestions to supply the ellipsis. Cr glosses, "as if not knowing the means to kill [him] (vadhopāyam abuddhyann iva)." Cg glosses, "as if not knowing about the brahmāstra (brahmāstram ajānann iva)." Cs amplifies upon this, supplying the phrase "the fact that Rāvaṇa can be killed by the brahmāstra (rāvaṇasya brahmāstravadhyatām iti śeṣaḥ)." Cs further notes that the expression " 'as if not knowing' suggests Rāma's omniscience (ajānann ivety anena rāmasya sarvajñaṃ [sic] sūcayati)." Translators offer a variety of presumed objects of the participle ajānan, "not knowing." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 359) offers (in parentheses), "tes resources," and in this is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 314), "thine own powers." Pagani (1999, p. 1163) similarly translates, "ton pouvoir." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 314) renders, "what to do." Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1818), apparently following Cg, adds (in parentheses), "how to dispose of him," and Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 203) adds (in italics), "l'esser tuo." Dutt (1893, p. 1482 [misprinted as 1481]), like us, supplies no specific object.

2. "the divinely charged weapon of Grandfather Brahmā" astraṃ paitāmaham: Literally, "the astra of the grandfather."

3–13. "took up a . . . arrow" jagrāha . . . śaram: Verses 3–13 consist of a series of accusative nouns, phrases, and adjectives modifying the arrow. These verses form a single syntactic unit, which we have broken into individual sentences for the sake of readability.

"Presented to him by . . . Agastya, it was a gift of Brahmā" asmai . . . prādād agastyaḥ . . . brahmadattam: Literally, "Agastya gave to him . . . given by Brahmā." Ck, Cr, and Ct specify the history of the divine weapon. According to them, Brahmā gave it to Indra, who, in turn, had Agastya confer it upon Rāma (brahmadattaṃ brahmaṇendrāya dattam. indreṇāgastyadvārā rāmāya dattam). Agastya had given Rāma the weapon at 3.11.29 (ad loc. and note). This is the same arrow with which Rāma kills Khara at 3.29.23–28 (ad loc. and notes). Even though this is the arrow given by Agastya and fashioned by Brahmā for the purpose of destroying Rāvaṇa, and is among those that Rāma has been using in the previous sarga (see 6.96.25–26 and notes), this weapon, fearsome though it is, will not suffice to kill the mighty Rāvaṇa until it is invested with the power of the brahmāstra at verse 14 below. Cf. 2.39.11 and note.

"Pavana resided in its feathers. Agni, the purifier, and Sūrya, bringer of light, were in its arrowhead. Its shaft was made of all of space, and the mountains Meru and Mandara lent it their weight." yasya vājeṣu pavanaḥ phale pāvakabhāskarau / śarīram ākāśamayaṃ gaurave merumandarau //: Literally, "In whose feathers [there was] Pavana, [in whose] arrowhead [there were] Pāvaka and Bhāskara. [Whose] body was made of space. In [whose] weight [were] Meru and Mandara." The commentators note, in general, that the listing of these various divinities is to show that they are the presiding deities of the various parts of the weapon. Ck and Ct attempt to show how each specific presiding divinity lends his own unique power or property to the arrow. Thus, they argue that the suggestion that space, or ākāśa, resides in the arrow's shaft may be interpreted in two different ways. In the first, they derive the term ākāśa from its underlying root √kāś, "to shine," and then take the term to mean "that which shines everywhere." Alternatively, they understand ākāśa to be a kenning for the creator divinity Brahmā, who is "the light of all beings." This latter reference, they argue, suggests the capacity of the weapon to pervade or penetrate everything. These two commentators understand the reference to Pavana to suggest the arrow's capacity for [rapid] motion and take the reference to Pāvaka and the other deities to be to its inability to be withstood. Finally, anticipating the objection that, given the swiftness of the weapon, it must be very light, they refer to the great weight lent to the weapon by the two mighty mountains, Meru and Mandara. (tatra tatra pavanādīnām adhidevatātvenāvasthānaṃ bodhyam. śarīraṃ madhyabhāga ākāśamayam āsamantāt kāśate prakāśata ity ākāśo brahmā bhagavān bhūtākāśo vā. tena vyāptisāmarthyaṃ pavanatvena gatisāmarthyaṃ pāvakādimattvena duḥsahatvaṃ tarhi laghuḥ syāt tatrāha gaurava iti—so Ct.) Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 315), perhaps looking for some parallelism, renders pāvakabhāskarau as "the sun and the moon," a rendering supported by no textual, lexical, or commentarial authority.

"the blazing energy of all the elements" tejasā sarvabhūtānām: Translators are divided as to whether to understand the term sarvabhūtānām as referring to "all creatures," which is the normal interpretation of the sequence sarvāṇi bhūtāni or, as Ck, Cr, and Ct suggest, to the five principal elements of the material creation, earth, etc., i.e., the pañcamahābhūtas. See notes to 6.15.4. Given the context with its emphasis on the elemental power of the weapon, we are inclined to follow Ct and Ck, who are also followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1819) and Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 314). Other translations consulted understand, "all beings" or "all creatures," except for Dutt (1893, p. 1482 [misprinted as 1481]), who translates, "all objects." To be technically precise, Cg, Cm, Ck, and Ct all gloss tejasā, "blazing energy," as "a portion of the strength or energy (sārāṃśena)."

"chariots" ratha-: Ñ2,V1,B2–4,D6,7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead nara-, "men."

"elephants" -nāga-: Dutt (1893, p. 1482 [misprinted as 1481]) chooses the contextually inapposite sense "serpents."

"gateways together with their iron beams" dvārāṇāṃ parighāṇāṃ ca: Literally, "doors and iron beams." We agree with the commentators who gloss dvārāṇām as "gateways or city gates (gopurāṇām)." See notes to 6.47.32; 6.61.39; and 6.62.6. In the context of the smashing of defensive installations, we believe that the term parigha should be taken in its sense of an iron bar or beam used to bar a gate rather than in its sense of an offensive weapon, "iron club or battering ram." Crā, however, takes it in the latter sense, and understands it to be used by metonymy to refer to all weapons (parighāṇām ity etat sarvāyudhānām apy upalakṣaṇam). Only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 315) understands it in the sense of a weapon, translating, "iron club." See notes to 5.3.30.

"with the blood of many different creatures" nānārudhira-: Literally, "with various [kinds of] blood." Cg, alone among the commentators, notes that the blood is "from the piercing of the asuras that were to be killed (vadhyāsurabhedāt)." Several of the translators understand, somewhat similarly, that the reference is to the number rather than the diversity of the weapon's victims. Cr understands, "the blood connected with the piercing of many bodies (nidāritānekaśarīrasambandhiśoṇitaiḥ)."

10. "Hard as adamant" vajrasāram: We follow Cg in taking this term as a reference to the hardness of the arrow rather than to its power, which is alluded to in various other ways. Cg glosses, "equal in hardness to adamant (vajratulyadārḍhyam)." Some translators understand that the weapon is charged with the power of the thunderbolt. Others agree that sāra refers to the arrow's hardness and understand vajra in one of its other senses, either "Indra's weapon, the vajra," or "diamond."

"it was terrifying in every sort of battle" nānāsamitidāruṇam: The term -samiti- is ambiguous and lends itself to a variety of interpretations. We partially follow the interpretation of Cg, who takes the term -samiti- in its sense of "battle," glossing, "[capable of] ending even a treacherous battle (kapaṭayuddhasyāpi nivartakam)." Cr similarly glosses, "of battles (saṃgrāmāṇām)." One could also understand -samiti- in its sense of "gathering, assembly," and understand then that the weapon "terrorizes various hosts." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 359), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 315), as well as Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1819) and Dutt (1893, p. 1482 [misprinted as 1481]), all understand the term in this latter sense. D5,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Ct read dāraṇam, "tearing apart," for dāruṇam, "terrifying." Ck and Ct understand that the compound is a name or epithet given by the Lord [Brahmā] to Rāma's arrow and expressive of its function (nānāsamitidāraṇam ity anvarthaṃ nāma bhagavatkṛtaṃ rāmabāṇasya—so Ct).

"to flocks of vultures and adjutant storks" kaṅkagṛdhrabalānām: V2,B1,D1,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read -bakānām for -balānām, lending the compound the sense "for adjutant storks, vultures, and cranes." Although the critical apparatus claims that Cg reads with the critical edition, both the principal printed editions of Cg's text and commentary, viz., VSP (6.111.11) and KK (6.111.11), show him reading instead -valānām, a term that appears to find no lexical support in the sense of "bird." This term is nonetheless glossed by Cg as "a type of vulture (gṛdhraviśeṣāḥ)." This variant and interpretation appears to underlie Raghunathan's (1982, vol. 3, p. 315) translation, "kites, vultures, and other birds of prey." On kaṅka, see note to 6.35.12 and 6.46.25–28.

14. "in the manner prescribed by the science of archery" vedaproktena vidhinā: Literally, "by the injunction set forth in the veda." Ck and Ct, with whom we agree, understand the term veda here to refer to the dhanurveda, the traditional science of weaponry [literally, "the veda of the bow"] (vedo dhanurvedaḥ). They understand that what is prescribed there are the rules concerning the position of the fist and the eyes, the stance, and the placement of the arrow on the bow (muṣṭidṛṣṭisthitisaṃdhānādīnāṃ vidhir vidhānaṃ mārgaḥ). All translators consulted render, "the veda," "vedas," or "sacred ordinances." Several read the phrase with the gerund abhimantrya, "having consecrated with mantras," understanding that Rāma has consecrated the arrow with mantras as prescribed in the vedas. We believe, however, that the context and the syntax offer much stronger support for the interpretation of Ct and Ck. According to Ck and Ct, the mantra, or formula, with which Rāma consecrates the arrow is the spell governing the divinely charged weapon of Brahmā (brahmāstravidyayā). See, too, note to verse 4 above.

Following verse 14, Ñ,V1,3,B2–4,D4,5,7,9–11,T,G2,3,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3084*]: "As Rāghava was nocking that ultimate arrow, all creatures trembled and the earth shook."

15. "that arrow, which struck at one's vital points" tam śaraṃ marmaghātinam: D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead marmavidāraṇam, "tearing at the vital points."

16. "the vajra hurled by Indra, the vajra wielder" vajra iva . . . vajrabāhuvisarjitaḥ: Literally, "like the vajra released by the vajra-armed one." The phrase is slightly ambiguous, since the epithet vajrabāhu- is susceptible to at least two other interpretations. It could be taken as a simple appositional karmadhāraya in the sense of "that arm that was like adamant" or as a bahuvrīhi in the sense of "whose arms were like adamant," and so stand as an epithet of Rāma. The situation is further complicated by the ambiguity of the term vajra, which can refer to the specific weapon of Indra or to the thunderbolt, both of which can also be viewed as one and the same. An element of the ambiguity is perhaps to be seen in the translation of Pagani (1999, p. 1164), who renders, "comme la foudre, lancé par ce bras foudroyant."

Ñ2,V1,3,B3,D5–7,10,11,T1,G,M1,2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Ct, and Cr read instead vajribāhu-, "the arms of the one possessing the vajra," that is, "the arms of Indra, the possessor of the vajra." This reading eliminates the ambiguity of the critical reading and is rendered by most translations consulted.

"as inescapable as fate" kṛtānta iva cāvāryaḥ: See 6.38.19 and note.

17. "that lethal arrow" śarīrāntakaraḥ śaraḥ: Literally, "the arrow that makes the end of bodies." The phrase is awkward to translate literally. D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the adjective paraḥ, "ultimate, supreme," for śaraḥ, "arrow."

18. "lethal" jīvitāntakaraḥ: Literally, "making the end of life." D2,7,9–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śarīrāntakaraḥ, "making the end of bodies."

19. "dutifully" nibhṛtavat: Literally, "meekly, humbly, or submissively." Cm, Cg, Ct, and Cr, whom we follow, all gloss, "obediently (vinītavat)." Ck alone takes the term in its other senses of "motionless (niścalaḥ)" or "not agitated or disordered (nirākulaḥ)."

"returned" punar āviśat: Literally, "it entered once more." Dutt (1893, p. 1483) remarks, in a footnote to this verse, "In some texts there is 'napunarāviśat' i.e., did not enter the quiver." No mention of such a variant appears in the critical apparatus or in those of KK or Lahore.

20. "struck down so suddenly" hatasyāśu: Translators differ as to how to construe the adverb āśu, "swiftly, suddenly." Most of the translators consulted construe it with the principal finite verb nipapāta, "it slipped, fell," in pāda c. They understand that the bow and arrows fall immediately from Rāvaṇa's hand. This is grammatically possible but, in our opinion, contextually weak. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 316) alone construes the adverb with the present participle bhraśyamānasya, "slipping, falling," in pāda d, translating, "who . . . had quickly forfeited his life."

"as he lay dying" bhraśyamānasya jīvitāt: Literally, "of him who was slipping away from life." B2,3,D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bhraśyamānaś ca, "and who was slipping." This variant, marked "sic" in the critical apparatus, is impossible to construe grammatically. Most translations that follow the text of Ct tend to ignore the variant or even the entire word. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 360) attempts to tackle this variant head on. He does so by removing the phrase entirely from the syntax of his verse 21 and using it as a participial phrase, "Privé de vie," which, through the use of punctuation, he construes with the nominative singular of nairṛtendraḥ, "lord of nairṛtas," in the following verse.

21. "once so fearsome in his power and dazzling in his splendor" bhīmavegaḥ . . . mahādyutiḥ: Literally, "of terrible force or speed . . . of great splendor."

"like Vṛtra struck down by Indra's vajra" vṛtro vajrahato yathā: Literally, "like Vṛtra struck or slain by the vajra." The reference, of course, is to the well-known myth of Indra's slaying of the demon Vṛtra. See notes to 6.55.128 and 6.75.31.

22. "surviving" hataśeṣāḥ: Literally, "the ones remaining from those who were slain."

23. "Meanwhile" ca: Literally, "and."

"armed with trees" drumayodhinaḥ: Literally, "tree-warriors." Readers may recall that the combatants were last mentioned standing wonderstruck, their weapons still in hand (6.95.2).

"that Rāghava was victorious" vijayaṃ rāghavasya ca: Literally, "and the victory of Rāghava." GPP (6.108.24), NSP (6.108.24), and Gita Press (6.108.24) read instead vanarā jitakāśinaḥ, "the monkeys took on a victorious air."

"roared loudly" nardantaḥ: Literally, "roaring." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarvataḥ, "from all sides."

"fell upon the rākṣasas" abhipetus tān: Literally, "they fell upon or attacked them."

24. "jubilant . . . their piteous faces" hṛṣṭaiḥ . . . karuṇaiḥ . . . mukhaiḥ: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read for hṛṣṭaiḥ, "jubilant," bhraṣṭāḥ, "fallen," which must refer to the fleeing rākṣasas. The treatment of this poorly attested variant seems to vary considerably in the translations that render it. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 360) appears to render it as "atterrés." This, in turn, seems to be rendered by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 315) as "in despair." Pagani (1999, p. 1164) seems to straddle the two variants, describing the monkeys as being "en liesse," while also describing the rākṣasas as "accablés." None of these three translations appears to clearly render the phrase karuṇaiḥ . . . mukhaiḥ, "with piteous faces," although it is possible, and in Pagani's case likely, that they translate the phrase with the adjectives just quoted.

"the rākṣasas fled" abhyapatan: Literally, "they fled."

26. "the thirty gods" tridaśa-: Literally, "the thirty."

27. "extraordinary" duravāpā: Literally, "hard or impossible to obtain."

28. "a magnificent shout" vāg agryā: Literally, "preeminent speech or words."

30. "In slaying . . . had fulfilled the wishes" sakāmam . . . cakāra . . . hatvā: Literally, "having slain, he made [them] so that [they] had their desire." The verse is rather ambiguous and can be read in two somewhat different ways. According to the first, which we and the majority of translators consulted have followed, the sense is that the death of Rāvaṇa is something that Sugrīva, etc., desired as well as Rāma, so that, in accomplishing this, Rāma is, at the same time, fulfilling their desires. Moreover, as several of the commentators note, the monkeys directly benefit from the death of Rāvaṇa. Ck and Ct note that, by Rāma's having accomplished his purpose, viz., the killing of Rāvaṇa, the sovereignty of his allies is solidly and permanently established (rāvaṇavadhena rāmakārye siddhe kila teṣāṃ rājyaṃ śāśvataṃ pratiṣṭhitaṃ bhavati). Cg similarly remarks that Aṅgada's desire has been fulfilled, since he, too, sought the death of Rāvaṇa as a recompense [to Rāma] for having made him, like Sugrīva, the heir apparent (sugrīvavadyuvarājatvena pratyupakārāyāṅgadenāpi rāvaṇavadhasya kāṅkṣitatvāt sakāmatvam). The other, slightly less plausible reading, is to take the gerund in a temporal sense, understanding that Rāma first kills Rāvaṇa and then separately rewards his allies. To our knowledge, this interpretation has been followed only by the translator of the Gita Press edition (1969, vol. 3, pp. 1820–21), who renders, "on having dispatched the foremost of the ogres, Śrī Rāma (a scion of Raghu) then fulfilled the desire of Sugrīva, Angada, and Vibhīṣaṇa (by seeing and felicitating them on the fall of Rāvaṇa)."

"immensely powerful" mahābalam: Ñ2,B2,D10,11,T2,3,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vibhīṣaṇam, "[and] Vibhīṣaṇa."

31. "The hosts of the Maruts regained tranquility." prajagmuḥ praśamaṃ marudgaṇāḥ: Literally, "The hosts of Maruts went to calmness." Like several other terms for classes of divinities, the term marut, which originally refers to a class of vedic storm divinities, often represented as the attendants of Indra, can also refer to the gods in general. Moreover, this term, like the names of various vedic divinities, can also refer to a physical or meteorological phenomenon of which the named divinity is regarded as the personification or superintendent. Cg takes the term here in the second sense, glossing, "the hosts of the gods (devagaṇāḥ)." Some translators have followed this interpretation, but since the remainder of the verse refers specifically to natural phenomena, we think that this may not be the best choice. Pagani (1999, p. 1165) alone completely ignores the mythological component, rendering, "la troupe des vents." Cr observes that "tranquility" here is meant "freedom from fear (bhayarāhityam)."

"the winds blew gently" mārutā vavuḥ: Literally, "the winds blew." We follow Cg's and Ct's suggestion on the variant reading na hi for na ca, in supplying the adverb sukham, "softly, pleasantly." Ct's interpretation of the critical reading is that the particle ca, "and," should be taken to suggest that the negative particle that precedes it should apply not only to the verb cakampe, "[the earth] trembled, shook," but equally to the verb vavuḥ, "they blew." In other words, he understands that the winds did not blow. He then argues that we must supply the adjective krūraḥ, "fierce." (mahī na cakampe. māruto na vavau. krūra iti śeṣaḥ.) D5–7,9–11,T1,G2,3,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read the singular māruto vavau, "the wind blew," for the critical edition's plural.

"The earth ceased its trembling" mahī cakampe na: Literally, "The earth did not shake." Cg reminds us that the earth had been undergoing a continual earthquake up until the death of Rāvaṇa, and that, immediately after his fall, the trembling had ceased (rāvaṇavadhaparyantaṃ sakampā sthitā mahī tadvadhānantaraṃ niṣkampābhavad iti cāhuḥ). Cf. 6.94.19 and 6.96.17.

"the sun, the bringer of day, shone with a steady light" sthiraprabhaś cāpy abhavad divākaraḥ: Literally, "the maker of day became one whose radiance was fixed." The dimming of the sun was one of the portents accompanying Rāvaṇa's attack. Ct garners from this piece of natural description the information that Rāvaṇa's death takes place three hours before sunset on the ninth day of the bright fortnight of the month of Āśvina (anenāśvinaśuklanavamyāṃ yāmāvaśeṣadina iti bodhitam). See note to 6.4.4.

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

32. "Rāghava's closest allies . . . him" suhṛdviśeṣāḥ . . . rāghavam: Literally, "the special or particular friends or allies . . . [around] Rāghava." B3,D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read suhṛdviśiṣṭāḥ for suhṛdviśeṣāḥ. We understand this variant to be indistinguishable in meaning from the critical reading. However, it can also, if one takes viśiṣṭa, "particular, special," in its other sense of "characterized by or endowed with," mean "along with [other] allies." This interpretation has been rendered by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1821), which translates, "supplemented by their friends." Even

Cg, who reads with the critical edition, glosses the compound as "Jāmbavān and the rest (jāmbavadādayaḥ)."

"Sugrīva, Vibhīṣaṇa, and the rest" sugrīvavibhīṣaṇādayaḥ: D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead sugrīvavibhīṣaṇāṅgadāḥ, "Sugrīva, Vibhīṣaṇa, and Aṅgada."

"who was so magnificent in battle" raṇe 'bhirāmam: Literally, "delightful in battle." We follow the lead of Ck and Ct, who gloss, "whose valor in the arena of battle is to be honored by all the world (raṇaviṣaye sarvajagatpūjanīyaparākramam)."

"with all due ceremony" vidhinā: Literally, "according to rule or ceremony." Cg understands that the homage was performed in due order [of precedence] (krameṇa).

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

33. "his kinsman and his troops" svajanabala-: Strictly speaking, only Lakṣmaṇa can qualify for the term svajana, "kinsman," here, and we have translated accordingly. This compound can also be interpreted broadly to mean "the army of his own folk," and this interpretation is represented in the translation of Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 361), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 317) and Pagani (1999, p. 1165).

"he looked as resplendent as Indra" rarāja . . . yathendraḥ: D10,11,T2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read babhūva, "he was," for rarāja, "he shone or was resplendent." In addition, these manuscripts (except T2), texts, and editions as well as B2 and B4 read mahendraḥ, "great or mighty Indra," for yathendraḥ, "as or like Indra," thus depriving the simile of a dyotakavācaka, or word of comparison. Translations that follow the text of Ct and render these variants must, nonetheless, treat the simile as if it were complete.

"the thirty gods" tridaśa-: Literally, "the thirty."

The meter is puṣpitāgrā.

At the conclusion of the sarga, Cg, Cm, and Ct offer further comments on the chronology of the epic events. Cg's and Cm's remarks are very brief and to the point. Cg offers two possible alternative dates for the death of Rāvaṇa, both of which contradict Ct's dating at verse 31 above. Whereas Ct places the event on the ninth day of the bright fortnight of Āśvina, Cg believes that it must be placed either on the new-moon day of Phālguna/Caitra or on the auspicious [or bright?] first day of the lunar fortnight in the month of Caitra at dawn on the waning of the new-moon night. He justifies this second argument by quoting verse 6.96.30 above to the effect that the battle went on day and night. (phālgunāmāvāsyāyāṃ rāvaṇavadhaḥ. yadvā caitraśuddhapratipadi śiṣṭāmāvāsyāyāṃ prātaḥkāle rāvaṇavadhaḥ. pūrvaṃ sarvarātram avartata ity ukteḥ.) See, too, 6.48.12; 6.80.55; and 6.96.30. Cm simply notes that Rāvaṇa's death took place on the new-moon day (amāvāsyāyām) [presumably of Phālguna, which immediately precedes the first day of the lunar fortnight of Caitra]. Ct, however, launches into an extensive and massively detailed set of arguments concerning the chronology of the epic events. He rejects the dating favored by Cm and Ck (see note to 6.80.55). Ct understands Cm and Ck as placing the beginning of the battle on the first day of the dark half of Caitra (caitrakṛṣṇapratipadi yuddhārambhaḥ) and the funeral rites of Rāvaṇa on the first day of the bright half of that same month (tacchuklapratipadi rāvaṇasaṃskāraḥ). After a technical discussion of the intercalary days needed to reconcile the solar and lunar calendars, in which Ct alludes to the analogous dating problem of the Pāṇḍavas' exile as discussed in the Mahābhārata, he goes on to cite a variety of sources, including the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, the Kālikāpurāṇa, the Brahmavaivartapurāṇa, and the Āgniveśyarāmāyaṇa, in support of his contention that Rāvaṇa's death takes place on the ninth day of the bright half of the month of Āśvina. Ct rejects the contention raised in some of these texts that differing accounts of the dating, etc., of events in the Rāmāyaṇa are to be attributed to the variations in the unfolding of the narrative as it takes place in different cosmic ages. See note to 6.4.4. On Āgniveśya/Agniveśya, see note 6.4.63 and 6.40.64.

Following sarga 6.97, V2,B1,3,D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of sixty-eight lines (App. I, No. 67, lines 27–94; GPP, NSP, Gita Presss = 6.109; VSP, KK = 6.112). Gorresio's text (= 6.93.10–32) knows the passage with some variation and condensation: "Now, when Vibhīṣaṇa saw his brother lying there, vanquished by Rāma,[1] his heart was overwhelmed by a violent access of grief,[2] and he began to lament [27–28]. 'Valorous and renowned hero, well-trained[3] and skilled in statecraft! How is it that you, who deserve a costly bed, now lie slain on the bare ground, your long arms, adorned with bracelets, flung wide[4] and motionless, your diadem, as radiant as the sun, maker of day, askew.[5][29–32] The warning that I had urged upon you[6] earlier has now proven true,[7] hero, for, in your lust and delusion, you did not heed my words.[33–34] That inevitable outcome[8] to which, out of arrogance, Prahasta, Indrajit, and others, such as the great chariot-warrior Kumbhakarṇa, Atikāya, Narāntaka, and you yourself, paid no heed, has come to pass.[35–37] Gone is the boundary marker[9] for the virtuous! Gone the embodiment of righteousness! Gone is the epitome of might! Gone is the object of all praise![10][38–39] The sun has fallen to the earth, the moon is plunged into darkness, the fire has lost its radiance, and manly action itself has lost all vitality[11] now that this hero, foremost of those who bear weapons, has fallen to the ground.[40–42] Now that the tiger among the rākṣasas lies sleeping, as it were, in the dust, what now remains in this world, stripped of its sole hero?[12][43–44] The mighty tree that was the rākṣasa king—with fortitude for its sprouting leaves, vigorous action[13] for its splendid blooms, asceticism for its strength, and valor for its deep-set roots—has been destroyed in battle by the mighty gale that is Rāghava.[14][45–48] The indomitable bull elephant[15] that was Rāvaṇa—who had blazing energy for his tusks, noble lineage for his backbone, and rage and graciousness for his limbs and trunk—now sleeps on the bare ground, his body ravaged by the lion who is the Ikṣvāku prince.[49–52] The blazing fire that was the rākṣasa—with valor and fortitude for its leaping flames, angry breaths for its smoke, and might for its scorching heat—has now been extinguished in battle by the storm cloud that is Rāma.[53–56] That bull in the form of a rākṣasa, that bull elephant and conqueror of his enemies, who was so indomitable in their destruction[16]—with his fellow rākṣasas[17] for his tail, hump, and horns, and rashness for his ears and eyes[18]—has been slain, struck down by that tiger in the form of the lord of the earth.'[57–60] Rāma then replied to Vibhīṣaṇa, who, overcome with grief, was uttering this speech that was so reasonable and so clear in its sense.[19][61–62] 'This warrior[20] of fierce valor and extraordinarily great energy was not slain in battle without putting up a struggle.[21] He fell fearlessly.[22] [63–64] Those who perish in this fashion, falling on the battlefield in the hopes of success[23] and following the way of the warrior, should not be mourned.[65–66] Now that that wise hero,[24] who had terrified the three worlds and Indra as well in battle, has perished,[25] it is not an occasion for grieving.[67–68] No one has ever been invariably victorious in battle. A hero is either slain by his enemies or slays them in battle.[69–70] For this is the way ordained by the men of old[26] and approved by all warriors: It is certain that a warrior slain in battle is not to be mourned.[71–72] Realizing this certainty and having recourse to the true nature of things, you should, free from anxiety, consider what action is to be taken next.'[73–74] Then Vibhīṣaṇa, consumed with grief, in his concern for his brother's welfare in the next world, replied[27] to the valorous prince, who had spoken those words.[75–76] 'He who had never before been broken in battles with the assembled gods, together with Vāsava, has now been broken in battle upon encountering you, just like the unassailable ocean encountering its shore.[28][77–80] He gave charitably and offered worship appropriately.[29] He enjoyed all pleasures and supported his dependents well. He conferred wealth upon his friends and visited hostility upon his enemies.[81–84] He kindled the sacred fires and practiced profound austerities. He had mastered the vedas and was adept in the performance of vedic rituals. Now, therefore, by your grace, I should like to perform the rites for him who has departed this world.'[85–88] Thus properly addressed by Vibhīṣaṇa with these piteous words,[30] the great son of the king, in a lofty spirit, ordered the rite that conveys one to heaven.[89–92] 'Hostilities cease with death. Our purpose[31] has been accomplished. You may now perform his funeral rites, for as he was to you, so he is to me.'[32][93–94]"

Lines 93–94 = 6.99.39 (= GPP 6.109.25; 6.111.100cd–101ab). See note to 6.99.39.

[1]"vanquished by Rāma" rāmanirjitam: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nirjitaṃ raṇe, "vanquished in battle or on the battlefield."

[2]"a violent access of grief" śokavega-: Literally, "by the force of grief." Cg, alone among the commentators, seeks to explain Vibhīṣaṇa's grieving for the brother who treated him so hatefully. He comments, "Now, seeing that his brother had been slain, Vibhīṣaṇa, unable to endure the violent grief arisen from his natural relationship, laments (atha bhrātṛvadhadarśanena haṭhāt pravṛttaṃ prakṛtisaṃbandhakṛtaṃ śokaṃ soḍhum aśaknuvan vibhīṣaṇo vilapati)."

[3]"well-trained" vinīta: V3,D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead pravīṇa, "competent, able." Ct glosses this as "capable (samartha)."

[4]"flung wide" nikṣipya: Literally, "having thrown down [your arms]."

[5]"askew" apavṛttena: Literally, "reversed, overturned." Ct and Cr understand that Rāvaṇa's diadem has been knocked off by Rāma's arrows (rāmabāṇais tyājitena). Cg, whom we follow, understands that the crown has been slightly dislodged by the force of Rāvaṇa's fall (patanavegād īṣac calitena).

[6]"The warning that I had urged upon you" mayā . . . samīritam: Literally, "uttered by me."

[7]"proven true" samprāptam: Literally, "arrived, come about."

[8]"That inevitable outcome" udarkaḥ: We follow Ct, Ck, and Cr in taking the term in its common meaning of "future consequence (uttarakālikavipākaḥ—so Ct and Ck). Cg understands, "the consequences of the abduction of Sītā (tasya sītāharaṇarūpasyodarkaḥ phalam)." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 317) follows this interpretation, rendering, "the fruit of that transgression." Other translators consulted take the term to refer to Vibhīṣaṇa's advice or counsel.

[9]"the boundary marker" setuḥ: We follow Cg and Cm in taking the term in its sense of "boundary, limit (maryādā)." Most translators consulted take the term in its sense of "rampart or bridge."

[10]"the object of all praise" prastāvānāṃ gatiḥ: Literally, "the goal or recourse of praise." We follow Cg, who glosses, "the object of excellent praise (prakṛṣṭastutīnām . . . viśayaḥ). Cv understands similarly. V1,D10,11,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read suhastānām, "those of good hands," for prastāvānām. The idea seems to be "the refuge of deft-handed warriors" (so Gita Press 1969, vol. 3, p. 1822).

[11]"and manly action itself has lost all vitality" vyavasāyo nirudyamaḥ: Literally, "resolution is without effort." Commentators interpret this variously. Ct, Cm, and Cg understand that, in the absence of a support such as Rāvaṇa, resolution has become inactive (rāvaṇasadṛśāśrayābhāvād vyavasāya utsāhaśaktir nirvyāpāro 'bhūd ity arthaḥ—so Cg). Cr understands that exertion has now become purposeless (utsāhaḥ . . . nirarthakaḥ).

[12]"stripped of its sole hero" hatavīrasya: Literally, "whose hero is slain." D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead gatasattvasya, "whose essence or strength is departed."

[13]"vigorous action" prasabha-: D6,7,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cv, Cg, and Cr read instead prasaha-, "fortitude, endurance." Among the translators, only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 317) reads this variant. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1822) reads with the critical edition but translates, "stubbornness."

[14]The meter of lines 45–60 is upajāti.

[15]"The indomitable bull elephant" gandhahastī: Literally, "the scent-elephant." See note at 5.8.12. This is a technical term for an elephant whose scent inspires fear in other elephants. See notes to 6.15.33, App. I, No. 16, lines 57–69; and 6.4.14. Cv understands, "the principal [elephant] (mukhyaḥ)," while Cg glosses, "rutting elephant (mattagajaḥ)," an interpretation that most translators have followed. See note 16 below.

[16]"that bull elephant and conqueror of his enemies, who was so indomitable in their destruction" parābhijidgandhanagandhahastī: Literally, "the conquering scent-elephant of destruction." See note 15 above. D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead parābhijidgandhanagandhavāhaḥ, lending to the compound the sense "that conquering wind, bearer of scents." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 308) provides a somewhat lengthy discussion of the term gandhahastī and its use in Buddhist texts.

[17]"his fellow rākṣasas" siṃharkṣa-: Literally, "lion-ṛkṣas." The commentators all quote the Nighaṇṭu (Cm, the lexicographer Śāsvata), which cites the term as a synonym for rākṣasa. Cv and Cg, however, offer an alternative explanation, according to which the term refers to the nineteenth lunar asterism also known as Mūlā (or Mūla), which is the nakṣatra of the rākṣasas. Cg quotes the authority on astronomy Kāśyapa in support of this interpretation. Cf. 6.6.46 and note. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1822) provides a note on this word to the same effect. According to Pagani (1999, p. 1674), the term refers to a specific category or type of rākṣasa, which has given Rāvaṇa one of his surnames. She defines this name through a literal reading of the term as "bear-lion." She notes, "Il s'agit d'une catégorie de rākṣasa qui a donné à Rāvaṇa l'un de ses surnoms (et dont le nom signifie 'ours-lion')." She cites no references and it is difficult to determine the basis on which she makes these claims.

[18]"rashness for his ears and eyes" cāpalakarṇacakṣuḥ: Cm, Ct, Ck, and Cr understand cāpala-, "rashness," here as "lapsing from righteousness (dharmebhyaḥ skhalanam—so Cr)." Cg understands, "excessive lust for sense objects (viṣayalaulyam)."

Cs breaks the compound down, understanding Rāvaṇa's auditory rashness as listening to and acting upon things he should not hear, such as Śūrpaṇakhā's complaint. Rāvaṇa's visual transgressions consist in gazing upon things that he should not see, such as the beauty of the wives of others. (karṇayoś cāpalam aśrāvyaśūrpaṇakhādipralapitaśravaṇena tatra cittapraṇidhānam. cakṣusor anavalokanīyaparadārasaundarya darśanam.)

[19]"so reasonable and so clear in its sense" hetumat . . . paridṛṣṭārthaniścayam: Literally, "possessed of reason and having a clear resolution of meaning." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 363), followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1166), understands these terms to apply to the subsequent words of Rāma rather than to the previous speech of Vibhīṣaṇa.

[20]"This warrior" ayam: Literally, "this one."

[21]"without putting up a struggle" niśceṣṭaḥ: Literally, "motionless or inactive." Ck and Ct gloss, "powerless (aśaktaḥ)."

[22]"He fell fearlessly." patito 'yam aśaṅkitaḥ: Literally, "fearless, he fell." The commentators understand that Rāvaṇa had no fear of death (mṛtyuśaṅkārahitaḥ—so Ct, Ck). Cs optionally reads the sequence as patito yamaśaṅkitaḥ, that is, "he whom even Yama, the god of death, feared has fallen."

[23]"success" vṛddhim: Literally, "increase, prosperity." Ct and Ck take the reference to be to victory, etc. (jayādikam), while Cg understands it to be "success in the next world (paralokavṛddhim)."

[24]"that wise hero" yena . . . dhīmatā: Literally, "by that wise one."

[25]"has perished" asmin kālasamāyukte: Literally, "in reference to him who is joined with kāla," i.e., "in reference to him whose time has come."

[26]"by the men of old" pūrvaiḥ: Literally, "by the forefathers." Commentators agree that the reference is to such authorities as Manu.

[27]"in his concern for his brother's welfare in the next world, replied" uvāca . . . bhrātur hitam anantaram: Literally, "he spoke [with regard to] the subsequent welfare of the brother." Since Vibhīṣaṇa's subsequent words concern the funerary rites of Rāvaṇa, we agree with Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 318) in taking anantaram, "next or subsequent," as an adjective modifying hitam, "well-being," in the sense of "welfare in the next world." Most translators consulted, however, take the term adverbially with the verb uvāca, "he spoke," indicating that Vibhīṣaṇa replies immediately.

[28]Lines 77–92 are in the upajāti meter.

[29]"He gave charitably and offered worship appropriately." anena dattāni supūjitāni: Literally, "by him [things] were given and were well-worshiped." The commentators flesh out the elliptical line by adding the words "gifts (dānāni)" and "gurus and gods (gurudaivatāni)" to provide respective objects for the participles. D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read vanīpakeṣu "upon beggars or mendicants," for supūjitāni, "well-worshiped."

[30]"with these piteous words" vākyaiḥ karuṇaiḥ: Only Cg among the commentators seems to notice the apparent contradiction between Vibhīṣaṇa's emotional appeal to be permitted to offer the funeral rites in light of his brother's many virtues and the passage at 6.99.32–33 below, where he expresses a disinclination to so honor his vicious brother. Cg explains the discrepancy by noting that Vibhīṣaṇa speaks in this way because, at this moment, he is overwhelmed by an access of grief, although later on he will state that he does not want to perform Rāvaṇa's funeral rites. (karuṇair ity anena duḥkhātiśayād idānīm evam uktam iti dyotyate. vakṣyati hi nāham asya saṃskāraṃ kariṣyāmīti.) In light of the critical edition, it is clear that this entire passage is a late interpolation added in an attempt to smooth over the raw emotions of the original text by promoting the culturally cherished themes of deference of the junior brother and familial harmony.

[31]"Our purpose" naḥ prayojanam: According to Cg, Rāma's purpose was the recovery of Sītā (prayojanaṃ sītālābharūpam), although later on in the critically established text Rāma will state that his sole purpose was to recover his reputation (6.103.21). In addition, Cg asserts that the syllable of the Gāyatrīmantra is represented here by the enclitic pronoun naḥ (atra śloke na iti gāyatryakṣaram). Cm is more explicit, noting that the twentieth syllable of that mantra (naḥ) corresponds to the twelfth syllable of this verse (naḥ) (gāyatryāḥ viṃśatitamākṣaraṃ maraṇāntāni vairāṇīty asya ślokasya dvādaśākṣareṇa na iti anena saṃgṛhṇāti). See note to 6.1.1.

[32]"for as he was to you, so he is to me" mamāpy eṣa yathā tava: Literally, "just as he is yours, he is also mine." We agree with the commentators, who understand the reference to be to Rāma's holding the deceased in an affectionate fraternal regard, most likely because, as Cg makes clear, Vibhīṣaṇa is Rāma's "brother" so that Vibhīṣaṇa's brother Rāvaṇa is in a similar relation to Rāma. In any case, as Rāma notes, all hostilities end with death. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 363) and Pagani (1999, p. 1167), on the other hand, understand the pronoun eṣaḥ, "he," not to refer to Rāvaṇa but instead to the funeral rite (saṃskāraḥ). They thus understand Rāma to be saying that the rite is as much his responsibility as it is Vibhīṣaṇa's.

Sarga 98

1. "when . . . heard" śrutvā: V2,3,B3,D5–7,12,T3,G3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dṛṣṭvā, "having seen."

2. "Although many tried to restrain them, they rolled in the dust of the earth" vāryamāṇāḥ subahuśo veṣṭantyaḥ kṣitipāṃsuṣu: Literally, "[they] being very frequently prevented, rolling in the dust of the earth." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 364), followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1167), takes the participle vāryamāṇāḥ, "being prevented, held back," in the sense of "covered" and reads the adverb subahuśaḥ, "many times," with the participle veṣṭantyaḥ, "rolling." These translators thus understand that the women roll about so frequently that they become covered with dust. This seems to be a very unnatural reading of the line, but Roussel, as elsewhere (see note to 6.93.13, and note to verse 21 below; cf. note to verse 23 below), may be influenced by Gorresio's text (6.94.2), which reads, bahuśaś ceṣṭamāṇāś ca saṃbaddhāḥ kṣitipāṃsubhiḥ (cf. 3098*), which he translates as "e forte dibattendosi e sordidate dalla polvere della terra" (1858, vol. 10, p. 210). See Introduction, pp. 115–117 and notes to 6.93.13; 6.98.2; and 6.116.11. See, too, verses 21 and 23 below. Cf. 6.3.16.

D4–6,10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read raṇa-, "battlefield," for kṣiti-, "earth." This reading seems textually inappropriate, since the rākṣasa women do not reach the battlefield until verse 3.

5. "they cried" vineduḥ: The verb is somewhat redundant with the participle nardantyaḥ, "shrieking," of pāda c. Ś2,Ñ,V1,B,D1–4,6,8,12,13,T2,3,G2,M1, the text of Cr, and the printed edition Gorresio avoid the redundancy, reading instead na rejuḥ, "they did not shine." V2,3,D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the redundant kareṇvaḥ (GPP kereṇvaḥ [sic]), "elephant cows."

6. "lying slain" nihataṃ bhūmau: Literally, "slain."

9. "Raising her arms" uddhṛtya ca bhujau: Literally, "and lifting two arms." Some translators understand that the woman lifts Rāvaṇa's arms, but this seems less plausible to us.

10. "so that his face was bathed with tears, as is a lotus with dewdrops" snāpayantī mukhaṃ bāṣpais tuṣārair iva paṅkajam: Literally, "[she] bathing the face with tears, as if a lotus with dew." The simile is slightly awkward, as there is no apparent subject for the phrase expressing the similarity. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1825) attempts to complete the simile by adding the subject, translating, "even as nature would cover a lotus with dew-drops." Other translators tend to treat the dewdrops themselves as the subject. One could also understand the verse to indicate that it is the woman's own face that is bathed with tears, but this seems less probable to us.

11. "lying slain" nihatam: Literally, "slain."

"they keened . . . then began to lament" cukruśuḥ . . . paryadevayan: Literally, "they cried out, they lamented." The two verbs overlap semantically, and Cg attempts to distinguish between the actions they describe. He differentiates two modes of lamentation, which he describes, respectively, as nonverbal and verbal. (krośo nirakṣaradhvaniḥ. paridevanaṃ sākṣaraśabdaḥ.)

12–13. "terrorized" vitrāsitaḥ . . . vitrāsitaḥ: Literally, "terrorized . . . terrorized."

"he who robbed King Kubera Vaiśravaṇa of his flying palace Puṣpaka" yena vaiśravaṇo rājā puṣpakeṇa viyojitaḥ: Literally, "he by whom King Vaiśravaṇa was deprived of the Puṣpaka." See notes to 6.7.5 and 6.37.7.

"tremendous" mahat: Literally, "great." Ñ1,D4,7,9–11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead the redundant raṇe, "in battle."

14. "He . . . had much to fear from a mere human" tasyedaṃ mānuṣād bhayam: Literally, "of him this fear [came] from a man."

15. "by a mere human fighting on foot" mānuṣeṇa padātinā: Literally, "by a human foot soldier." The characterization of Rāma as a foot soldier is slightly puzzling, since, in the final duel between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, both combatants fought from their great chariots (see sarga 97). The commentators are silent on this matter. Some translators attempt to rationalize the situation by understanding that the rākṣasīs are referring to the fact that Rāma traveled to Laṅkā on foot and fought most of the battle without the benefit of Indra's chariot. See, for example, Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1825), which translates, "by a mortal come walking (all the way from Ayodhyā)."

16. "some feeble creature" asattvaḥ: Literally, "one of no strength."

17. "Rāvaṇa's women wept copiously" bahudhā rurudus tasya tāḥ striyaḥ: Literally, "those women of his wept copiously." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tasya tā duḥkhitāḥ striyaḥ, "those sorrowful women of his."

18. "Since you consistently refused to heed the words of your friends, who advised you for your own good" aśṛṇvatā tu suhṛdāṃ satataṃ hitavādinām: Literally, "by one not listening to his friends, who speak beneficially." The clause is somewhat elliptical. We follow the advice of the commentators in supplying the term "the words (vākyam)" to construe with the genitive suhṛdām, "of friends." Cv and Cg, however, offer a second alternative, that we read the genitive suhṛdām in the sense of the ablative suhṛdbhyaḥ, giving the sense "not hearing from your friends."

"all of us and you yourself have now been ruined all together" etāḥ samam idānīṃ te vayam ātmā ca pātitāḥ: Literally, "we, [that is] these (feminine) [and] those (masculine), and you yourself, now together have been caused to fall." The exact referent of the pronoun te in pāda c is unclear, and the commentators offer various ways to understand it. We follow Cg and Cm in taking it as a nominative masculine plural, referring, elliptically in the critical reading, to the male rākṣasas who have been slaughtered. Compare verse 22 below. Ck reads te as an instrumental singular, for tvayā, construing it idiomatically with the indeclinable samam in pāda c, yielding the sense of "[we] together or along with you." Ct similarly glosses te with the instrumental singular tvayā but apparently understands it to be the subject of the passive participle pātitāḥ, "caused to fall," in pāda d. Cr understands te as a genitive singular, tava, construing with ātmā, "self," in pāda d, which he understands in its sense of "body (śarīram)," yielding the sense "your [i.e., Rāvaṇa's] body."

It should be kept in mind here that no manuscript collated for the critical edition reads exactly as the critical text does. A number of northern manuscripts—Ś2,B2,D1,3,8,12,13, and the printed editions of Gorresio and Lahore—read aiśvarya-madamattena, "[by you] intoxicated with the arrogance of power" for pāda c, etāḥ samam idānīṃ te. According to this reading, the te in pāda c should be read as suggested by Ct. However, the majority of manuscripts, including the texts of the southern commentators, either substitute for 18cd (Ñ,V,B3,4,D4) or insert after 18ab (B2,D5–7,9–11,T2,3,G,M, and the texts and printed editions of all southern commentators) a passage of one line [3106*] in which an explicit reference is made to the slain rākṣasa warriors: "Sītā was abducted [by you] for [your own] death, and the night-roaming rākṣasas were caused to be slain."

19. "cruelly" dhṛṣṭam: D7,10,11,G3,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead the rather awkward, dṛṣṭam, "was seen." Ct and Cr attempt to explain this term by adding the word phalam, "fruit, consequences," yielding the sense that Rāvaṇa must have foreseen the dire consequence of his actions.

"desiring, it appears, your own destruction" ātmavadhakāṅkṣiṇā: Literally, "[by you] seeking your own death."

20. "this total extermination" mūlaharam: Literally, "root destruction." We understand the term, as does Cr, to mean "extirpation of the race [of the rākṣasas] (vaṃśa-vighātakam)." Cf. 6.36.14–15 and note.

21. "Your brother Vibhīṣaṇa would have had his wish fulfilled" vṛttakāmo bhaved bhrātā: Literally, "the brother would be one whose wish was completed." We agree with the commentators that the brother in question is Vibhīṣaṇa. Cm, Ct, and Cg believe that Vibhīṣaṇa's gratification would have derived from Rāvaṇa's acting on his advice (svavākyakaraṇād iti bhāvaḥ—so Cg). Cr has a similar idea but indicates more explicitly that the reference is to the fulfillment of Vibhīṣaṇa's desire that Sītā be returned as he had requested (svaprārthitasītāpradānaviṣayakābhilāṣaprāptaḥ).

"and Rāma would have become an ally of our House" rāmo mitrakulaṃ bhavet: We read the compound mitrakulam, literally, "friend-family," as a paranipāta compound as suggested by Cm and Cg, that is, as kulamitram, "friend of the family." Ct and Cr gloss, "belonging to the party of our friends or allies (mitrapakṣaḥ)." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 211), who shares our reading, mistakes the compound for a dvandva in the sense of "la tua famiglia e i tuoi amici" and understands that the two terms should be taken, along with Vibhīṣaṇa, to make a list of all those who would be gratified had Rāvaṇa returned Sītā. He thus understands the verb bhavet, "he would be," to apply to all these groups and individuals. Unfortunately, Gorresio appears to have influenced Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 365) in this misreading. Roussel, however, understands -kulam in the sense of "a group," rendering, "tes nombreux amis." Roussel, in turn, has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 319) and Pagani (1999, p. 1168). See note to verse 2 above.

"None of us would have been widowed" vayaṃ cāvidhavāḥ sarvāḥ: Literally, "and we all [would be] non-widows."

"enemies" śatravaḥ: Since the logic of the women's statement would have precluded the possibility of Rāma and the monkeys becoming his enemies, we agree with Cg, who glosses, "the gods, etc. (devādayaḥ)." Pagani (1999, p. 1168), however, seems to ignore the negative particle na in pāda d, understanding that Rāvaṇa's enemies, presumably Rāma and the monkeys, would be satisfied [by the return of Sītā].

22. "at the same time" tulyam: Literally, "equally." We follow Cr and Cg, who understand the term here to mean "simultaneously (yugapat—so Cg)."

"cruel Rāvaṇa, you" tvayā . . . nṛśaṃsena: Literally, "by you, a cruel one."

23. "Nonetheless, it is true" kāmam: We agree with Cv and Cg in reading the term adverbially in its sense of "granted, it is true" rather than, as Cm and most translators have done, in its sense of "according to one's desire." The latter sense would be quite redundant with the term kāmakāraḥ, "voluntary action," in pāda a. Several of the translators understand the term in its nominal sense of "love, passion," which they believe is being represented as something other than the motive for Rāvaṇa's actions. For example, Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 365) translates, "Ce n'est point toute fois ta passion qui est en cause." This is both redundant and grammatically impossible. Ct understands the term to mean "sufficient [cause] (paryāptam)," an interpretation represented only in the translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1826). Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 212), whose rendering may have inspired Roussel here, translates, "Egli è bensi vero . . . che non fu di tanta sciagura cagione efficiente il tuo amore." See note to verse 2 above.

"fate" daivam: This passage renews the poem's debate over the issue of destiny versus free will as the prime mover of events. See Pollock 1986, pp. 33–36. Cs lends a theological interpretation to the passage, understanding that the word "fate (daivam)" refers to Hari (i.e., Viṣṇu), the unseen prime mover [of all things] (adṛṣṭaprerako harir eva). See 6.6.7–8 and notes; and 6.103.5 and notes.

25. "the relentless march of fate" daivagatir . . . udyatā: Literally, "the persevering movement of fate." We understand the adjective udyatā here in the sense Ct proposes: "moving toward fruition (phalonmukhībhūtā)."

"by . . . act of will" kāmena: Literally, "by will or desire."

"by imperious command" ājñayā: Literally, "by an order."

26. "lament, afflicted with grief . . . shrieking like ospreys" vilepuḥ . . . kurarya iva duḥkhārtāḥ: Literally, "they lamented like osprey hens afflicted with grief." The simile is slightly defective, and we have added the word "shrieking" to bring out the force of the common trope in which the wailing of grief-stricken women is likened to the shrill cries of the osprey. Some translations read the adjective "grief-stricken (duḥkhārtāḥ)" with "ospreys (kuraryaḥ)," yielding the sense "like grief-stricken ospreys." But as ospreys are known for their shrieking and not for their grief, we believe that this is uncalled for. Compare 6.23.1–3 and note. On the kurara or kurarī, see, Dave 1985, p. 185 and Fitzgerald 1998. Dutt (1893, p. 1488) renders, "like unto so many she-elephants." Perhaps he mistakenly reads kariṇyaḥ, although no such variant is attested in the critical apparatus.

Sarga 99

1. "Rāvaṇa's . . . seniormost wife, Mandodarī" jyeṣṭhā patnī: Literally, "senior or eldest wife."

2. "Mandodarī" mandodarī: The critical apparatus notes that here and elsewhere some manuscripts show the variant maṇḍodarī. The commentators exert themselves here in an effort to provide an etymology for the queen's name. Their basic argument is that one should understand the name to mean "she whose stomach serves as an ornament, that is, having a slender waist. (maṇḍanabhūtodarī. kṛśodarīty arthaḥ—so Ct.)" Cg accepts this etymology but cites an alternative one, according to which the term maṇḍā refers to a type of large ant so that the name means "she whose stomach or waist is like that of a maṇḍā (maṇḍā pṛthupipīlikā tasyā ivodaraṃ yasyāḥ sā maṇḍodarīty apy āhuḥ)." The idea is similar to that expressed by the English phrase "wasp-waisted."

"her husband, ten-necked Rāvaṇa" daśagrīvam . . . patim: Literally, "the husband, the ten-necked one."

3. "Indra himself, the smasher of citadels" puraṃdaraḥ: Literally, "the smasher of citadels."

4. "the gods on earth" mahīdevāḥ: The term is ambiguous as it is used in the literature to describe both kings and brahmans. Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, glosses, "brahmans (brāhmaṇāḥ)." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mahānto 'pi, "great." This can be interpreted either as a noun in the sense of " the great ones" or as an adjective modifying ṛṣayaḥ, "seers." D7,G1,2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr read instead mahātmānaḥ, "the great or great-souled ones." This variant appears to have been rendered by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 321).

5. "How could this be" kim idam: Literally, "What [is] this?"

"bull among rākṣasas" rākṣasarṣabha: Ś2,B1,D1–3,7–11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead rākṣaseśvara, "O lord of the rākṣasas."

6. "a mere human" mānuṣaḥ: Literally, "a human."

"and whom no one could withstand" aviṣahyam: Literally, "one not to be endured or withstood."

7. "It makes no sense" nopapadyate: Literally, "it is not possible or it does not stand to reason."

"could have slain you in battle" vināśas tava . . . saṃyuge: Literally, "your destruction in battle."

"in realms inaccessible to mere mortals" mānuṣāṇām aviṣaye: Literally, "in the non-range of men." Ct and Ck understand the reference to be to the island of Laṅkā itself (laṅkādvīparūpe deśe). Cg and Cm simply explain that this is a region that humans cannot reach (mānuṣāṇām aprāpyadeśe). The reference, however, may be to Rāvaṇa's ability to travel through the sky, fight the gods in heaven, etc.

8. "that it was, in fact, Rāma who accomplished this feat" etat karma rāmasya: Literally, "this deed [was] Rāma's."

"fully equipped for battle" sarvataḥ samupetasya: Literally, "equipped or endowed in every way." We agree with Cg, Cm, and Cr, who gloss, "you were full of all the instruments of warfare (sarvayuddhopakaraṇaiḥ pūrṇasya tava—so Cg)." Ck and Ct understand, "you who were endowed with victory (jayopetasya tava)."

Following verse 8, various manuscripts and printed editions diverge from the critical edition and from one another, including or omitting certain verses and varying the order in which some verses appear. Three major textual sequences are represented in the printed editions and translations. These are 1) the texts and printed editions associated with the commentaries of Ct, Ck, and Cr (GPP, NSP, and Gita Press); 2) the texts and printed editions associated with the commentaries of Cv, Crā, Cg, and Cm (VSP and KK); and 3) the northern printed editions as represented by Gorresio and Lahore. Translations align themselves as follows: aligned with the text of Ct are Dutt, Roussel, Shastri, Gita Press, and Pagani; aligned with the text of Cg is Raghunathan; and aligned with the texts of the northern recension is Gorresio, who translates his edition, which is most closely aligned with B. Cv and Crā staunchly defend their sequence of verses, stating that all the others are the result of carelessness on the part of the scribes (anyathā pāṭhas tu lekhakapramādakṛtaḥ—so Crā). The order of the verses for Cg (as represented in KK and VSP) is as follows (using the numbering of the critical text): 8, 11, 12, 3113*, 10, 3114* (line 3, omitted from VSP, bracketed in KK), 9, and 13. The order of verses for Ct (as represented in GPP, NSP, and Gita Press) is 8, 10, 3114*, 9, 11, 12, and 13. The order of the verses in Gorresio is 8, 10, 11, 3115*, lines 1–2, 12, 3113*, and 13.

9. "your sensual appetites alone" indriyaiḥ: Literally, "by senses or sense organs."

"they recalled, as it were" smaradbhir iva: Literally, "[by those sense organs] as if remembering." The figure works as a kind of utprekṣā in which the quality of memory is ascribed to the sense organs. The trope also serves as a rebuke to Rāvaṇa for his having let his sensual appetites, specifically his lust for Sītā, lead him to his destruction.

"when, long ago . . . you subjugated your senses" indriyāṇi purā jitvā: The reference, as several commentators note, is to Rāvaṇa's legendary course of asceticism that earned him the boon of invulnerability through which he was able to conquer the three worlds. See 7.10 for the account of Rāvaṇa's asceticism. Cf. 3.30.17, where Rāvaṇa's austerities are also mentioned.

The textual status of this verse is questionable at best. It is not found in Ñ,V,B3,4,D4, or the editions of Gorresio and Lahore. Thus, according to the principles on which the critical edition is based, it should have been relegated to the critical apparatus (Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv). In any case, of those manuscripts that do include the verse, none places it at this point in the text.

10. "Vāsava" vāsavaḥ: Literally, "Vāsava." D7,10,11,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cg read instead kṛtāntaḥ, "fate." Cf. note to 6.39.19.

"some unimaginable magical illusion" māyām . . . apratitarkitām: Our understanding, like that of most of the commentators, is that the illusion is that whereby the divinity has taken on the appearance of Rāma (apekṣitaśarīragrahaṇahetubhūtāṃ kāñcic chaktim—so Cm). Cg, however, believes the reference is to the illusory manifestation of Sītā, who is of immeasurable beauty. (māyāṃ sītārūpām. apratitarkitām aparimeyarūpalāvaṇyām.) The idea is that the divinities create an irresistibly beautiful woman in the form of Sītā to lure Rāvaṇa to his doom. This interpretation is followed only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 321), who renders, "[luring you to your doom] with a vision of ineffable loveliness."

Following verse 10, Ś2,Ñ2,B1,D1–3,8,9,12 continue, while Ñ1,D5,6,T,G3,M1,2,5 insert after verse 10; V,B2–4,D7 insert after verse 11; D4 inserts after line 2 of 3115*; and G1,2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert after verse 12 a passage of two lines [3113*]: "And when the fearsome monkeys built a bridge over the mighty ocean, then I feared in my heart that Rāma was no mere human." Virtually all available manuscripts and printed editions, with the exception of the texts and printed editions of Ct (NSP omits and GPP brackets), include this verse at some point. Textual evidence would support its inclusion in the critical text.

Following verse 10 or 12, D5,6,7 (only lines 1–2),9–11,S insert a passage of eleven lines [3114*]: "Or perhaps, immensely powerful warrior,[1] you were attacked by Vāsava himself. But then again, what power would Vāsava have even to look upon you in battle, since you were of immense power and tremendous might, and were a terrifying foe of the gods.[2][1–3] Clearly, he is the great yogin, the eternal, Supreme Spirit, who has no beginning, middle, or end, who is great and greater than the great.[3][4–5] He is superior to tamas and the other elements of nature.[4] He is the creator, who bears the conch, the discus, and the mace. His chest is marked with the śrīvatsa. His majesty is eternal. He is unconquerable, everlasting, and enduring.[6–7] He is the truly valorous Viṣṇu, who, taking on a human form, is accompanied by all the gods who have become monkeys.[8–9] He, the immensely radiant, incarnate Lord of all the worlds, out of a desire for the well-being of the worlds, has slain you[5] along with your entourage of rākṣasas.[6][10–11]"

[1]"immensely powerful warrior" mahābala: Literally, "O immensely powerful one."

[2]"since you were of immense power and tremendous might, and were a terrifying foe of the gods" mahāvīryaṃ mahāsattvaṃ devaśatruṃ bhayāvaham: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the more or less synonymous mahābalaṃ mahāvīryaṃ devaśatruṃ mahaujasam, "[since you were] of immense strength, immense power, and an immensely mighty enemy of the gods." M3 and the texts of Cg, Crā, and Cv omit line 3. It does not appear in VSP, and Ct's variant of it is found in brackets at KK 6.114.13ef. The verse is not rendered in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 321).

[3]"who is great and greater than the great" mahataḥ paramo mahān: The phrase mahataḥ paramaḥ, "greater than the great," can be understood either in a general sense to allude to the Lord's absolute supremacy or, taking the term mahat as it is used in Sāṃkhya philosophy to refer to the second of the primal evolutes of prakṛti, to indicate that the Lord is greater than, or prior to, material creation. In either case, the tenor of the verse is distinctly upaniṣadic.

[4]"He is superior to tamas and the other elements of nature." tamasaḥ paramaḥ: Literally, "greater than tamas." We agree with the commentators that tamas, the guṇa, or quality, of turbidity or darkness, must stand here for the three guṇas that qualify prakṛti, or the material universe. Cg, for example, glosses tamasaḥ as "the circle of material elements (prākṛtamaṇḍalasya)." According to Ct, the phrase means that the Lord is the one who sets the material universe in motion (prakṛteḥ pravartakaḥ).

[5]"immensely radiant . . . has slain you" hatavāṃs tvāṃ mahādyutiḥ: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead devaśatruṃ bhayāvaham, "[you] a terrifying foe of the gods." In the absence of a verb or a verbal element, Ct is forced, in any case, to supply the form hatavān. "he has slain."

[6]As in the case of the Ādityahṛdaya section (see note 6.93.27, App. I, No. 65), the commentators exercise themselves to analyze the various theological and scriptural implications of the passage.

11. "he killed your brother Khara" kharas tava hato bhrātā: See note to 3.29.23–28.

"it was clear right then that this was no mere human" tadaivāsau na mānuṣaḥ: Literally, "right then he [was] not a human." Ś2,Ñ,V3,B1,D1–3,8–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read tadā rāmaḥ, "then Rāma," for tadaivāsau, "right then he."

12. "entered the city of Laṅkā" laṅkām . . . praviṣṭaḥ: Hanumān first enters Laṅkā at 5.2.47, but the rākṣasas do not become aware of his presence until sarga 40.

Following this verse, the text of Cg inserts 3113* (see note to verse 10 above).

13. "You should make peace" kriyatām avirodhaḥ: Literally, "non-hostility is to be made." As Cr points out, the hostility with Rāma could have been avoided by the return of Sītā (sītāsamarpaṇena virodhābhāvaḥ). The critically established text includes no passage in which Mandodarī actually gives such salutary advice to Rāvaṇa. Her advice to this effect is, however, recorded in a few manuscripts and printed editions (App. I, No. 30, lines 49–98). See notes to 6.51.20, 1114*, n. 1; and 6.46.21, App. I, No. 30.

14. "your life" dehasya: Literally, "of [your] body."

15. "who is superior even to Arundhatī and Rohiṇī" arundhatyā viśiṣṭāṃ tāṃ rohiṇyāś cāpi: Arundhatī, the wife of the great seer Vasiṣṭha, and Rohiṇī, the wife of the moon god, are often held up as shining examples of wifely devotion. Cg notes here that Sītā is superior to them because, although they are notable only for such devotion, she is also the mother [goddess] (mānyām ity anena na kevalam arundhatyādivat pātivratya-mātraṃ kiṃtu mātṛtvaṃ cety ucyate).

Following verse 15, D5–7,9–11,S (M2 lines 1–11,12–13 after 15 and 17, respectively) insert a passage of thirteen lines [3116*]: "Sītā is deeply devoted to her husband and flawless in every limb. Though miserable, she is auspicious, more long-suffering even than the earth, bearer of wealth, and more splendid than Śrī.[1] In abducting her in the desolate wilderness by means of a deception, you have brought destruction upon yourself and your race.[2] Now surely, my lord, without even having consummated your desire through union with Maithilī, you have been consumed by the ascetic power of that woman, so devoted to her husband.[3][1–5] In that you were not burnt up at the very moment that you assaulted that slender-waisted woman, it was only because all the gods themselves, including Indra and led by Agni, feared you.[6–7] Inevitably a person[4] reaps the dread[5] consequences of an evil deed when the time comes. Of this there is no doubt.[8–9] A person who does good obtains excellent rewards; one who does evil reaps only misery.[6] Thus, Vibhīṣaṇa has obtained felicity, while you have come to such an evil end.[10–11] You had many other young women more beautiful than she, but still, in your thrall to Kāma, the disembodied god of love,[7] you did not, in your infatuation, realize this.[12–13]"

[1]"more long-suffering even than the earth, bearer of wealth, and more splendid than Śrī" vasudhāyāś ca vasudhāṃ śriyaḥ śrīm: Literally, "the bearer of wealth of the bearer of wealth and the śrī of Śrī." The idea here, as the commentators point out, is that Sītā is more patient or forbearing than the earth, which is the stereotypical standard for forbearance, and more splendid or venerable than Śrī herself, the exemplar of beauty. Cg takes the reference to the earth, a paragon of forbearance, to suggest that Sītā forbore to burn up Rāvaṇa, which, as a pativratā, or perfectly devoted wife, she could easily have done. See 5.20.20.

[2]"you have brought destruction upon yourself and your race" ātmasvadūṣaṇa: Literally, "O corrupter of one's self and one's own." We follow the commentators in taking -sva-, "one's own," to refer to Rāvaṇa's family. D7,10,11,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead the nominative ātmasvadūṣaṇam. Ct then understands that we need to supply the participle kṛtam, "was made [by you]." He thus understands the phrase to mean: "The destruction of your own family was carried out by you (ātmanaḥ svakulasya nāśanaṃ kṛtam iti śeṣaḥ)."

[3]The syntax of the first five lines is somewhat awkward. There is no clear finite verb until line 5. We have therefore broken the text's lengthy string of accusatives modifying Sītā into a series of shorter predicative sentences.

[4]"a person" kartā: Literally, "an agent."

[5]"dread" ghoram: D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bhartaḥ, "O lord."

[6]"A person who does good obtains excellent rewards; one who does evil reaps only misery." śubhakṛc chubam āpnoti pāpakṛt pāpam aśnute: Literally, "A doer of good obtains good; a doer of evil eats evil." We follow the commentators in taking the second occurrence of pāpam in the sense of "misery, suffering (duḥkham)."

[7]"Kāma, the disembodied god of love" anaṅga-: Literally, "the bodiless one." This is a common epithet of the god of love, deriving from the incineration of his body by Śiva. See 1.22.10–14 and notes (especially note to 1.22.10).

16. "you did not realize" na budhyase: Cr understands that Mandodarī is indicating by her tone of voice that we are to understand the opposite of her clearly stated negative. In other words, he argues, she is saying that, although Rāvaṇa is fully aware of Mandodarī's superiority to Sītā in all respects, he chose the latter with the intention of worshiping [her]. (tvaṃ na budhyase kākvā budhyasa evety arthaḥ. etena pūjābuddhyaiva tasyāḥ svīkāras tvayā kṛta iti sūcitam.) Cf. notes to 5.18.6,16, etc.

17. "has been brought about because of your treatment of Maithilī" maithilīkṛta-lakṣaṇaḥ: Literally, "having action toward Maithilī as its cause or occasion." We understand kṛta in the sense of "action," following Cg's and Cr's interpretation. Cg glosses, " 'action toward Maithilī' means 'bringing Maithilī,' that is, having that itself for its occasion or cause. (maithilyāḥ kṛtaṃ maithilīkṛtam, maithilyānayanam ity arthaḥ. tad eva lakṣaṇaṃ nimittaṃ yasya sa tathā.)" Cr understands, "[caused] by your behavior that was contrary to the wishes of Maithilī (maithilīpsitaviruddhācaraṇena)."

Following 17cd, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M2 (following 3116*),3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert, while Ñ,V,D4,13,M1 substitute, a passage of one line [3118*]: "And you brought this death, the cause of which was Sītā, upon yourself from afar."

19–20. Following verse 20, Ñ,V,B2–4,D4–7,9–11,13,S insert a passage of seventy-five lines [App. I, No. 68]. All translations of the southern recension include the entire passage, while Gorresio inserts only lines 2, 4, 5a, 6b, 7–13, and 50–51: "I seem to have become some other person. Damn the fickle fortune of kings![1] Alas! Your majesty, your youthful face once had a splendid brow, clear complexion, and prominent nose. In loveliness, splendor, and radiance it was the equal, respectively, of the moon, the lotus, and the sun, maker of day. It was rosy,[1] its earrings blazing, and it shone with your lofty diadem.[2–4] In your drinking halls, that face of yours, with its eyes rolling about wildly in intoxication, was so charming with its different garlands and so bright with your lovely smile. How is it, my lord, that it no longer shines so brightly?[5–7] Instead, it is now riddled with Rāma's arrows, red with gouts of blood, spattered with marrow and brains,[2] and soiled with the dust stirred up by the chariots.[3][8–9] Alas, your final state, the bringer of widowhood, has now befallen me, a state[4] that I, foolish as I am, could once never have imagined.[10–11] Thinking, 'My father is the king of the dānavas,[5] my husband the lord of the rākṣasas, and my son the conqueror of Śakra,' I was immensely arrogant.[12–13] It was my unwavering belief that my protectors, who were crushers of their haughty foes[6] and were heroes[7] famed for their strength and manly valor, had nothing to fear from any quarter.[14–15] How is it, bull among rākṣasas,[8] that this unanticipated danger could have come from a mere human to heroes as powerful as all of you?[16–17] Your body, as dark blue as a polished sapphire and as huge as a lofty mountain, once glittered with its bracelets and armlets, garlands, and necklaces of lapis and pearl. It was immensely desirable in the pleasure gardens and fiercely blazing on the battlefields. With the sparkling of its ornaments, it resembled a great storm cloud flashing with lightning. But now this body of yours[9] is covered with innumerable sharp arrows[10] so that it is difficult even to touch and impossible to embrace.[18–23] Indeed, with its arrows deeply lodged in its vital points—severing tendons and ligaments—and set closely together, it looks like a porcupine[11] covered with its quills.[24–25] I see it now, your majesty, fallen on the ground, its complexion the color of blood.[12] Indeed, it looks like a mountain smashed by the blows of a thunderbolt.[26–27] Alas, this dream is, in fact, reality. But how could you have been slain by Rāma? How could you, who were death to even Death himself, have fallen under the power of death?[28–29] My lord was the enjoyer of wealth of all the three worlds and the great bringer of fear to them.[13] He was the conqueror of the world protectors and disturber even of Śaṅkara.[14] Chastiser of the haughty, he manifested great valor. He caused the worlds to tremble and, with his roars, he made all creatures cry out with fear.[15] With his enormous might, he spoke proud words in the presence of his enemies. He was the protector of his troops and dependents and the slayer of warriors of fearsome deeds.[16] He slew dānava lords and the yakṣas by the thousand. He was the lord and a chastiser and the scourge of the nivātakavacas.[17] Destroyer of many sacrifices, he was the guardian of his own people. Breaker of the rules of righteous conduct, he put forth magical illusions in battle. From many different lands,[18] he abducted the daughters of the gods, asuras, and men. Bringer of grief to his enemies' wives, he was the leader of his own people. Guardian of the island of Laṅkā, he performed many fearsome deeds. He bestowed upon us many objects of desire, and he was the foremost of chariot-warriors. How hardhearted I am in that, having seen my lord,[19] who was so powerful, struck down by Rāma, I still live[20] though my beloved has been slain.[30–45] Having slept on costly beds, lord of the rākṣasas, why do you, all red with dust,[21] now sleep here on the bare ground?[46–47] When my son Indrajit was cut down in battle by Lakṣmaṇa, it was a severe blow to me, but now I am devastated.[48–49] Bereft of all my kinsmen[22] and of my protector in you, and so, bereft of all objects of enjoyment, I shall now forever grieve.[50–51] You have today set forth, your majesty, on a long and arduous road.[23] Please take me with you, afflicted with grief as I am, for I cannot live without you.[52–53] Why did you want to go away, leaving hapless me here, miserable, despondent, and lamenting?[24] Why do you not speak to me?[54–55] Are you not angry, my lord, to see me come forth from the city gate unveiled[25] and on foot?[56–57] And look, you who are so fond of your wives, at your other wives, who have all rushed out dropping their veils of modesty. How can you not be angry at seeing them?[58–59] These women,[26] who were your companions in your amorous sports, are now lamenting bitterly, having lost their protector. Why do you not comfort them? Do you no longer care for them?[60–61] It is because you were cursed by those many women you turned into widows—women of good family, who were consumed by grief, devoted to their husbands, intent upon righteousness, and punctilious in their obedience to their elders—that you have fallen under the power of your enemy, your majesty.[62–64] The curse of those women whom you wronged at that time has now taken effect. It appears likely that the popular saying, 'The tears of women devoted to their husbands never fall to the ground in vain,' has proven true in regard to you, O king.[65–67] How on earth,[27] your majesty, could you, who had conquered all the worlds with your blazing energy and who prided yourself on your valor, have engaged in the contemptible act of abducting a woman?[68–69] That you carried off Rāma's wife after luring him[28] away from his ashram through the use of a fraudulent deer only served as evidence of your cowardice.[29][70–71] I do not recall any cowardice on your part in battle at any time. Therefore, surely, through the reversal of your fortune, this was a sign of your impending doom.[72–73] Knowing the past and the future, wise in regard to the present, [my younger brother-in-law Vibhīṣaṇa,] seeing that Maithilī had been abducted, reflected for a long time and then, sighing[30] . . . [74–75]"

[1]"your youthful face . . . was rosy" sukumāraṃ te . . . tāmrāsyam: Literally, "your reddish face [was] youthful or tender."

[2]Cs, in his comments to VSP 6.114.38, notes the potential contradiction between this verse and the passage in the Mahābhārata's Rāmopākhyāna (3.274.31) in which it is stated that the brahmāstra vaporizes Rāvaṇa's body so that not even the ashes are to be seen. Cs manages to resolve the contradiction by a scholastic analysis of some of the terms used and by reference to additional sources of the story. Compare notes to verse 42 below.

[3]"the dust stirred up by the chariots" syandanareṇubhiḥ: Literally, "by chariot dusts."

[4]"your final state, the bringer of widowhood, has now befallen me, a state" paścimā me saṃprāptā daśā vaidhavyakāriṇī: Literally, "the final state causing widowhood has come to me." We follow Cg in adding the enclitic te, "your," to the phrase "final state (paścimā . . . daśā)," which Cg glosses as "death (mṛtyuḥ)."

[5]"king of the dānavas" dānavarājaḥ: The reference, as noted by Cg, is to the asura Maya. Compare verse 26 and note below. See 7.12.3–18. Cf. notes to 6.88.2,30–31.

[6]"crushers of their haughty foes" dṛptārimathanāḥ: The compound could also be interpreted to mean "proud crushers of their foes."

[7]"heroes" śūrāḥ: V1,D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead krūrāḥ, "fierce, cruel."

[8]"bull among rākṣasas" rākṣasarṣabha: Ñ2,V1,2,D5,9–11,T1,M2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the plural vocative rākṣasarṣabhāḥ, "O bulls among rākṣasas."

[9]"Your body . . . this body of yours" śarīraṃ te: Literally, "your body." The referent only occurs once; we have repeated it for the sake of readability.

[10]"covered with innumerable sharp arrows" tīkṣṇair naikaśaraiś citam: Ñ2,V,D10, and the printed edition of GPP read instead the somewhat obscure tīkṣṇair naikacaraiś citam, literally, "piled up with many sharp, moveable objects." Among the translators consulted, only Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 368) appears to follow this reading, rendering, somewhat heroically, "couvert de bandes d'animaux à la dent aiquisée." Apparently, he understands the reference to be to carrion beasts.

[11]"porcupine" śvāvidhaḥ: See note to 6.40.17.

[12]"I see it . . . its complexion the color of blood" paśyāmi rudhiracchavi: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read śyāmaṃ vai, "so dark," for paśyāmi, "I see." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Cm, and apparently Cr read instead śyāvaṃ rudhirasacchavi, "brownish with a color like that of blood." Among the translators, only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 323) renders this variant, translating, "dark with clotted blood."

[13]"the great bringer of fear to them" trailokyodvegadaṃ mahat: Literally, "the great bringer of fear to the three worlds."

[14]"the . . . disturber even of Śaṅkara: kṣeptāraṃ śaṃkarasya ca: As Cg notes, the reference here is to the famous incident in which Rāvaṇa, in his arrogance, dares to shake Mount Kailāsa, Śiva's abode. The story is told at Uttarakāṇḍa 16.

[15]"with his roars, he made all creatures cry out with fear" nādair bhūtavirāviṇam: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sādhubhūtavidāraṇam, "slaughtering virtuous people."

[16]"He was the protector of his troops and dependents and the slayer of warriors of fearsome deeds." svayūthabhṛtyagoptāraṃ hantāraṃ bhīmakarmaṇām: Literally, "the protector of his own troops and dependents, the slayer of those of fearsome deeds." D5,T1,G3,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read -vargāṇām, "hosts," for-goptāram, "protector," and goptāram, "protector," for hantāram, "slayer." This gives the line the meaning: "He was the protector of the hosts of his troops and dependents who committed fearsome deeds." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 324) appears to have been influenced by this reading.

[17]"the nivātakavacas" nivātakavacānām: Literally, "of those who have mail for their armor." This is a name of a class of asuras. Rāvaṇa's battles with the nivātakavacas are described at Uttarakāṇḍa 23. See, too, notes to 6.50.18.

[18]"From many different lands" tatas tataḥ: Literally, "from there, from there."

[19]"having seen my lord" bhartāraṃ dṛṣṭvā: Lines 30–45 form one syntactical unit, consisting of a series of modifiers for the accusative noun bhartāram, "lord." We have broken up the syntax for the sake of readability.

[20]"I still live" deham imaṃ dhārayāmi: Literally, "I support this body."

[21]"all red with dust" reṇupāṭalaḥ: Ñ2,V1,2,B2–4,D4,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead reṇuguṇṭhitaḥ, "smeared or covered with dust."

[22]"Bereft of all my kinsmen" sāhaṃ bandhujanair hīnā: Literally, "I, deprived of kinsmen." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead nāham, "I, not [being]," for sāham, "I [am] she." Cg understands the verse to mean that Mandodarī is saying she would not grieve for the loss of her kinsmen, if only Rāvaṇa were still alive. But since she has now lost him, and therefore all her objects of desire, she will grieve. (bandhujanair hīnāhaṃ na śocisye, yadi tvaṃ sthitaḥ syāḥ. kiṃtu tvayā hīnāta eva kāmabhogair vihīnā śocisya iti yojanā.) This reading and interpretation are followed only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 324).

[23]"a long . . . road" dīrgham adhvānam: Cg understands this to be the road to heaven reserved for heroes (vīrasvargam).

[24]"lamenting" vilapatīm: D6,T2,3,G3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead vilapitaiḥ, "with lamentations or weeping." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 324), the only translator consulted who reads with Cg, construes the term with mandām, "hapless," rendering the two together as "crazy with wailing."

[25]"unveiled" anavakuṇṭhitām: Literally, "not enclosed, not surrounded." Cg, the only commentator to share the critical reading, glosses, "uncovered (anāvaraṇām)," i.e., "having no veil." V1,B2–4,D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead anavaguṇṭhitām, "not veiled." This verse and the next appear to be the first explicit references in the poem to the practice of veiling women of high social standing, although several passages throughout the poem indicate that such women were secluded and protected from the gaze of men who are not their husbands or close relatives. See 2.30.8 and note and 6.102.19–29 and notes.

[26]"These women" ayam . . . janaḥ: Literally, "this person." Like most of the translators consulted, we understand the phrase in its common collective meaning of "people," referring specifically here to the junior consorts of Rāvaṇa mentioned in the preceding lines. The phrase could also represent Mandodarī's way of referring to herself, and two translators (Dutt 1893, p. 1493 and Gita Press 1969, vol. 3, p.1831) interpret in this fashion.

[27]"How on earth" kathaṃ ca nāma: Literally, "and how, indeed."

[28]"Rāma's wife . . . him" rāmam . . . rāmapatnī: Literally, "Rāma . . . Rāma's wife."

[29]"evidence of your cowardice" te kātaryalakṣaṇam: Literally, "a sign or mark of cowardice." D9–11,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead apanīya ca lakṣmaṇam, "and having lured away Lakṣmaṇa."

[30]The syntax of the final verse is incomplete and is resolved only in verse 21.

21. "illustrious" mahābhāgaḥ: Ś2,Ñ1,B1,D1–4,8–12,T1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the vocative mahābāho, "O great-armed one."

"which my . . . brother-in-law Vibhīṣaṇa" devaro me: Literally, "my husband's brother."

22. "Through this catastrophe . . . characterized by your obsession, you" vyasanena prasañginā / tvayā: Literally, " by you through this catastrophe possessing attachment or addiction." The syntax of the verse favors reading the adjective prasañginā as modifying vyasanena, "through the catastrophe." Given the critical reading, however, it could also be convincingly taken to modify tvayā, "by you," in pāda c, giving the sense "by you, in your obsession."

Following 22ab, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of one line [3120*], which varies somewhat between the two major textual traditions of the southern commentators. The critical reading as it stands appears in neither the text of Ct, etc., nor that of Cg, etc., and, in fact, makes virtually no sense in the context. Translated literally, it would mean something like "this disaster has ceased on your account, and it is a great and radical cause of destruction (nivṛttas tvatkṛte 'narthaḥ so 'yaṃ mūlaharo mahān)." D6,7,9–11,G1,2,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read the first half of this verse as follows: nivṛttas tvatkṛtenārthaḥ, "Your action has brought an end to your prosperity." Ct, Ck, and Cr understand this to mean that, by his misdeeds, Rāvaṇa has destroyed his entire sovereignty (tvatkṛtenārtho 'śeṣaiśvaryalakṣaṇo nivṛttaḥ). Translations that follow the text of Ct render accordingly. T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read the first half of the line as nirvṛttas tvatkṛte 'narthaḥ, "this disaster has been brought about on your account." This reading is rendered in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 325).

23. "my heart is in a pitiable state" me buddhiḥ kāruṇye parivartate: Literally, "my mind falls or moves in compassion." We follow Ct and Cg, who gloss dainye, "in dejection or despondency," for kāruṇye, "in compassion."

24. "because of my separation from you" tvadviyogena: V2,D5,7,9–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead tvadvināśena, "because of your destruction or loss."

Following verse 24, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of six lines [3124*]: "You would not listen to the advice of your friends, who wished you well, and the unanimous and beneficial advice of your brothers,[1] ten-faced rākṣasa.[1–2] Nor would you act effectively[2] upon the various[3] logical, sensible, reasonable, beneficial, and friendly words of Vibhīṣaṇa.[3–4] Nor, in your intoxication with your own might, would you listen[4] to the advice offered by Mārīca, Kumbhakarṇa, and my father. And this is the result.[5–6]"

[1]"unanimous . . . of your brothers" bhrātṝṇām . . . kārtsnyena: Literally, "by the entirety of brothers."

[2]"effectively" hetumat: Literally, "reasonably." We agree with Cg in reading the term adverbially. He glosses, "expediently or logically (yuktimad yathā bhavati tathā)." The sense, however, seems more in keeping with the glosses of Ct, Cr, and Cm, who take the term as an adjective modifying "words (abhihitam, lit., what was spoken)" in the sense of "fruitful, productive (phalavat—so Ct, Cm)."

[3]"various" vividham: D7,9–11,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead vidhivat, "in accordance with the rules [of the śāstras]."

[4]"Nor . . . would you listen" na śrutam: Literally, "was not heard [by you]." D7,9–11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead na kṛtam, "was not done or carried out [by you]."

25. "Resembling a black storm cloud, with your yellow garments and bright armlets" nīlajīmūtasaṃkāśaḥ pītāmbaraśubhāṅgadaḥ: D5,9–11,T1,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead three vocatives, nīlajīmūtasaṃkāśa pītāmbara śubhāṅgada, "O you who resemble a black storm cloud, O you with yellow garments, O you with bright armlets."

"drenched in blood" rudhirāplutaḥ: V2,D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rudhirāvṛtaḥ, "covered with blood."

"splaying out all your limbs" sarvagātrāṇi vikṣipya: Literally, "having flung wide all limbs." D5,6,10,11,T,G3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead svagātrāṇi vinikṣipya, "having flung out your own limbs."

26. "Why do you not look at me" kiṃ tvaṃ māṃ nābhyudīkṣase: V2,D7,9–11,M2, and the texts of Ct and Cr read instead kiṃ māṃ na pratibhāṣase, "Why do you not answer me?"

"the granddaughter" dauhitrīm: Literally, "the daughter's daughter." D5,6,T,G2,3,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead the vocative dauhitra, "O grandson," literally, "O daughter's son."

"an . . . skillful yātudhāna who never fled in battle" dakṣasya saṃyugeṣv apalāyinaḥ / yātudhānasya: Literally, "of the skillful yātudhāna who does not run away in battles." According to Ck, Ct, and Cr, the yātudhāna in question is Sumāli (v.l. Sumālin). According to Cg, who reads the variant dauhitra, the reference is either to Mālyavān or Sumālin. Cg argues that Mandodarī refers to this relationship to make manifest the unobstructed power of (Rāvaṇa's) lineage (tatsambandhakīrtanam apratihatakulaprabhāvaprakaṭanam). The reference in either case is to Rāvaṇa's lineage, of which she would have become a member through marriage, and not to Mandodarī's own lineage. Māli, Sumāli, and Mālyavān are the three sons of Sukeśa (7.5). Rāvaṇa is said to be the grandson of Sukeśa at 7.9. See 7.5ff. See, too, note 5 above. On the other hand, Mandodarī is the daughter of Hemā and Maya, son of Diti (7.12). See App. I, No. 68, n. 5, following note to verse 17 above. On yātudhānas, see 6.3.27 and note. For some reason, Pagani (1999, p. 1173) treats the genitive adjective dakṣasya and the genitive adjectival phrase saṃyugeṣv apalāyinaḥ as if they were vocatives referring to Rāvaṇa. The syntax cannot support such a rendering.

Following verse 26, Ñ2,V,B2–4,D5–7,9–11,S insert, while Ñ1,D4 continue following 3130*, a passage of two lines [3127*]: "Arise! Arise! Why do you lie there in the face of this new insult? For today the sun's rays have penetrated Laṅkā without fear.[1]"

[1]"the sun's rays have penetrated Laṅkā without fear" adya vai nirbhayā laṅkāṃ praviṣṭāḥ sūryaraśmayaḥ: The reference here is to the fact that the sun and other natural and divine entities had avoided Rāvaṇa during his lifetime out of fear of him. Compare 1.14.10, where the gods complain that the sun, the wind, and the ocean dare not engage in their normal functions in the vicinity of Rāvaṇa. Cf. 6.78.45 and note.

27–28. "as if it were the vajra of Indra, the wielder of the vajra" vajro vajradharasyeva: Literally, "like the vajra of the bearer of the vajra."

"that smasher of your foes" śatrupraharaṇaḥ: Literally, "striking enemies." Ś2,Ñ,V2,D4,8,10,11,13,T3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read bahu-, "many," for śatru-, "enemy," lending the compound the sense "striking many."

Following verse 28, D5–7,10,11,13,T,G2,3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert, while Ñ2,B2–4,M2 continue after 3129* and Ñ1,D4 insert after verse 29, a passage of two lines [3130*]: "You lie there embracing the battleground as if it were your beloved. Why then do you not wish to speak to me, as if you were no longer fond of me?[1]"

[1]"as if you were no longer fond of me" apriyām iva: Literally, "as if [I were] unloved."

29. "Curse me whose heart" dhig astu hṛdayaṃ yasyā mama: Literally, "Damn me whose heart." We agree with Cg, Cm, Cr, and the majority of translators who share this reading in understanding an implicit correlative phrase tāṃ mām, "[curse] her, who is me," although it is possible to construe the indeclinable dhik with the genitive pronoun mama in much the same sense. Among the translators of this reading consulted, only Dutt (1893, p. 1494) construes the indeclinable dhik directly with hṛdayam, rendering, "Oh fie on this heart of mine." Ñ1,V1,3,B2,D4, and the edition of Gorresio clearly construe the idiom with the genitive, reading dhig astu hṛdayasyāsyā mama yat, which Gorresio renders as "Onito sia questo mio cuore, che . . ." Apte (s.v. dhik) quotes this phrase as an example of the construction of dhik with the genitive.

Following verse 29, B2–4,D5–7,9–11,13,S insert a passage of ten lines [3132*]: "Lamenting in this fashion, her eyes blinded with tears, her heart melting with love, the queen[1] fainted.[1–2] Having collapsed across Rāvaṇa's chest under the force of her swoon, she looked like a blazing streak of lightning across a dark[2] storm cloud reddened at twilight.[3–4] Her co-wives, deeply distressed and weeping, lifted her up, as she had fallen into this state, and comforted her[3] as she wept bitterly.[5–6] 'It is not as if you didn't know,[4] O queen, that the lives of people are transient.[5] This is so even of kings, with their fickle royal fortune[6] through the vicissitudes of life.[7]'[7–8] Addressed in this fashion, she wept loudly, bathing her full breasts with streams of tears.[8][9–10]"

[1]"queen" devī: V2,D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead tadā, "then."

[2]"dark" asite: D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead the redundant ujjvalā, "blazing," further modifying lightning.

[3]"lifted her up . . . and comforted her" samutthāpya . . . tām . . . paryavasthāpayāmāsuḥ: Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 371), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 325), understands the finite verb paryavasthāpayāmāsuḥ, "they comforted," to mean "Et la placèrent au milieu d'elles." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read samutpatya, "having rushed forth or having leapt up," for samutthāpya, "having lifted up."

[4]"It is not as if you didn't know" na te na viditā: Literally, "not by you [it is] not known." The double negative construction as printed in the critical edition is peculiar and is not found in any of the printed editions or texts of the commentators. D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead kiṃ te na viditā, "do you not know?" M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg read na te suviditā, literally, "it is not well known by you." Cg understands this to be an example of irony expressed by tone of voice, so that the phrase has the sense "you know perfectly well (te tvayā suviditā neti kākuḥ suviditaiva)." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 326), the only translator to read with the text of Cg, renders, "Do you not know very well . . .?" The text of Gorresio (6.95.43a) has the same sequence of syllables as the critical reading but breaks it up differently, reading na tena viditā, "it was not known by him," referring presumably to Rāvaṇa. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 215) renders, "colui non conobbe." See 6.37.11; 6.67.36; 6.93.15; 6.95.24; 6.101.36; and notes.

[5]"the lives of people are transient" lokānāṃ sthitir adhruvā: Literally, "the state of people is not fixed."

[6]"even of kings, with their fickle royal fortune" rājñāṃ cañcalayā śriyā: Compare App. I, No. 68, line 1 (following note to verse 17 above), where Mandodarī curses "the fickle royal fortune of kings (rājñāṃ cañcalāṃ śriyam)." Ñ2,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rājñāṃ vai cañcalāḥ śriyaḥ, "indeed, the royal fortunes of kings are fickle."

[7]"through the vicissitudes of life" daśāvibhāgaparyāye: Literally, "in the turning about in the apportionment of conditions." We follow the interpretation of Cg, who understands the term daśā, "state or condition," to refer to the different stages of a person's life (daśānāṃ bālyakaumārayauvanavārdhakādyavasthānāṃ vibhāgasya bhedasya paryāye praptau). Other commentators and most translators understand more or less similarly, with the startling exception of Pagani (1999, p. 1174), who, apparently confusing the term daśā, "state, condition," with daśa,"ten," renders, "Sans que l'on ait le temps de compter jusqu'à dix."

[8]"bathing her full breasts with streams of tears" snāpayantī tv abhimukhau stanāv asrāmbuvisravaiḥ: We follow Cg and Cm, who gloss abhimukhau, literally, "facing," with "high, full, prominent (unnatau)." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead snāpayantī tadāsreṇa stanau vaktraṃ sunirmalam, "then bathing her breasts and shining face with tears."

30. "At this juncture" etasminn antare: The transition from the middle of Mandodarī's lament, which lacks any concluding verses, to Rāma's speech without the expected transitional verse or verses, is awkward. All printed editions consulted and virtually all manuscripts read either an insert providing the narrative transition [3132*] (see notes to verse 29 above) or begin a new sarga with verse 30.

"send these women back" striyaś caitā nivartaya: D1,3,7,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead strīgaṇaḥ parisāntvyatām, "and comfort the women folk."

31. "reflected" vimṛśya buddhyā: Literally, "having reflected with his mind." Cg takes this to refer to the vulgate verse (GPP 6.109.23cd) found at App. I, No. 67, lines 87–90 (following sarga 97), where Vibhīṣaṇa expresses his desire to perform Rāvaṇa's funeral rites (see note 30 to that passage). At that point, Cg, looking forward to the present passage, notes the apparent contradiction. In light of this, Cg feels that Vibhīṣaṇa is reflecting that, regardless of his own feelings one way or the other, he will perform the rites, if Rāma so permits and not otherwise. (vimṛśyaitasya yat pretagatasya kṛtyaṃ tat kartum icchāmi tava prasādād ity uktam aṅgīkṛtaṃ vicintyety arthaḥ. rāmasyevānuvṛttyarthaṃ rāmeṇānujñāto 'smi cet tadā kariṣyāmi nānyathety evam anuvṛttyartham.)

A number of manuscripts, in whole or in part, and the texts and printed editions of Ct show a number of variations on this verse, including the complete omission of pādas ef. The verse in the vulgate then reads (= GPP, NSP, Gita Press 6.111.92cd–93ab):

tam uvāca tato dhīmān vibhīṣaṇa idaṃ vacaḥ /
vimṛśya buddhyā praśritaṃ dharmārthasahitaṃ hitam / /

Then, after reflecting, wise Vibhīṣaṇa spoke this speech, which was deferential, replete with righteousness and political sense, and beneficial.

"in order to conform to Rāma's wishes, replied with words that were filled with righteousness and political sense" rāmasyaivānuvṛttyartham uttaraṃ pratyabhāṣata: Ś2,Ñ1,B1–3,D1–3,8–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this line.

34. "Rāma" rāma: Ś2,Ñ,B1,4,D1–3,8,9,12,T1,G3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gorresio read instead kāmam, "true, granted."

"his qualities" tasya guṇān: The term guṇa is ambiguous, as it can mean either "virtues" or "qualities" in general. Given this reading, it is possible that Vibhīṣaṇa is using the first meaning ironically. D10,T3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead tasyāguṇān, literally, "his non-virtues," i.e., his vices.

35. "greatly pleased" paramaprītaḥ: Cg, undoubtedly reflecting upon the fact that Vibhīṣaṇa has expressed his disinclination to follow Rāma's instructions, remarks that we can either understand that Rāma is pleased because of Vibhīṣaṇa's frankness or we can break up the sequence differently (i.e., param + aprītaḥ) to mean "highly displeased." (paramaprītaḥ satyavacanakathanād iti bhāvaḥ. aprīta iti vā chedaḥ.)

"skilled in speech . . . was similarly expert in speech" vākyajño vākyakovidam: Literally, "[Rāma] knowing speech, [to Vibhīṣaṇa] expert in speech." A number of manuscripts, including the texts and printed editions of Ct, reverse the case endings of these two synonyms, yielding the reading vākyajñaṃ vākyakovidaḥ, "[Vibhīṣaṇa] knowing speech, [to Rāma] expert in speech."

36. "I really ought to do what pleases you" tavāpi me priyaṃ kāryam: Ck and Ct understand that Rāma owes Vibhīṣaṇa a favor in the form of royal consecration just as he did in the case of Sugrīva (sugrīvasyeva tavāpi priyaṃ rājyābhiṣekalakṣaṇaṃ mayā kāryaṃ kartavyam). Cg capitalizes on the ambiguity of the phrase, arguing that it can be taken to mean that Vibhīṣaṇa ought to gratify Rāma by performing Rāvaṇa's funeral rites or that Rāma should please Vibhīṣaṇa by not performing them. (tava tvayā me priyam api priyam eva kāryam . . . matpriyatvāt tvaddhitatvāc ca rāvaṇasaṃskāraḥ kriyatām ity arthaḥ. yadvā tavāpi me priyaṃ kāryaṃ madvairiṇo rāvaṇasyāsaṃskaraṇaṃ nāma mama priyaṃ tavāpi kartavyam eva.)

38. "Rāvaṇa, who made the worlds cry out" rāvaṇo lokarāvaṇaḥ: Literally, "Rāvaṇa, who causes the world to cry." This etymological epithet is a favorite of Vālmīki. See note to 6.8.12.

"Indra of the hundred sacrifices" śatakratu-: Literally, "he of the hundred sacrifices."

39. Verse 39 = App. I, No. 67, lines 93–94 (following sarga 97, with nivṛttam for nirvṛttam) (= GPP 6.109.25, with nivṛttam for nirvṛttam; and 6.111.100cd–101ab). See notes 31 and 32 to lines 93–94 ad loc.

"for as he was to you, so he is to me" mamāpy eṣa yathā tava: Literally, "just as he is yours, he is also mine." At the previous occurrence of this verse (App. I, No. 67, lines 93–94 = GPP 6.109.25), Ct comments very simply, noting that Rāma is stating that Rāvaṇa is as much an object of affection for him as he is for Vibhīṣaṇa, and that therefore Vibhīṣaṇa should have no hesitation in regard to the performance of Rāvaṇa's funeral rites (taveva mamāpi snehaviṣayas tataḥ saṃskāraviṣayaṃ śaṅkāṃ mā kurv ity arthaḥ). Here, however, he subjects the phrase to a more elaborate and more theologically focused interpretation, arguing that, just as Rāvaṇa is to be favored by means of funeral rites, and so on, by Vibhīṣaṇa because he was his brother, so is he to be graced by Rāma himself. He argues, however, that Rāvaṇa was not eligible for any one of the four types of liberation. (eṣa yathā tava bhrātā saṃskārādinā tavānugrāhyas tathā mamāpy anugrāhya eva. caturvidhamuktiṣv ekāpi nāsya.) Ct goes on to say that, although Rāvaṇa in his obsessive lust for Sītā did manage to obtain a direct vision of Rāma, he did not have the devotional attitude that Rāma was indeed Viṣṇu, thinking instead that he was a mere human. Ct likens Rāvaṇa's situation to that of the asura Hiraṇyakaśipu, who, as described in the Viṣṇupurāṇa, was slain by Viṣṇu in the form of the narasiṃhāvatāra, without recognizing his killer's divinity. Ct notes that, since Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa were later [in the dvāpara yuga] to be reincarnated as [those great exemplars of dveṣabhakti] Śiśupāla and Dantavakra, respectively, they could not have attained liberation or union with the Lord. Ct concludes that it is not possible for one who has obtained the world of the Lord to experience rebirth. Instead, such a person would obtain liberation together with Brahmā. (tad uktam viṣṇupurāṇe hiraṇyakaśipor viṣṇur ayam ity evaṃ na manasy abhūt. daśānanatve 'py anañgaparādhīnatayā jānakīsamāsaktacetaso dāśarathirūpadarśanam evāsīt. nāyam acyuta ity āsaktiḥ. vipadyato 'ntakaraṇasya mānuṣabuddhir eva kevalam abhūd iti. ata eva rāvaṇakumbhakarṇayoḥ śiśupāladantavakrarūpeṇa janma śrūyate. na hi bhagavatsālokyaṃ prāptayor api janma bhavati kiṃtu brahmaṇā saha muktir eva iti siddhāntaḥ.) See note to 6.105.12.

40. "he deserves a . . . funeral at your hands" tvatsakāśāt . . . saṃskāram . . . / . . . arhati: We understand the unexpressed subject of the verb arhati, "he deserves or merits," to be Rāvaṇa. Cr appears to take Vibhīṣaṇa as the subject, glossing, " 'You must perform the funeral.' That is what it means (saṃskāram arhati saṃskāraṃ kurv ity arthaḥ)." But this seems to force the grammar. This interpretation, however, is followed by Dutt (1893, pp. 1495–96), who renders, "It behoveth thee to perform . . . his funeral ceremony." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 371) understands the compound tvatsakāśāt, "at your hands," literally, "from your presence," to mean "in your presence" and understands the funeral ceremony itself, saṃskāram (accusative masculine singular), to be the subject of the verb arhati. He renders, "Il faut qu'en ta présence cette cérémonie s'accomplisse." In this interpretation, he is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 326) and Pagani (1999, p. 1175). This interpretation does more violence to the grammar than even that of Cr.

"quick" kṣipram: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead prāptum to complete the verbal phrase prāptum arhati, "he deserves to receive."

"proper" vidhipūrvakam: Literally, "according to the [śāstraic] rules or prescriptions."

"great-armed" mahābāho: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg attempt to resolve the grammatical problem discussed above by substituting the nominative singular noun daśagrīvaḥ, "the ten-necked one," i.e., Rāvaṇa, for mahābāho.

"knower of righteousness" dharmajña: D7,10,11,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dharmeṇa, "in accordance with righteousness."

"Thus, you will reap glory" tvaṃ yaśobhāg bhaviṣyasi: Literally, "You will be a partaker of glory."

41. "provided Rāvaṇa with a fitting funeral" saṃskāreṇānurūpeṇa yojayāmāsa rāvaṇam: Literally, "he conjoined Rāvaṇa with a suitable ceremony." Cv understands that Rāvaṇa's funeral rites take place on the first day of the bright half of the month (saṃskāreṇa śuklapakṣaprathamā gatā). See note to 6.4.4.

D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute for pādas cd a passage of one line [3142*]: "He began to perform the funeral ceremony for his slain brother Rāvaṇa."

Following verse 41, D7,M2 (preceded by colophon), KK (6.114.103–117ef, lines 1–19 within brackets) insert, while D9–11 insert after 3142*; D5,6,T,G3,M1,3, and VSP (only lines 20–33 = 6.114.104–111) insert after 6.99.41; G1,2 insert lines 1–2 and lines 20–34 after 6.99.41; and Ñ,V,B2,3,4,D4,13, and Gorresio (6.96.7–16) insert lines 19–34 after line 29 of App. I, No. 69, a passage of thirty-four lines [App. I, No. 69]: "Then the lord of the rākṣasas, Vibhīṣaṇa, entered the city of Laṅkā and quickly set in motion the agnihotra[1] sacrifice for Rāvaṇa.[1–2] And that rākṣasa caused to be assembled carts, wooden vessels,[2] the sacred fires, sacrificial priests, sandalwood logs and various other types of logs, fragrant aloe and sweet smelling fragrances, as well as jewels, pearls, and coral.[3–6] Then, after a short while, the rākṣasa came forth surrounded by rākṣasas and, together with Mālyavān, began to perform the ceremony.[7–8] Then the brahmans, their faces covered with tears, placed Rāvaṇa, overlord of the rākṣasas, all clad in linen garments, upon a celestial litter made of gold. Then, lifting that litter, which was made colorful with flowers and varicolored banners, they took up logs of firewood, and, with Vibhīṣaṇa at their head, they faced south and set forth[3] to the accompaniment of the blare of various trumpets and the ceremonious sound of eulogies.[9–14] All the sacred fires were then kindled by the adhvaryu priest and placed in vessels.[4] They went forth, preceding the deceased.[5][15–16] Behind them, all the women of the inner apartments swiftly followed, weeping and swaying to and fro[6] on every side.[17–18] Then, in their deep grief, they placed Rāvaṇa on a consecrated[7] spot.[19] To the accompaniment of vedic mantras,[8] they built a pyre of sandalwood logs, covered with padmaka[9] wood and uśīra[10] roots and spread with the skin of a spotted antelope.[11][20–21] The last rites for the king were performed as prescribed in the vedas. And then they performed an excellent sacrifice to the ancestors[12] on behalf of the lord of the rākṣasas.[22–23] They laid out the altar to the southwest of the pyre and kindled the sacred fires, each in its proper place.[13] Then they all poured out ladles filled with a mixture of curds and clarified butter.[14][24–25] They placed a cart at his feet and a mortar[15] between his thighs.[26] And the learned priests[16] placed[17] all those wooden vessels, the lower and upper fire sticks, and an additional pestle in their proper places according to prescriptions set forth in the śāstras and ordained by the great seers.[27–29] Nearby, the rākṣasas slaughtered a sacrificial victim[18] and placed the omentum,[19] moistened with clarified butter, over the king.[30–31] Then, with their hearts full of sorrow and their faces drenched with tears, the rākṣasas,[20] assisted by Vibhīṣaṇa, adorned Rāvaṇa with fragrances, garlands, and various garments and then sprinkled him with parched grain.[32–34]"

[1]"the agnihotra" agnihotram: According to Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1835), this refers to the act of pouring libations on the fire. Dutt (1893, p. 1496) provides a note, according to which this term refers to "a pot for preserving sacred fire." Pagani (1999, p. 1674), in a note, understands that the cremation is the final agnihotra for Rāvaṇa. She understands the agnihotra to be the twice daily pouring of oblations into the fire required of all brahmans, of whom Rāvaṇa is one. See note to 6.23.24.

[2]"wooden vessels" dārupātrāṇi: GPP, KK, and Gita Press all read -rūpāṇi, "various types [of wood]," for -pātrāṇi, "vessels."

[3]"they . . . set forth" bhejire: Literally, "they partook or shared." We understand the verb in the sense in which it is read by Ct, who glosses, "they took the road to the cremation grounds (śmaśānamārgaṃ bhejire)," and Cr, who glosses, "they went (jagmuḥ)."

[4]"placed in vessels" śaraṇābhigatāḥ: Literally, "gone to places of refuge." We agree with Ct and Cr, who understand the compound to refer to the placement of the sacred fires in the pots in which they will be carried to the cremation ground (ādhārasthānakuṇḍasthāḥ—so Ct). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 372) understands the term in its more familiar sense, translating, "Tous ceux qui étaient venus se réfugier près de lui." In this he is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 326) and Pagani (1999, p. 1175). Dutt (1893, p. 1496) takes the reference to be to "the attendants."

[5]"the deceased" tasya: Literally, "of him." The reference is presumably to Rāvaṇa.

[6]"swaying to and fro" plavamānāni: We believe that this sense of the root √plu best fits the context of the wailing women. Ct takes the root in its more common sense of "to leap," arguing that, in their haste, the women, who would be inexperienced in walking, would appear to be leaping. Evidently his idea is that they are stumbling and recovering themselves (calanābhyāsābhāvāt tvarayā ca plavamānānīva). This idea is followed by Dutt (1893, p. 1496), who renders, "speedily leaping (being ever unused to walking)," and by other translators who follow the text of Ct, who understand that the women are "tottering" (for example, see Gita Press 1969, vol. 3, p. 1836).

[7]"consecrated" prayate: Literally, "restrained, holy." The term, derived from the verb pra √yam, "to restrain or control one's senses," is properly used of a person, i.e., an ascetic or holy person. While the commentators ignore it, its usage here has occasioned some confusion on the part of translators. We agree with the interpretation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1836). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 372), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 326), understands "spacieux." Pagani (1999, p. 1175), somewhat similarly to us, renders, "préparé," while Dutt (1893, p. 1496) renders, "the cremation ground."

[8]"vedic mantras" brāhmyā: Literally, "pertaining to brahma or the vedas." Commentators differ as to whether the reference is to vedic recitation or ritual.

[9]"padmaka" padmaka-: A type of tree, the Prunus cerasoides (Cerasus puddum), or wild Himalayan cherry.

[10]"uśīra" -uśīra-: The fragrant root of a plant or of a specific type of grass, Andropogon muricatus (khus grass).

[11]"with the skin of a spotted antelope" rāṅkavāstaraṇa-: Literally, "a cover or spread derived from the rañku deer." According to Ck, Ct, and Cr, rañku is a name for the kṛṣṇasāra, or spotted antelope. The covering could be either a blanket made from the hair of that animal or, more likely, as Cg and Cm suggest, its skin.

[12]"an . . . sacrifice to the ancestors" pitṛmedham: We follow Cg, who clearly understands the pitṛmedha to be a separate ritual from the antyeṣṭi, or funeral rite itself.

[13]"They laid out the altar to the southwest of the pyre and kindled the sacred fires, each in its proper place." vediṃ ca dakṣiṇaprācyāṃ yathāsthānaṃ ca pāvakam: Literally, "and an altar on the southwest and fire according to place." The line is highly elliptical and the two accusatives vedim, "altar," and pāvakam, "fire," have no verb governing them.

[14]"Then they all poured out ladles filled with a mixture of curds and clarified butter." pṛṣadājyena saṃpūrṇaṃ sruvaṃ sarve pracikṣipuḥ: Literally, "they all threw out a ladle filled with speckled butter." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read skandhe, "on his shoulder," for sarve, "all."

[15]"cart . . . mortar" śakaṭam . . . ulūkhalam: As Cg points out, the cart is the one employed to bring King Soma (somarājānayanaśakaṭam), while the mortar is the one used for cleansing or threshing the sacrificial rice (yajñīyavrīhyavahanasādhanam). Here, as in the case of the other vessels mentioned, we see the practice of sending a sacrificer to the next world with all his sacrificial paraphernalia.

[16]"the learned priests" vicakṣaṇāḥ: Literally, "the learned ones." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vicakramuḥ, "they placed (lit., stepped forward)."

[17]"placed" dattvā: Literally, "having given." The three lines 27–29 have no finite verb. Translators and commentators resolve the difficulty in various ways. Some, like us, read the gerund dattvā as a finite verb. Others simply supply a verb. A number of commentators and translators construe line 29 with line 30, with which, in all printed editions of the southern recension, it constitutes a single verse, indicating that the rākṣasas kill the medhyaṃ paśum, or "sacrificial animal," "according to prescriptions set forth in the śāstras and ordained by the great seers."

[18]"a sacrificial victim" medhyaṃ paśum: Commentators and translators differ as to which type of animal is sacrificed. Cm, whom Ct quotes, understands that the animal is, in fact, identical with the paristaraṇikā, which he takes to be a special royal sacrificial cow (anustaraṇikāṃ rājagavīm). Pagani (1999, p. 1175) appears to follow this, rendering, "la vache du sacrifice." Cg glosses, "a goat (chāgam)," in which opinion he is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 327) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1836). Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 327) renders, "a sheep." Other commentators and translators, like us, do not specify the species of the victim.

[19]"the omentum" paristaraṇikām: We follow Ck, Ct, and Cr, who take the term to refer to the omentum of the sacrificial victim that is placed on the face of the deceased. They cite a sūtra supporting this interpretation. (paristīryate mukham anayeti paristaraṇikā vapā tāṃ rākṣasendrasya mukhe samaveśayan vapāsya mukhaṃ prorṇauti—so Ck and Ct.) Cg understands the term as a collective singular for a variety of unspecified coverings (paristaraṇikāṃ paristaraṇāni jātyekavacanam).

[20]"rākṣasas" te: Literally, "they."

42. "cremated him" dadau pāvakaṃ tasya: Literally, "he gave him fire." It is clear that the critical text is highly elliptical—as evidenced by the hiatus between verses 41 and 42—unless one includes the appendix passage (App. I, No. 69), known to the vast majority of both northern and southern recensions.

Like Cs above, Ct is also aware of the apparent contradiction between this whole passage and the verse in the Rāmopākhyāna of the Mahābhārata in which it is stated that Rāma's brahmāstra had literally vaporized Rāvaṇa's body, leaving no visible trace. Ct, however, rationalizes the seeming contradiction by arguing that the Mahābhārata passage is merely an example of hyperbole used to express the extraordinary blazing energy of Rāma's arrow (rāmabāṇatejovarṇanaviṣaye 'tyuktyalaṃkāraparatvād iti vadanti). Compare note 2 to App. I, No. 68* (following 6.99.19–20) above. See MBh 3.274.31.

"he consoled" anunayāmāsa: According to Cg and Cr, Vibhīṣaṇa is gently urging the women to return to the city. This is in keeping with insert 3146*, where that instruction is made explicit, and with the following verse, where we see that the women have indeed returned to Laṅkā. This incident thus shows Vibhīṣaṇa's compliance with Rāma's instructions, at verse 30 above, to send the women back.

Following 42ab, D5–7,10,11 (10 and 11, lines 1–2 only),T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators (Ct, lines 1–2 only) insert a passage of three lines [3145*]: "He bathed and, his garments still wet, offered sesame seeds mixed with water and dūrva grass according to the ritual prescriptions. Then, bowing his head to his brother,[1] he offered plain water.[2]"

[1]"his brother" enam: Literally, "him."

[2]"he offered plain water" pradāya codakam: Literally, "and having offered water." We are inclined to agree with Raghunathan, the only translator consulted to render this line, that the water mentioned here is separate from the water mentioned in line 2. In the absence of a finite verb, we have rendered the gerund pradāya as if it were finite.

Following verse 42, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of one line [3146*]: "Addressed with the words, 'Please go,'[1] they all then entered the city."

[1]"Addressed with the words, 'Please go'" gamyatām iti: Literally, "Please go." The line is elliptical. Cm adds the word uktāḥ, "[they were] addressed."

43. "And . . . all the rākṣasa women" ca sarvāsu rākṣasīṣu: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead purīṃ strīṣu rākṣasendraḥ, yielding the sense "when the women [had entered] the city, the lord of the rākṣasas . . ."

"had gone back" praviṣṭāsu: Literally, "[when those women] had entered."

As part of his contribution to the ongoing commentarial discussion on the absolute and relative chronology of the epic events, Cg notes here that Vibhīṣaṇa's consecration was performed on the day following Rāvaṇa's funeral, since, as the demon king had fallen in the forefront of battle, Vibhīṣaṇa would experience no period of ritual impurity following his brother's death, which would otherwise have prevented the performance of the ceremony. Cg further notes that Rāma's return to Ayodhyā takes place on the same day as Rāma's consecration of Vibhīṣaṇa. Cg concludes his remarks by saying that the funeral took place on the first [day of the bright half of Caitra]. (raṇaśirasi hatatvena rāvaṇasyāśaucābhāvād āgata ata evottaradine rājyābhiṣeko 'yodhyāgamanaṃ cānuṣṭhitam. prathamāyāṃ rāvaṇasaṃskāraḥ.) Cg's remarks are in keeping with Cv's position that the funeral occurred on the first day of the bright half [of Caitra] (rāvaṇasaṃskāreṇa śuklapakṣaprathamāyām). As throughout this discussion, Cg's position differs from that of Ct, who, at the conclusion of this sarga, places the funeral on the evening of the ninth [of Āśvina] (ayaṃ saṃskāro navamyām eva sāyaṃkāle). Compare notes to 6.100.7, where Ct again takes up the issue. See note to 6.4.4.

44. "as did Indra of the hundred sacrifices after slaying Vṛtra" hatvā yathā vṛtraṃ śatakratuḥ: Literally, "like the one of one hundred sacrifices having killed Vṛtra." Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead hatvā vṛtraṃ vajradharo yathā, literally, "like the vajra-bearer having killed Vṛtra." See 6.75.35 and note.

Following verse 44, Ś2,Ñ2,V1,2,B,D1–3,8–13 (D13 after 3141*), and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of four lines [3147*]: "Then, setting down[1] the bow, arrows, and mighty armor that great Indra had given him and putting aside his wrath now that his enemy had been slain, that slayer of his foes, like the hare-marked moon, resumed his mild demeanor.[2][1–4]"

[1]"setting down" muktvā: Literally, "having released."

[2]"like the hare-marked moon . . . his mild demeanor" śaśīva saumyatvam: Literally, "like the one possessing a rabbit . . . his mildness." The critical reading presents a mild pun in that the adjective saumya means both "gentle, beneficent" and "pertaining to or associated with the moon [Soma]." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read rāmaḥ saḥ, "he, Rāma," for śaśīva, "like the moon," thus eliminating both the simile and the pun of the critical edition. Cf. 6.102.35 and note.

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 100

1. "proclaiming those auspicious events" kathayantaḥ śubhāḥ kathāḥ: Literally, "telling auspicious tales." All translators consulted appear to understand that the supernatural spectators depart, talking among themselves about the stirring events they have witnessed. We believe, however, that the context supports our idea that these great beings depart for their own proper worlds, spreading the good news as it were.

2–3. "the counsel of Sugrīva" sugrīvasya . . . mantritam: According to Ct and Ck, the reference here is not merely to Sugrīva's advice during the war but, instead, to his useful and effective counsel in such matters as the mustering of the troops, the search for Sītā, etc. (senāsaṃmelanasītānveṣaṇādisarvakāryasādhakaṃ mantrasāmarthyam—so Ct).

"of Lakṣmaṇa Saumitri" saumitrer lakṣmaṇasya: Cg, the only commentator to remark on the critical reading, notes the unusual collocation of the name and the matronymic here, observing that the latter is used to show how praiseworthy and fortunate Lakṣmaṇa's mother is (saumitrer iti tanmātuḥ ślāghanavyañjanāyāsya jananī hi bhāgyavatīti). V3,D7,10,11,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead māruteḥ, "of Māruti," for saumitreḥ, making the verse refer to both Lakṣmaṇa and Hanumān. Ct and Ck, the only commentators to remark on this reading, understand that both qualities, heroism and devotion to Rāma, are shared by both characters (mārutilakṣmaṇayo rāme 'nurāgaṃ vīryaṃ ca—so Ct).

Following 3ab, V2,B3,D9–11, and the printed editions of Ct, Gorresio, and KK (in brackets) insert, while Ś2,B1,D1–4,8,12 substitute for 3cd, a passage of one line [3148*]: "[proclaiming] Sītā's devotion to her husband and the valor of Hanumān."

4. "noble" mahābhāgaḥ: B1,4,D1–4,7,9–11G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mahābāhuḥ, "the great-armed one."

"he released" anujñāya: Literally, "having given permission or leave."

"loaned" -dattam: Literally, "given." See 6.99.10.

Both Ct and Cs note an inherent narrative contradiction between the present passage and the Rāmopākhyāna, where it is said that Rāma retains Indra's chariot until after his reunion with Sītā (MBh 3.275.8,49). These commentators, however, downplay the seriousness of this contradiction on the grounds that the Mahābhārata story is not as clearly focused on the sequence of events (yady api bhārate sītāyā āgamanottaraṃ rathād avataraṇaṃ bhagavata uktam tathāpi tatra paurvāparyakrame tātparyābhāvān na kṣatiḥ—so Ct).

5. "ascended" āruroha: D1–3,6,9–11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead utpapāta, "he flew up."

6. "that foremost of the charioteers of the gods" surasārathisattame: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarathe rathināṃ varaḥ, "[when he] along with his chariot [had ascended into the sky], [Rāghava] the best of chariot-warriors . . ."

7. "reverently saluted" abhivāditaḥ: M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead pracoditaḥ, "urged on."

"by the foremost of the tawny monkeys" hariśreṣṭhaiḥ: Ś2,V2,B1,D1–3,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead harigaṇaiḥ, "by the hosts of tawny monkeys."

Apropos of this verse, Ct raises once again the question of chronology, taking a position reminiscent of that articulated earlier by Cg (at 6.99.43). There, Cg argues that Vibhīṣaṇa's consecration is performed on the day of Rāvaṇa's funeral because Rāvaṇa's death in battle obviates the need for his observing a period of "death impurity," during which the abhiṣeka ritual could not be performed. Ct, quoting Manusmṛti 5.98, the same verse that must have inspired Cg, argues that it is a mistake to think that there has been a ten-day period of impurity in this case but holds that, in fact, a three-day period of aśauca is in force for the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth [of Caitra] so that, according to him, the consecration takes place on the fourth day [after the funeral on the ninth]. (atha tribhir dinair daśarātraikādaśāhadvādaśāhakartavyakriyāsamāptau. caturthe 'hanīty arthaḥ. nātra daśāham āśaucam iti bhramitavyam.) It would appear that Ct is alluding to Manusmṛti 5.59, which specifies that those in the relationship of a sapiṇḍa to the deceased, as is Vibhīṣaṇa to Rāvaṇa, may observe a period of death pollution of one, three, or ten days. Cf. ManuSm 5.59. Note, however, that the verse Ct quotes (ManuSm 5.98) holds that there is no period of impurity for those who are slain by weapons in battle. See note to 6.99.43 above. On the issue of chronology, see note to 6.4.4.

8. "And then Rāma spoke" abravīc ca tadā rāmaḥ: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead athovāca sa kākutsthaḥ, "And then Kākutstha spoke."

"mighty" sattvasampannam: Literally, "endowed with strength." V3,D9–11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mitrasampannam, "endowed with friends," producing an echoing effect with the matronymic Saumitri. Ñ2,D5,T1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead satyasampannam, "endowed with truth."

"of blazing energy" dīptatejasam: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Gorresio read instead śubhalakṣaṇam, "of auspicious marks," producing an echoing effect with the name Lakṣmaṇa. See 6.67.37; 6.71.20; 6.89.4; and notes.

9. "Gentle brother" saumya: Literally, "O gentle one."

"in the kingship of Laṅkā" laṅkāyām: Literally, "in Laṅkā." Ct suggests that we should supply the words "on Rāvaṇa's throne itself (rāvaṇasiṃhāsane sākṣād iti śeṣaḥ)." Cg reminds us that Rāma had already had Vibhīṣaṇa consecrated on the seashore (6.13.7–9). According to him, the purpose of the repetition of the ceremony is to consecrate Vibhīṣaṇa on Rāvaṇa's actual throne (samudratīra eva laṅkārājyābhiṣeke kṛte 'pi punarvidhānaṃ rāvaṇasiṃhāsane 'bhiṣekārtham). Perhaps the idea here is that the public consecration would lend greater legitimacy to the new king. Compare notes to 6.19.26 and 27.

"loyal and devoted" anuraktaṃ ca bhaktaṃ ca: Cr and Cg attempt to differentiate the two nearly synonymous terms. According to Cr, the former refers to Vibhīṣaṇa's affection for Rāma, while the latter refers to his actions that are in accordance with that affection (anuraktaṃ madviṣayakānurāgam ata eva bhaktaṃ mannisṭhaprītyanukūlavyāpāravantam). Cg understands the former term to refer to Vibhīṣaṇa's performance of the duties of a friend and the latter to his performance of the duties of a servant. (anuraktam ity anena mitrakṛtyam uktam. bhaktam ity anena dāsyakṛtyam.)

"and has rendered me great assistance" caivopakāriṇam: Literally, "and [is one] possessing assistance." Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead pūrvopakāriṇam, "and was formerly helpful."

10. "gentle brother" saumya: Literally, "O gentle one."

11. "a golden vessel" sauvarṇaṃ ghaṭam: Cr, Cg, Cm, and Ct, in anticipation of their following verses (3153*), where the jar is described as being handed over to a group of monkeys, understand the singular here to be a collective singular (jātyekavacanam), representing several vessels.

Following verse 11, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of five lines [3153*]: "Giving that vessel into the hands[1] of the foremost of monkeys, who were immensely powerful[2] and as swift as thought, he instructed them to fetch water from the ocean.[1–2] Then those immensely powerful[3] monkeys departed with tremendous speed.[3] And when they had fetched water from the ocean, those foremost among the monkeys returned.[4] Then, taking one vessel[4] and placing [Vibhīṣaṇa] on that high throne, [Saumitri]. . ." [5]

[1]"into the hands" haste: Literally, "in the hand." As in the case of the vessel, Cr, Ct, and Cg understand that, because of the plurality of the monkeys, we should take this as a collective singular (jātyekavacanam).

[2]"immensely powerful" mahāsattvān: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the nominative singular mahāsattvaḥ, which would then refer to Lakṣmaṇa.

[3]"immensely powerful" mahābalāḥ: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead manojavāḥ, "as swift as thought."

[4]"one vessel" ekaṃ ghaṭam: This phrase lends credence to the commentators' argument in note 1 above that the previous use of the singular for vessels and hands should be taken as collective.

12. "used that vessel to consecrate" ghaṭena tena . . . abhyaṣiñcat: Literally, "he consecrated with that pot."

Following verse 12, Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D5–7,9–11,13,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3154*]: "According to the prescriptions set forth in the vedic texts, [he consecrated] him who was surrounded by the hosts of his friends.[1]"

[1]"him who was surrounded by the hosts of his friends" suhṛdgaṇasamāvṛtam: D9–11,T2,3,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the nominative suhṛdgaṇasamāvṛtaḥ, which then modifies Lakṣmaṇa rather than Vibhīṣaṇa.

13. "Thus did that righteous hero consecrate pure-minded Vibhīṣaṇa" abhyaṣiñcat sa dharmātmā śuddhātmānaṃ vibhīṣaṇam: Cg understands the term "pure-minded" to mean that Vibhīṣaṇa accepts the consecration only because he was so ordered by Rāma. The higher meaning, according to Cg, is that Vibhīṣaṇa is completely devoted to the service of Rāma. (śuddhātmānam ity anena rāmājñayābhiṣekam aṅgīkṛtavān. paramārthas tu rāmakaiṅkārya evāsakto 'bhūd ity avagamyate.) D9–11, KK, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read, for 13ab, abhyaṣiñcaṃs tadā sarve rākṣasā vānarās tathā (tadā—KK), "and then all the rākṣasas and monkeys consecrated [him]."

"the latter's" tasya: Literally, "his."

"those rākṣasas who were devoted to him" bhaktā ye cāsya rākṣasāḥ: We understand the relative clause to be restrictive here and to refer specifically to those rākṣasas who, like Vibhīṣaṇa's four loyal ministers, were devoted to his cause. See 6.10.12; 6.11.3,5; 6.28.7; and notes. One might also, perhaps, read the clause to mean that all the rākṣasas have now transferred their loyalty to their new king.

Following verse 13ab, Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, KK (in brackets), and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of one line [3157*]: "Experiencing unequaled delight, they praised Rāma."

14. "Rāghava, together with Lakṣmaṇa, experienced the greatest delight." rāghavaḥ paramāṃ prītiṃ jagāma sahalakṣmaṇaḥ: Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–3,5,7,8,12,13,T1,G1,3,M, and the texts and printed editions of Cg omit 14cd. Based on the principles outlined by the critical editors (Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv), the line should have been omitted from the critical edition. The critical apparatus provides no rationale for the inclusion of this line. It is not rendered in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 329), leading him to construe lines 14ab with verse 13.

15. "When he had received that great kingdom, which Rāma had conferred upon him, Vibhīṣaṇa" sa tadrājyaṃ mahat prāpya rāmadattaṃ vibhīṣaṇaḥ: Literally, "Vibhīṣaṇa, having obtained that great kingdom given by Rāma." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this line (15ab).

"comforted his people" prakṛtīḥ sāntvayitvā: Literally, "having conciliated the elements of state." The term prakṛti here is ambiguous. Ct, Ck, Cr, and most of the translators consulted take it in its sense of "subjects, people (prajā)," and we tentatively agree with this interpretation. However, equally plausible, in our view, is Cg's interpretation in which the term is taken in its sense of "ministers of state, etc. (amātya-prabhṛti)." The idea here would be that Vibhīṣaṇa is attempting to conciliate the ministers and other government officials who would have been loyal to Rāvaṇa. Cg's understanding is, however, that the new king is dispelling the grief of his ministers caused by the loss of their sons, friends, and so forth (putramitrādivināśajaśokāpanodanaṃ kṛtvā). Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 329), who follows Cg, renders, "conciliated the estates of the realm." Cf. verse 13 and note above.

16. "unhusked rice, sweetmeats, parched grain, and celestial flowers" akṣatān modakāṃḷ lājān divyāḥ sumanasas tathā: Ś2,D1,3,8–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dadhyakṣatān modakāṃś ca lājāḥ sumanasas tathā, "curds, unhusked rice, sweetmeats, parched grain, and flowers." See 6.116.35 and note.

17. "all those auspicious offerings . . . in an auspicious fashion" mañgalyaṃ mañgalaṃ sarvam: We follow the interpretation of Cr, according to which the term mañgalyam applies to the entire collection of auspicious materials referred to in the previous verse, while mañgalam is to be read adverbially (mañgalyaṃ mañgalārhaṃ sarvaṃ vastujātaṃ mañgalaṃ yathā bhavati tathā). Cg, however, believes that the phrase mañgalaṃ sarvam refers to a collection of auspicious substances, such as turmeric, which is different from the assemblage of unhusked rice, etc., mentioned in the previous verse (mañgalaṃ haridrādi mañgaladravyam; sarvam uktākṣatādibhinnam).

18. "merely out of a desire to please him" tasyaiva priyakāmyayā: Cg, the only commentator to share this reading, expands on the expression, adding, "but not out of a desire for his own enjoyment (na tu svabhogecchayā)." V3,B2,D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read prati- for the critical editions's reading of priya-, yielding the sense "at his wish."

19. "Rāghava . . . spoke these words" abravīd rāghavo vākyam: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead uvācedaṃ vaco rāmaḥ, "Rāma spoke these words."

"who stood beside him" pārśvataḥ sthitam: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read praṇatam, "humble, humbly," for pārśvataḥ, "beside," lending the phrase the meaning "who stood [there] humbly."

20–21. "you must enter Rāvaṇa's palace . . . humbly approach" praviśya rāvaṇagṛhaṃ vinayenopasṛtya ca: Literally, "having entered the house of Rāvana, having approached with humility." D5–7,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg read vijayenābhinandya ca, "having gladdened [her] with the victory," for vinayenopasṛtya ca, "and having humbly approached." This variant is rendered only by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 329), who translates, "and gladden her with the news of my victory." Ś2,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8–11,13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute, for 20cd, a passage of one line [3165*]: praviśya nagarīṃ laṅkāṃ kauśalaṃ brūhi maithilīm, "having entered the city of Laṅkā, ask Sītā about her well-being." KK inserts this line, in brackets, as its 23cd.

"foremost among the victorious" jayatāṃ śreṣṭha: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vadatāṃ śreṣṭha, "O best among speakers, most eloquent one."

"and that I have slain Rāvaṇa" rāvaṇaṃ ca mayā hatam: Ś2,D1–3,8–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rāvaṇaṃ ca hataṃ raṇe, "and that Rāvaṇa has been slain in battle."

Following 20ab, D5–7,T,G,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions (KK after 3165* = KK 6.115.24ab; VSP 6.115.24ab) of Cg and Cr (GPP in brackets, unnumbered between 6.112.22 and 23) insert a passage of one line [3164*]: "Go, gentle friend, to the city of Laṅkā, having taken permission according to the prescribed rules."

22. "once you have related the good news to Maithilī" priyam etad udāhṛtya maithilyāḥ: Ñ2,V1,2,B1–3,D3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read ihākhyāhi for udāhṛtya, while Ś2,B1,D1,2,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read vaidehyāḥ for maithilyāḥ. This lends to the texts that read both variants, including the printed editions of Ct, the sense "here, you must relate the good news to Vaidehī."

Sarga 101

1. "honored" pūjyamānaḥ: Literally, "being honored." Cg notes that Hanumān is being honored by the rākṣasas who are pointing out the way [to the palace] (mārgapradarśanādibhiḥ pūjyamānatvam)."

2. "Entering Rāvaṇa's palace, that hero of immense blazing energy" praviśya tu mahātejā rāvaṇasya niveśanam: Literally, "and having entered Rāvaṇa's dwelling, that one of great energy." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead praviśya ca purīṃ laṅkām anujñāpya vibhīṣaṇam, "and having entered the city of Laṅkā, after taking the permission of Vibhīṣaṇa."

"spied Sītā, who resembled the constellation Rohiṇī cut off from her lord, the hare-marked moon, and occluded by a malevolent planet" dadarśa śaśinā hīnāṃ sātaṅkām iva rohiṇīm: Literally, "He saw one who was like an occluded Rohiṇī deprived of the one with the hare or rabbit." The reading of the critical edition is both elliptical and ambiguous. The simile is defective in that there is no explicit upameya. In order to bring out the sense of the line, therefore, we have added the name "Sītā," the logical object of the verb dadarśa, "he saw." The adjective sātaṅkām is also ambiguous, perhaps, intentionally so. In reference to a person, it would mean "pained, anguished, afflicted, diseased, ill, or afraid." In reference to a celestial body, it would mean, as indicated by Ct, Ck, and Cg, "occluded or oppressed by a planet (grahapīḍāsahitām—so Ct)." Cr glosses, "filled with dread (śaṅkāsahitām)." Rohiṇī, the fourth lunar nakṣatra, is stereotypically regarded as the favorite wife of the moon. See 6.80.38; 6.90.27; 6.99.16; and notes. The word ātaṅkā is also a name or epithet for the constellation Bharaṇī, which is associated with the eclipse demon Rāhu, perhaps as his source or mother, as indicated by Rāhu's epithet Bharaṇībhūḥ. Thus, the intention of the simile may be to compare Sītā to a celestial luminary in the process of being eclipsed. The simile, defective though it is, functions well in two respects. Sītā, like Rohiṇī, is cut off from her beloved lord and is beset by evil attendants in the form of her rākṣasī wardresses, although the critical text makes no explicit allusion to these figures here.

Ñ,V1,2,B,D2,4,6,7,10,11,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read mṛjayā hīnām, "without cleaning or bathing," for śaśinā hīnām, "cut off from the one possessing a hare." On the issue of Sītā's bathing before seeing Rāma, see 6.102.7,10,13–14, and notes.

Following 2ab, Ś2,Ñ2,B1,3,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of two lines [3168*]: "Granted permission, Hanumān then entered[1] that grove of trees. Having entered in the proper fashion, that tawny monkey, who was already known to Sītā . . ."

[1]"Granted permission, Hanumān then entered" praviveśābhyanujñāto hanūmān: Literally, "Hanumān entered, permitted." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tatas tenābhyanujñātaḥ, "then, permitted by him [Vibhīṣaṇa], [Hanumān]."

Following verse 2, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of one line [3169*]: "Joyless, at the foot of a tree, surrounded by rākṣasa women . . ."

3. "Modest, humble, and deferential" nibhṛtaḥ praṇataḥ prahvaḥ: The semantic ranges of these three terms overlap in the senses of "modest, deferential, bowing." The commentators explore their wider ranges of meanings in an effort to avoid what they must see as tautology. Cm, Ct, and Cg understand nibhṛtaḥ in its sense of "still, motionless (niścalaḥ)." Several of the translators consulted interpret the term as either "silent" or "motionless." Cr understands the term to mean "having his mind at ease (svasthacittaḥ)." Ct and Cm take the term prahvaḥ to mean "humble or bowing (namraḥ)," while Cg understands it to mean "with [his] limbs greatly contracted (prakarṣeṇa saṃkucitagātraḥ)." Cr, on the other hand, understands, "enunciating words proper to the occasion (uccāritatātkālikaśabdaḥ san)." Cr glosses praṇataḥ as "bowing his head (śirasā nataḥ)," while Cg similarly glosses, "having bowed or prostrated himself (kṛta-praṇāmaḥ san)."

"greeted her respectfully" abhivādya: Cg understands that Hanumān is making a formal greeting by announcing his name (svanāmasaṃkīrtya).

Following 3ab, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of three lines [3170*]: "When she first saw immensely powerful Hanumān arrive, the queen remained silent. But then, looking more closely,[1] she recognized him and was filled with joy. Seeing her lovely face, Hanumān, foremost of the leaping monkeys . . ."

[1]"When she first saw . . . looking more closely" dṛṣṭvā . . . dṛṣṭvā: Literally, "having seen . . . having seen." Several of the commentators attempt to explain the repetition of the gerund dṛṣṭvā and the reason why Sītā appears to be unmoved by her initial sight of Hanumān. The general consensus is that she fails to recognize him on first glance either because he is still too distant or because she is glancing about in general and only subsequently focuses her gaze upon him. It is then that, recognizing her old friend, she becomes happy. (samāgataṃ hanūmantaṃ dṛṣṭvā dūrato 'valokya tattvenājñātvety arthas tūṣṇīm āste dṛṣṭvā samīpato 'valokya smṛtvā hanūmān evāyam iti saṃsmṛtya hṛṣṭābhavat—so Cr.) Cr further indicates that this recognition suggests that Sītā realizes the success of [Rāma's] mission (ity anena sītayā kāryasiddhir jñāteti sūcitam).

4. "that tamer of his enemies" ariṃdamaḥ: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead amitrajit, "conqueror of his enemies."

"inquires after your well-being" kuśalaṃ cāha: Literally, "and he has spoken [with regard to your] well-being."

Following 4ab, Ñ,D4–7,13,T,G,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cr insert a passage of one line [3171*]: ". . . along with his ally Vibhīṣaṇa and the troops of tawny monkeys."

5. "through the wise counsel of Lakṣmaṇa" lakṣmaṇasya nayena ca: Literally, "and through Lakṣmaṇa's policy or statecraft." Ś2,B1,D1–3,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead lakṣmaṇena ca vīryavān, "and with Lakṣmaṇa that mighty one [Rāma]."

6. V1,2,B2,4,D10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse.

7. "Thank god, O knower of righteousness, you have survived by virtue of my victory in battle." diṣṭyā jīvasi dharmajñe jayena mama saṃyuge: Literally, "Fortunately you live, O knower of dharma, through my victory in battle." A number of manuscripts and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tava prabhāvād dharmajñe mahān rāmeṇa saṃyuge, "through your power, O knower of dharma, this great [victory] in battle [has been gained] by Rāma." The reading requires that the first part of verse 8 below be construed with this line. Therefore, we have added in brackets the necessary syntactical elements from 8a. Ct notes that the term "power (prabhāvāt)" refers to the extraordinary power deriving from Sītā's absolute devotion to her husband (pāti-vratyavaibhavāt).

According to Cg, the allusion to Sītā's knowledge of righteousness is a specific reference to her adherence to the duties of a faithful wife. He glosses, "you who know the righteous conduct of wifely devotion (pātivratyadharmajñe)." The tenor of this and the following verses is in stark contrast to the way Rāma will treat Sītā when they actually meet in sarga 103 below.

9. "With grim determination . . . I" mayā . . . dhṛtena: Literally, "by me [who was] resolved."

"to win you back" tava nirjaye: Literally, "with respect to your conquest." Like most translators, we follow the interpretation of Cg and Cm, who gloss, "with respect to your liberation from the hands of my enemy (śatruhastāt tava vimocane)." Ct, however, proposes that we supply the word śatroḥ, "of the enemy," so that the phrase would mean "in respect to vanquishing your enemy." This interpretation appears to have been followed only by Dutt (1893, p. 1500).

"without pause even for sleep" alabdhanidreṇa: Literally, "[by me] not having gotten sleep."

11. "now you are living in your own home, as it were" svagṛhe parivartase: Literally, "you live in [your] own home." Because of the reflexive force of the pronoun sva-, we believe, as do several other translators, that the usage is metaphorical, indicating that Sītā is now as safe and comfortable in Rāvaṇa's palace as she would be in her own. In this we agree with Ct and Ck. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 377), however, followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1178) and, apparently, by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 330), understands the term sva- to mean "his," i.e., Vibhīṣaṇa's house.

"Moreover . . . he is on his way" ayaṃ cābhyeti: Literally, "and he is coming." Ct, Cr, Cm, and Cg all agree that the reference is to Vibhīṣaṇa, and this interpretation is in keeping with the fact that it is indeed Vibhīṣaṇa that Rāma will send to fetch Sītā in sarga 102. Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 330), alone among translators of the southern recension consulted, mistakenly takes the reference to be to Rāma. The text of Gorresio (6.98.10) reads ahaṃ cābhyemi, "I am coming," for the critical reading ayaṃ cābhyeti, "he is coming." This, then, must be understood to be the direct speech of Rāma, and Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 222) has translated accordingly.

12. "whose face was like the hare-marked moon" śaśinibhānanā: Literally, "with a face like the one possessing a hare."

"sprang to her feet" samutpatya: Literally, "having leapt up." D5,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tu sā devī, "but the queen."

"speechless with joy" praharṣeṇāvaruddhā sā vyājahāra na kiṃcana: Literally, "obstructed with joy, she did not say anything." Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read vyāhartuṃ na śaśāka ha, "she was unable to speak," for sā vyājahāra na kiṃcana, "she did not say anything."

14. "so firmly grounded in righteousness" dharme vyavasthitā: Literally, "fixed or established in dharma." Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dharmapathe sthitā, "who stood on the path of righteousness."

"choked with joy" harṣagadgadayā: Literally, "indistinct or stammering with joy." Ś2,D2,3,8–12,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bāṣpagadgadayā, "choked with tears."

16. "I can think of no" na hi paśyāmi: Literally, "For I do not see."

"response" pratyabhinandanam: We tend to follow the interpretation of Cg and Cm, who understand that Sītā is referring to a verbal response, as in words of thanks (pratipriyavacanam—so Cg). This interpretation seems reasonable, since, as Cg and Cm note, it provides a rationale for Sītā's hesitation in replying to Hanumān because she was struggling to think of the appropriate words. This is, of course, in addition to her access of joy. (na kevalaṃ harṣavaśād eva nirvākyāsmi kiṃtu priyākhyātus tava tatsadṛśya-priyavacanasyābhāvād api—so Cm.) Then, too, this interpretation avoids the redundancy inherent in the explanation of Ck and Ct, who understand that Sītā was trying to think of a suitable material reward or gift (deyavastu). For in verses 17 and 18 Sītā will speak in similar terms of the inadequacy of any material reward for Hanumān's service.

"to you who have brought me this wonderful news" matpriyākhyānakasyeha tava: Literally, "of you who are telling good news to me here." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the textually inferior ākhyānakasya bhavato dātum, "to give to you, a teller."

17. "Nor, gentle monkey, can I think of anything" na ca paśyāmi tat saumya . . . api vānara: Literally, "I do not see that, gentle monkey." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the redundant sadṛśam, "adequate, suitable," for tat saumya, "that, O gentle one," and tava kiṃcana, "of you, anything whatsoever," for api vānara, "O monkey." This would yield the meaning: "And I do not see anything at all on earth suitable for you." Compare, however, 6.116.69–73, where Sītā gives Hanumān a pearl necklace. See, too, 6.113.40 and notes, where Bharata makes a similar comment to Hanumān.

"for me" mat-: Ś2,Ñ1,B4,D2,3,8–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the relative pronoun yat, "which."

"fitting" samam: Literally, "equal, fair." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sukham, "happiness." Translations that read this variant differ as to whether such a gift would confer happiness on the giver or the receiver.

18. "Neither gold nor silver" hiraṇyaṃ vā suvarṇaṃ vā . . . na: Normally, the term hiraṇya, like suvarṇa, refers to gold. Given the context, however, we agree with Cg, who glosses, "silver (rajatam)." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 377) appears to understand the terms to refer to two different types of gold. Nonetheless, he leaves the terms in the original and makes no suggestion as to how they are to be differentiated. Pagani (1999, p. 1178), following him, renders, "L'or trabaillé ou en pépites," and notes, on page 1675, that, although both terms originally mean gold, when set in juxtaposition, as here, they refer to worked gold and unrefined gold.

19. D5–7,9–11,S read 19cd twice: once here, and once following 3181* (see note to verse 22 below).

"with these words" vākyam: Literally, "speech or words." Ñ,Ś2,V1,2,B,D1–12,T,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead harṣāt, "from joy."

20. "You . . . are capable of speaking" tvam . . . arhasi bhāṣitum: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8,12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read anindite, "O blameless one," for bhāṣitum, "to speak."

21. "are more precious to me" viśiṣyate: Literally, "[this speech] is distinguished from, i.e., better than."

"a heap of all kinds of jewels" ratnaughād vividhāt: Literally, "a diverse mass of jewels."

D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse. Among the translators consulted, the verses do not appear in Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 377), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 330) or Pagani (1999, p. 1178).

22. D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse. See note to verse 21.

"In that . . . still standing" yat sthitam: The participle sthitam seems rather ambiguous here. It can have different meanings in different contexts. In the present context, only two of its possible meanings, however, seem at all plausible. We have taken it in its sense of "living, existing." The idea seems to be that Hanumān is expressing his gratification that Rāma has emerged from the battle not only victorious but unharmed. The term could also be taken in its sense of "having fulfilled a vow or agreement," a sense that would accord with Rāma's statement, at verse 9 above, that he had fulfilled his vow. Ct, Ck, and Cr do not accept this verse and therefore do not comment on it. D5,6,T,G1,2,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read susthitam, "standing well," for yat sthitam, which perhaps supports our interpretation, if we understand the adjective in the sense of "in good health." Cg and Cm do not comment on the term. The reading is known to only three of the translations consulted. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1841) renders, "happy," while Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 331) appears to try to encompass both meanings with his rendering of "happy and well-placed." Gorresio, who reads with the critical edition, either ignores the term or takes it as an implicit copula.

Following verse 22 (D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct following verse 20), D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of nine lines [3181*]: "Upon hearing those words of his, Maithilī, the daughter of Janaka, then addressed the son of Pavana in words that were more auspicious still.[1–2] 'Only you are capable of speaking words that are endowed with such superior characteristics, adorned with the virtue of sweetness, and replete with the eight elements of intelligence.[1][3–4] You are the supremely righteous and praiseworthy son of Anila, and there is no doubt that in you alone are found strength, valor, learning, might, courage, supreme competence, blazing energy, forbearance, fortitude, firmness, modesty, and many other excellent virtues.' [5–8] Then, not flustered in the least,[2] he modestly addressed Sītā once again.[9]"

[1]"replete with the eight elements of intelligence" buddhyā hyaṣṭāṅgayā yuktam: The commentators quote a verse (Nītisārakāmandaka 4.22), which lists the eight capacities of the active mind: "attentiveness, listening, grasping, retention, positive argumentation, negative argumentation, understanding the meaning, and grasping the essential truth (śuśrūṣā śravaṇaṃ caiva grahaṇaṃ dhāraṇaṃ tathā / ūhāpoho 'rthavijñānaṃ tattvajñānaṃ ca dhīguṇāḥ //). Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1842) provides the following note: "(1) Keenness to hear discourses on the Spirit, (2) readiness to hear such discourses, (3) receptivity and (4) retentive power, (5) reasoning for and (6) against a proposition, (7) the faculty of comprehension and (8) realization of truth: these are the eight characteristics of a sound and ripe intelligence." Cg and Cm quote a slightly different list, which reads smaraṇaṃ and pratipādanam, "memorization and expounding," in place of grahaṇam and dhāraṇam, "grasping and retention."

[2]"not flustered in the least" asaṃbhrāntaḥ: Literally, "not confused or agitated."

Following 3181*, D5–7,9–11,S read 19cd for a second time: ". . . [he] cupped his hands in reverence and, standing before Sītā, replied with these words."

24–25. "dreadful rumors . . . terrifying threats" ghorarūpasamācārāḥ . . . dāruṇakathāḥ: Literally, "news of terrible form or kind . . . whose conversation was fearsome." We understand the first compound to refer to the cajoling and hectoring of the rākṣasa women at 5.21.3ff. and 5.22.21–31, and the latter to refer to the more savage threats to dismember and devour Sītā at 5.22.32–41. Cr takes samācārāḥ in its other sense of "conduct, behavior," glossing the compound as "whose actions are of a frightful nature (bhayañkararūpakāriṇyaḥ)." This interpretation is equally plausible and has been followed by some translators.

Following verse 24, D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of three lines [3180* lines 1, 2, and 4 only = NSP, GPP 6.113.30–31ab; Gita Press 6.113.32–33ab]. Since the critical insert varies significantly in the lines that correspond to those of the texts and printed editions of Ct and cannot be properly construed out of the context of the five verses in which they are embedded in the critical apparatus, we have translated the lines as they are found in the printed editions of Ct: "I heard in this very place, queen, that these rākṣasa women—deformed, with deformed bodies, with deformed faces, and with fierce hair and eyes—speaking harsh words repeatedly at Rāvaṇa's command . . ." (iha śrutā mayā devi rākṣasyo vikṛtānanāḥ / asakṛt paruṣair vākyair vadantyo rāvaṇājñayā // vikṛtā vikṛtākārāḥ krūrāḥ krūrakacekṣaṇāḥ /).

26–28. The text of these verses, especially in the southern recension, is complex, variable, and perhaps corrupt in some respects. In some cases, commentators and translators alike struggle to make sense of terms and phrases and, on some occasions, simply skip over problematic ones. We have attempted to deal as best as we can with the readings of the available printed editions. To do so, we have made some emendations to the text as indicated below.

"lovely" śobhane: Ś2,D1,3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bāhubhiḥ, "with arms," which construes with viśālaiś ca (see below under caraṇaiś ca) to yield the meaning "with broad arms."

"with punches, slaps, kicks, fearsome blows of the knees, slashes of my fangs . . . violent clawing, dreadful flying kicks, . . . these kinds of assaults" muṣṭibhiḥ pāṇibhiś caiva caraṇaiś caiva . . . / ghorair jānuprahāraiś ca daśanānāṃ ca pātanaiḥ // . . . bhṛśaṃ śuṣkamukhībhiś ca dāruṇair laṅghanair hataiḥ / evaṃprakāraiḥ . . . viprakāraiḥ: Literally, "with fists, hands, and feet . . . with fearsome blows of the knees . . . descents of the teeth, violently with claws, with fearsome leaping blows, with these kinds of assaults."

*"violent clawing" bhṛśaṃ śuṣkamukhībhiḥ: Literally, "strongly with [those things] whose faces are parched." We find no persuasive lexical attestation for the term śuṣkamukhī, in the absence of which we are left with the two alternatives offered by the commentators. M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read nakhaiḥ, "with nails or claws," for bhṛśam, "violently," and understand the compound śuṣkamukhībhiḥ to be a bahuvrīhi modifying that noun. The sense, presumably, would then be "with nails whose edges are dry." One problem here is that Cg's reading presents an apparent case of liṅgabheda, since the adjective would be feminine while nakhaiḥ is masculine. A resolution of the problem may be the intention of the variant found in GPP (in brackets between 6.116.33 and 34), in D5,7,T1,G1,3, and in the text of Cr, which reads the masculine śuṣkamukhaiś caiva. Cr, the only commentator to address this particular variant, glosses, "parching or scorching [their] faces by throwing fire, etc. (vahniprakṣepādinā mukhaśoṣaṇaiḥ)." We have followed the reading and interpretation of Cg, despite its poor attestation and grammatical difficulties, in light of the fact that at least one northern text, that of Gorresio (6.98.25), in what is perhaps an example of the typical northern strategy of glossing difficult southern readings, reads bhṛśaṃ śuṣkanakhānāṃ ca [tāḍanaiḥ], "[with] violent [blows] of dried-up nails." This is rendered by Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 223) as "col batter forte . . . dall' unghie secche." This pāda (and the next) is omitted by D10,11,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct.

"with . . . slaps" pāṇibhiś caiva" Literally, "and with hands." Ñ2,B1,2,D1,3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read pārṣṇighātaiś ca, "and with blows of the heels."

"with . . . kicks" caraṇaiś caiva: Literally, "with feet." Ś2,D1,3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead viśālaiś caiva, "and with broad," which then construes with bāhubhiḥ. See above under "lovely" śobhane.

"with . . . fearsome blows of the knees" ghorair jānuprahāraiś ca: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead jaṅghājānuprahāraiś ca, "with blows of the thighs and knees."

"with . . . slashes of my fangs" daśanānāṃ ca pātanaiḥ: Literally, "with descents of the teeth." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 331) renders, "knocking down their teeth." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read dantānāṃ caiva pīḍanaiḥ, "by crushings with (lit., of) the teeth."

"with . . . these kinds of assaults" evaṃprakāraiḥ . . . viprakāraiḥ: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead evaṃ prahāraiḥ . . . saṃprahārya, "having struck . . . thus with blows."

D10,11,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit 27cd ["violently with claws, with fearsome flying kicks (bhṛśaṃ śuṣkamukhībhiś ca dāruṇair laṅghanair hataiḥ /)"].

"dreadful" dāruṇaiḥ: The text of Cg (and Cm), as it appears in VSP and KK (6.116.36) (unattested in the critical apparatus), reads instead dāraṇaiḥ, "tearing." Cg glosses dāraṇaiḥ as "with crushing blows or slaps to the cheek (pīḍanaiḥ kapolatāḍanair vā)." Among the translators, only Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 331) knows this variant.

Following verse 27, D7,G1,2, and GPP (in brackets between 6.116.33 and 34) insert a passage of one line [3182*]: "[knocking them down] with their bodies[1] together with their various protuberances, necks, shoulders,[2] and sides." No translation consulted renders this insert.

[1]"with their bodies" kalevaraiḥ: Cr construes this noun with hataiḥ, "with blows," from 27d, which then must be read as an adjective, "slain." The idea, then, is that Hanumān will strike down some of the rākṣasa women with the dead bodies of the ones he has already slain.

[2]"shoulders" -aṃsa-: GPP reads instead -aṃśa-, "parts."

Following 3182*, D7,G1,2, continue, while D5,6,T,G3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert following verse 27, and D10,11,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert after 27ab, a passage of one line [3183*]: "Striking them down, I wish to kill those who have harmed you."

For 28cd ("queen, these creatures that have done you such injury. I would like to slaughter them . . ."), Ś2,B2,3,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute a passage of one line [3184*]: "I would inflict these calamities[1] upon those who earlier tormented you."

[1]"I would inflict these calamities" yojayeyam anarthaiś ca: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ghātaye tīvrarūpābhiḥ, "I would slaughter [them] those fierce looking creatures by whom . . ."

29. "Addressed in this fashion by Hanumān . . . Vaidehī, daughter of Janaka" evam uktā hanumatā vaidehī janakātmajā: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ity uktā sā hanumatā kṛpaṇā dīnavatsalā, "addressed in this fashion by Hanumān, and being long-suffering and tenderhearted toward the downtrodden."

"by Hanumān . . . to him" hanumatā . . . hanūmantam: Literally, "by Hanumān . . . to Hanumān."

"illustrious . . . responded to him in words that were in keeping with righteousness" uvāca dharmasahitaṃ hanūmantaṃ yaśasvinī: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct then substitute for this line (= 29cd) one line [3185*]: ". . . said this to Hanumān after thinking and reflecting."

31. "It is as a consequence of my evil destiny" bhāgyavaiṣamyayogena: Literally, "as a consequence of the unevenness of fate." Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–5,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read -doṣeṇa, "through the fault," for -yogena, "through the consequence."

"For one always experiences the fruits of one's actions." svakṛtaṃ hy upabhujyate: Literally, "for one's own action is experienced or enjoyed."

Following verse 31, D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of one line [3189*, line 1]: "You must not speak in this fashion, great-armed warrior,[1] for this was the inevitable course of fate.[2]"

[1]"great-armed warrior" mahābāho: Literally, "O great-armed one."

[2]"for this was the inevitable course of fate" daivī hy eṣā parā gatiḥ: Literally, "for this is the highest course associated with destiny."

32. "being helpless" durbalā: Literally, "weak." One could equally well translate, "being [only] a woman."

"I had to endure all of this here at the hands of . . . servant women" dāsīnām . . . ahaṃ marṣayāmīha: The expression is elliptical. The literal translation is "I tolerate [of] the servant women here." Several of the commentators supply an object for the verb marṣayāmī, "I endure." Thus, Ct, for example, adds the words "this abuse, etc. (etat tarjanādikam)."

33. "only on the orders of Rāvaṇa" ājñaptā rāvaṇena: Literally, "[they] ordered by Rāvaṇa." V2,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rākṣasena, "by the rākṣasa," for rāvaṇena, "by Rāvaṇa."

"foremost of monkeys" vānarottama: Ś2,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mārutātmaja, "O son of Māruta."

"they will not torment me anymore" na kuryur hi tarjanam: Literally, "For they would not make abuse." Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D7,10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read the present indicative, na kurvanti, "they do not," for the optative, na kuryuḥ, "they should or ought not do."

34. "an ancient verse . . . that a bear once recited in the presence of a tiger" vyāghrasamīpe . . . purāṇaḥ . . . / ṛkṣeṇa gītaḥ ślokaḥ: Cm, Cg, Cr, and Ct (who quotes Cm in part) all tell very similar versions of a fable according to which a hunter who is being pursued by a tiger takes refuge in a tree that a ṛkṣa (a bear or ape) had already climbed. Arguing that the hunter is a menace to all forest creatures, the tiger urges the ṛkṣa to throw the hunter down to him. The ṛkṣa, however, refuses to betray one who has now effectively become his neighbor. He then falls asleep. The tiger then urges the hunter to throw down the ṛkṣa, a request with which the hunter promptly complies. But the ṛkṣa instinctively catches hold of another branch and so avoids falling into the tiger's clutches. The tiger now once more urges the ṛkṣa to throw down the hunter, since the latter has clearly betrayed him. But the ṛkṣa refuses to repay evil with evil, promising to protect the hunter, even though he has been wronged by him. See notes to 6.12.12, where the commentators refer to this story. In a note to this verse, Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1843) paraphrases the tale as it is narrated by Ct.

The identity of the animal is not entirely clear. The term ṛkṣa is typically used of a bear, but, in the context of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, it normally refers to a type of primate (see R. Goldman 1989 and notes to 1.1.16). Cg and Cm clearly understand that this is a bear, using the unambiguous term bhallūka. Note, however, that, at 6.12.12, Cg clearly identifies the animal in this same story as a vānara, or monkey. Cf. note to 6.4.17.

"from me" me: D4,7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead [a]sti, "there is [a verse]."

35. "A superior person never requites evil on the part of evildoers with evil." na paraḥ pāpam ādatte pareṣāṃ pāpakarmaṇām: Literally, "A high one does not resort to evil with respect to others who have done evil acts or the evil acts of others." The commentators gloss paraḥ, "other," with either "wise (prājñaḥ—Ct, Cm, Cg)" or "righteous (dharmātmā—Cr)."

36. "whether people are wicked, virtuous, or even if deserving of death" pāpānāṃ vā śubhānāṃ vā vadhārhāṇām: The commentators are divided in their interpretations of this verse. According to Ct and Cm, the simple meaning of the verse is that one should show mercy to the good and wicked alike, since no one is without sin. (pāpānāṃ vadhārhāṇāṃ vā pāpajaneṣu vadhārheṣu śubhajaneṣu vadhārheṣu satsv api teṣv āryeṇa sajjanena karuṇaṃ kāruṇyaṃ kāryaṃ kartavyam ity arthaḥ—so Cm). Ct and Cr, however, understand the adjective vadhārhāṇām, "worthy of death or execution," to refer exclusively to evildoers (śubheṣv iva pāpeṣu vadhārheṣv api—so Ct). Cr, alone among the commentators, understands that the verse alludes to the relative seriousness of different offenses. He therefore argues that Sītā is saying that punishment should indeed be inflicted upon those who do wrong but that, in this case, the crimes of the rākṣasa women are not so serious as to merit the punishment of death. (tena yathāparādham eva daṇḍaḥ kārya iti sūcitam. tena rākṣasīnāṃ māraṇayogyo 'parādho nāstīti dhvanitam.) Cg and Cm understand that the term vadhārha applies equally to śubhānām, "the virtuous ones," reading the verse on the basis of its final pāda to indicate that, in some sense, everyone is guilty (sarvo 'py aparādhyatīty arthaḥ). Cg explores the theme of the merciful treatment of sinners rather more elaborately in a theological vein, harking back to the words of Rāma at 6.12.3, where, in the context of his acceptance of Vibhīṣaṇa as a refugee, he argues that one must accept those who come seeking refuge even if they are guilty. See 6.12.3 and note.

"leaping monkey" plavaṅgama: Cg understands Sītā's use of the kenning here to be a pointed one, suggesting that Hanumān [through his flightiness] desires something that he should not. (plavaṅgama. anabhilaṣitam evābhilaṣitavān khalu bhavān.) Ś2,B1,D2,3,8–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead athāpi vā, "or even."

"no one is entirely innocent" na kaścin nāparādhyati: Literally, "no one does not commit offenses." Cr, however, takes the phrase to mean "not everyone is guilty of the same degree of offense (kaścin nāparādhyatīti na sarvo 'pi yat kiñcid aparādhyatīty arthaḥ). This reading supports Cr's interpretation as indicated above. For other examples of double negatives in Vālmīki, see, for example, 6.37.10; 6.95.24; and notes.

37. "One should not harm" naiva kāryaṃ aśobhanam: Literally, "inauspiciousness indeed should not be practiced." The commentators generally agree in glossing "punishment (daṇḍanam)" for aśobhanam.

"the rākṣasas, who can take on any form at will" rakṣasāṃ kāmarūpiṇām: B1,D1, 2,8,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead krūrāṇāṃ pāpakarmaṇām, "those cruel evildoers."

"who . . . take pleasure in injuring people" lokahiṃsāvihārāṇām: The commentators agree that, because injuring others is the natural behavior of the rākṣasas, they should not be killed for it (rākṣasānāṃ parahiṃsaiva svabhāva ity ato 'pi na vadhyā iti—so Ct).

38. "by Rāma's illustrious wife, Sītā . . . to her" sītayā . . . sītāṃ rāmapatnīṃ yaśasvinīm: Literally, "by Sītā . . . to Rāma's wife, illustrious Sītā." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read aninditām, "blameless, irreproachable," for yaśasvinīm, "illustrious."

39. "fitting" yuktā: Cg takes the term to have a theological resonance. He sees it as meaning that Sītā is equal in virtues such as providing refuge, etc., to Rāma, who had proclaimed that he was the ultimate refuge of those seeking him. Cg quotes Rāma's earlier comment to Sugrīva to this effect at 6.12.12. Cg goes on to note that we are to understand that this sarga expresses Sītā's compassion, her tolerance of wrongs, and her effectiveness. (kiṃ punar madvidho jana iti svasyottamaśaraṇatvaṃ pratipāditavato rāmasya śaraṇyatvādiguṇavattayā sadṛśīty arthaḥ. anena sargeṇa sītāyā dayālutvam aparādhasahiṣṇutvaṃ ghaṭakatvaṃ coktam iti dhyeyam.)

"illustrious" yaśasvinī: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead guṇānvitā, "endowed with virtues."

40. "Foremost of monkeys" vānarottama: B1,D1–3,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the accusative singular adjective bhaktavatsalam, "loving toward his devotees," which would then modify Rāma.

41. "son of Pavana" pavanātmajaḥ: D9–11,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead mārutātmajaḥ, "son of Māruta."

"that immensely splendid hero" mahādyutiḥ: Literally, "whose radiance or splendor is great." D9–11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mahāmatiḥ, "of great intellect, wise."

"lifting Maithilī's spirits" harṣayan maithilīm: Literally, "causing Maithilī to rejoice."

42. "Noble lady" ārye: Literally, "noble one." D6,9–11,T2,3,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead adya, "today."

"just as the goddess Śacī gazes upon Indra, lord of the thirty gods" śacīva tridaśeśvaram: Literally, "like Śacī [does] the lord of the thirty." Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–4,8–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śacīvendraṃ sureśvaram, "as [does] Śacī, Indra, lord of the gods."

43. "as Śrī incarnate" sākṣād iva śriyam: Literally, "like Śrī in visible form."

"immensely swift" mahāvegaḥ: Ś2,B1,D1–3,5,7–12,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead mahātejāḥ, "of immense blazing energy."

"to where Rāghava waited" yatra rāghavaḥ: Literally, "where Rāghava [was]."

Following verse 43, Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–4,7–13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of KK (in brackets) read a passage of four lines [3192*]: "Then Hanumān, the minister of the foremost of the tawny monkeys,[1] reported in due sequence the reply that had been uttered by the daughter of the lord of the Janakas to Rāghava, who resembled the foremost of the thirty gods."

[1]"the minister of the foremost of the tawny monkeys" harivarasacivaḥ: In the critical reading, the term harivara-, "foremost among the tawny monkeys," is a reference to Sugrīva. D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sapadi harivaraḥ, "at once the foremost of the tawny monkeys." In this reading, the epithet harivara refers to Hanumān himself.

The meter is puṣpitāgrā.

Sarga 102

1. "Approaching" abhigamya: Literally, "having approached." Ś2,B1,D8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead so 'bhivādya, "having respectfully saluted."

"exceedingly wise" mahāprājñam: B1,D9–11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the nominative singular mahāprājñaḥ, thus making the adjective modify Hanumān rather than Rāma.

"who understood the matter at hand . . . these words" vacanam arthajñaḥ: We understand the term artha- in its sense of "matter, business, affair." The idea is that the tactful Hanumān is sensitive to the emotionally fraught situation into which he has been thrust. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 333), the only translator consulted to render this reading, appears to take artha- in its sense of "meaning," rendering, "who could speak weighing every word of his." Possibly he has mistakenly read the sequence as a compound. The commentators who read this variant are silent. D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead kamalapatrākṣam, "whose eyes were [like] lotus petals," which describes Rāma.

2. "Now you really must see" draṣṭum arhasi: Literally, "You should see."

"she on whose account we undertook this entire mission and achieved the culmination of our efforts" yannimitto 'yam ārambhaḥ karmaṇāṃ ca phalodayaḥ: Literally, "for whose sake [there was] this undertaking and the arising of the fruit of actions." Ct understands the term karmaṇām to refer to all the deeds undertaken by Rāma and his allies from the building of the bridge through the slaying of Rāvaṇa. The phrase then refers generically to the success of all these efforts (karmaṇāṃ setubandha- rāvaṇavadhādīnāṃ yaḥ phalodayaḥ phalarūpaḥ). Cr, Cg, and Cm, however, understand the term karmaṇām to refer to the various acts leading up to Rāvaṇa's defeat, with that culminating event itself being the fruition of the previous actions (karmaṇāṃ setubandhanādivyāpārāṇāṃ phalodayo rāvaṇajayaś ca—so Cm).

3. "was filled with joy . . . your" tava harṣam upāgamat: Literally, "your . . . went to joy." Ś2,B1,D1–3,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tvāṃ draṣṭum abhikāṅkṣati (D10,11, and Ct read draṣṭuṃ tvām), "she longs to see you."

4. "Since she trusted me because of the confidence I had earlier inspired in her, she said to me" pūrvakāt pratyayāc cāham ukto viśvastayā tayā: Literally, "I was addressed by her who was trusting because of previous confidence." The reference here is to the trust Hanumān inspired in Sītā during their conversations in the Sundarakāṇḍa (see 5.29–38, esp., sarga 34).

"who, together with Lakṣmaṇa, has accomplished his purpose." kṛtārthaṃ sahalakṣmaṇam: Ś2,D1–3,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead iti paryākulekṣaṇā, "thus [did she speak], her eyes brimming with tears."

5. "was suddenly plunged into gloomy thought" agacchat sahasā dhyānam: Cm, Ct, and Cg understand that Rāma is emotionally distraught at the dilemma in which he now finds himself. For if he were to take Sītā back after she had lived in Rāvaṇa's house, he would incur the severe censure of the people, while, if he were to reject his innocent wife, he would thereby commit a grave wrong. (rāvaṇabhavanoṣitasītāparigrahe mahān lokāpavādo bhavet. nirdoṣāyās tasyāḥ parityāge mahān doṣaḥ syād ity evaṃ kāryadausthyāt kiṃ kartavyam iti cintayāmāsety arthaḥ—so Cm.) Ct, however, in an evident allusion to the post-Vālmīkian tradition of the chāyā, or shadow, Sītā, adds that Rāma is actually plunged into thought as to how he can recover the principal or real Sītā from the fire [in which she was supposed to have been hiding] (vastuto mukhyasītālābho 'gneḥ kathaṃ syād iti cintātra). Ct is thus preparing us for the more benign interpretation of Sītā's fire ordeal that is characteristic of such versions of the Rāmāyaṇa as the Ādhyātmarāmāyaṇa (3.7.1) and the Rāmcaritmānas (Araṇyakāṇḍ doha 23 caupais 1–2; Laṅkākāṇḍ dohas 108–109, caupais 1–2) that know the chāyāsītā tradition. See 5.51.23 and note; and note to 3.43.34. See, too, KūrmaP 2.33.112ff. See 6.104.27; 6.106.4; and notes. See Introduction, p. 104.

*"and became somewhat tearful" āsīd bāṣpapariplutaḥ: Literally, "he was bathed in tears." It appears that the critical reading, "he was (āsīt)," is a misprint, although it is not so indicated in the errata. All available printed editions, north and south, read instead īṣat, "slightly, somewhat," and none of them shows any variant on this term in their apparatuses or variant readings. By the same token, the critical apparatus shows no manuscript or edition as reading īṣat. We have therefore emended the text accordingly. The word īṣat is, however, reflected only in the translations of Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 224), who renders, "al quanto suffuso di lacrime"; Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 380), "[une pensée qui lui fit répandre] quelques pleurs"; and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1845). The latter, however, reads the adverb not with the term bāṣpapariplutaḥ but with the phase agacchat . . . dhyānam, rendering, "became a bit thoughtful."

6. "Heaving long, hot sighs" dīrgham uṣṇaṃ ca niśvasya: Literally, "having sighed long and hotly." Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, believes that we are to take the length of Rāma's sighs as an indication of the length of his brooding (see verse 5 above). Cg also believes that the warmth of his sighs suggests Rāma's inner torment at the thought: "How can I possibly cause further suffering to Sītā, who has already suffered so much? (niḥśvāsadairghyeṇa cintādairghyaṃ gṛhyate. auṣṇyena kathaṃ kliṣṭāṃ tāṃ punaḥ kleṣayiṣyāmīty antastāpo vyajyate.)" D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sa dīrgham abhiniśvasya, "he, having sighed long."

"staring at the ground" medinīm avalokayan: Literally, "looking at the ground or earth." Cg understands Rāma's downcast glance to be a gesture indicating that he is lost in brooding thought (cintāpāravaśyābhinayaḥ).

"looking like a great storm cloud" meghasaṃkāśam: Literally, "resembling a cloud." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 333) understands the reference to be specifically to Vibhīṣaṇa's size, while Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1845) takes it to refer exclusively to his dark complexion. Cg, however, understands the compound to express Vibhīṣaṇa's haste to bring Sītā swiftly (meghasaṃkāśam ity anena sītānayane kṛtatvaratvam ucyate).

7. With regard to Rāma's instructions that Sītā be bathed and beautified before meeting him, Cg argues that this is a reference to the forthcoming abuse that Rāma will direct toward her (in sarga 103). For, Cg continues, it would not be appropriate for Rāma to direct harsh words toward someone in an obviously miserable condition. Still, Cg goes on, Rāma does not order the adornment of Sītā just so that he can reject her but rather so that he can have her proclaim her loyalty to him in the presence of the gods, Brahmā, etc. (alaṃkṛtyānayanādeśa uttarakālikaparuṣabhāṣaṇārhatāpratipādanāya. na hi tādṛśadaśāpannāṃ dīnāṃ paruṣaṃ bhāṣituṃ yujyate. tac ca tasyā na parityāgārthaṃ kiṃtu caturmukhādidevatāmukhena tasyāḥ pātivratyaṃ khyāpayitum.)

"her hair freshly washed" śiraḥsnātām: Literally, "having a bathed head." As Pagani (1999, p. 1675) notes, the image of an unbathed and unadorned Sītā is the one conjured up by Indrajit in sarga 68, where he seeks to demoralize Rāma's hosts by feigning the murder of Sītā before their very eyes. See 6.68.9–10 and note. A much more elaborate depiction of the disheveled Sītā is found at 5.13.18–35. See, too, S. Goldman 2000. See verse 10 and notes below.

*"Make haste!" mā ciram: Literally, "[let there] not [be] a long time." The critical apparatus, presumably in error, writes the two words together, which would yield the sense "[let there be] no short time," i.e., "don't hurry." All other editions consulted print the two words separately, a reading unnoted in the critical apparatus. We have emended accordingly.

8. "had his own wives instruct Sītā in these words" sītāṃ strībhiḥ svābhir acodayat: Literally, "with his own women, he urged or instructed Sītā or he had his own women instruct Sītā." We are inclined to agree with Cg, who reads the verb acodayat as a causative so that it is the wives of Vibhīṣaṇa who actually address Sītā in the following verse. Cg glosses, "he urged [her] through the mouth[s] of his own women (nija-strīmukhenācodayat)." The idea evidently is that the rules of decorum prevent Vibhīṣaṇa from addressing Sītā directly in the first instance (see 3.54.1; 5.19.2–3; and notes). The form codayati can also be understood as the simplex of the tenth gaṇa root √cud, "to urge, impel." This would be indistinguishable from the causative, and one could therefore also understand the phrase to mean "[Vibhīṣaṇa] in the company of his own women requested Sītā." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 380), followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1181), appears to render in this way, although his phrasing and that of Pagani make it possible or even probable to understand that Sītā is instructed to appear with her own women. The ambiguity of the French phrase "avec ses femmes," that is, "with his or her women," is, however, absent in Shastri's rendition, "Sita with her attendants" (1959, vol. 3, p. 333). This interpretation is highly deficient from both the grammatical and contextual points of view. Sītā has, of course, none of her attendants with her.

Following verse 8, D6,7,10,11,T2,3,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of two lines [3199*]: "Then, upon seeing virtuous Sītā, Vibhīṣaṇa, the majestic lord of the rākṣasas, cupped his hands to his forehead in reverence and respectfully said."

10. "without having bathed" asnātā: See note to verses 7 and 13 above. In the Mahābhārata version, Sītā appears in Rāma's presence before she has washed. She is stained with dust, dressed in black, but shines with beauty (MBh 3.275.9). Cf. 6.112.4 and notes.

11. "Rāma" rāmaḥ: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead rājā, "the king."

12. "whose vow was devotion to him" bhartṛbhaktivratā: Literally, "whose vow was devotion to [her] lord." D5,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read instead bhartṛbhaktyā vṛtā, "suffused with devotion to her husband."

13–14. Cs notes the passage in the Rāmopākhyāna in which Sītā is described as being presented before Rāma with her body covered with dirt, her hair matted, and clad in a black garment (MBh 3.275.9). He offers two rationalizations in an attempt to harmonize the seemingly contradictory accounts. According to the first, the Mahābhārata describes her as dirty because she has not bathed of her own free will (i.e., she has bathed, but is thus presumably not really clean), while here, too, she makes her toilet only to comply with Rāma's orders. Cs's second interpretation, based on the second half of the Mahābhārata verse, is that Rāma, recalling that Hanumān had described her earlier as dirty, continues to see her as such [even though she has, in fact, bathed]. (nanu mahābhārate tāṃ dṛṣṭvā cārusarvāṅgīṃ yānasthāṃ śokakarṣitām / malopacitasarvāṅgīṃ jaṭilāṃ kṛṣṇavāsasam ity ukteḥ katham atraivaṃ kathanam iti ced ucyate. svacchandenāṅgaśodhanādyabhāvena bhārate malopacitetyādyuktiḥ. atra tu rāmājñayā tasya jātatvena pratikarmaṇā saṃyuktām ityādyuktiḥ. athavā bhāratavacanottarārdhe hanumadvacanena malopacitasarvāṅgīṃ saṃsmarato rāmasya tathaiva darśanam iti pūrvam etādṛśīm iti vārthāṅgīkāreṇa vāvirodhopapatteḥ.)

"Young women . . . adorned her" yuvatībhir alaṃkṛtām: Literally, "adorned by young women." Ś,D8–12, the texts and printed editions of Ct, and the edition of Lahore (6.95.16) read instead saṃyuktāṃ pratikarmaṇā, "connected with or endowed with personal grooming."

"washed her hair" śiraḥsnātām: Literally, "head-washed." See note to verse 7 above.

"shining . . . that was draped in costly fabrics" dīptāṃ parārghyāmbarasaṃvṛtām: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sītāṃ rākṣasair vahanocitaiḥ, which lends the first half of the verse the meaning: "having made Sītā mount a palanquin [borne] by rākṣasas accustomed to carrying or fit to carry." See 6.106.2–3 and notes.

15. "the great man" mahātmānam: Literally, "the great one."

"noting that he was lost in brooding thought" jñātvābhidhyānam āsthitam: Literally, "having known [him] to be engaged in meditation or thought." B2,D6,7,10,11, T2,3,G1,2,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read api for abhi-, lending the sequence the meaning "even though he knew he was lost in brooding thought." The commentators and translators who share this variant reading differ as to who is the subject of the gerund jñātvā, "having known." Cr, with whom we agree, understands that Vibhīṣaṇa is the subject of both gerunds: abhigamya,

"having approached," and jñātvā, "having known." Ck, Ct, Cg, and Cm, however, understand Rāma himself to be the subject of the gerund jñātvā, and they then supply, as its object, "the arrival of Vibhīṣaṇa (vibhīṣaṇāgamanam—so Cg)." In their interpretation, Rāma, although he notes Vibhīṣaṇa's arrival, remains lost in thought. This interpretation is followed by the translations of Dutt (1893, p. 1504) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 333).

16. "Rāghava . . . three emotions—joy, sorrow, and anger—took hold of him" harṣo dainyaṃ ca roṣaś ca trayaṃ rāghavam āviśat: Literally, "a group of three—joy, sorrow, and anger—took possession of Rāghava." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead roṣaṃ harṣaṃ ca dainyaṃ ca rāghavaḥ prāpa śatruhā, "Rāghava, slayer of his enemies, experienced anger, joy, and sorrow."

Commentators differ somewhat on the exact causes of the various emotions that assail Rāma at this moment. Ck and Ct have the most detailed analysis according to which Rāma's anger is produced by the thought that he, his friends, and his brother have experienced so much suffering on account of Sītā, who is therefore viewed as the source of all their troubles. Alternatively, Ct and Ck suggest that Rāma's anger derives from the fact that Sītā had stayed so long in Rāvaṇa's house. This anger will give rise to her forthcoming oath. According to Ck and Ct, Rāma's joy is caused by his seeing Sītā from whom he had been so long separated, while his sorrow is a result of his thought that Sītā had experienced so much suffering while waiting so long for him. (roṣaṃ sarvānarthamūlayānayā kila sasuhṛdbhrātṛkeṇedaṃ bahuduḥkham anubhūtam iti roṣaḥ. yadvā rāvaṇagṛhe ciroṣitatvanimittaka āropito roṣo bhāviśapathopayogī. ciraviyuktāyādya darśanam iti harṣaḥ. cirakālaṃ matpratīkṣayānayā bahuduḥkham anubhūtam iti dainyam–so Ct.)

Cr believes that Rāma's sorrow derives from his recollection of Sītā's suffering (sītākleśasmaraṇajanitadīnatā). He offers no explanation of the other emotions. Cg and Cm understand that Rāma's joy is produced by Sītā's arrival, which was preceded by the slaying of Rāvaṇa. They attribute both his sorrow and his anger to Sītā's having dwelt in Rāvaṇa's house. Both commentators add a note, in keeping with the alternative explanation of Ck and Ct, that Rāma's anger will give rise to the forthcoming oath. (rāvaṇavadhapūrvakasītāgamena harṣo rāvaṇabhavanoṣitatvena dainyaṃ roṣaś ca. atra roṣo bhāviśapathopayogitvād āropita iti draṣṭavyam—so Cg.) Compare verse 35 below, where Sītā similarly experiences three emotions upon seeing Rāma.

17. "Then, perceiving that . . . now stood beside him . . . and debating inwardly" tataḥ pārśvagataṃ dṛṣṭvā savimarśaṃ vicārayan: Literally, "then having seen [him] who had gone to the side and reflecting with deliberation." We follow Cg and Cm, who gloss savimarśaṃ vicārayan, "reflecting with deliberation," with savitarkaṃ cintayan, "thinking with ratiocination." Cr interprets similarly. B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tato yānagatāṃ sītām. This lends the first line of the verse the meaning: "Then, debating inwardly with regard to Sītā, who had arrived in [her] conveyance . . ." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 381) appears to force the meaning of the verse so that, in his rendition, Rāma is concealing his joy in order to test Sītā, "Cependant, pour mettre à l'épreuve Sītā qui arrivait en litière . . . en dissimulant sa joie." In this rather forced interpretation, he is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 333) and Pagani (1999, p. 1181).

"miserable" ahṛṣṭaḥ: Literally, "unhappy." Ct and Ck explain the term to mean that because he is overwhelmed by the three emotions mentioned in the previous verse, Rāma exhibits no outward signs of happiness (uktadharmatrayākrāntatvāt prakaṭa- harṣarahitaḥ). M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read instead the accusative ahṛṣṭam, which, as Cg notes, can be interpreted adverbially with the verb abravīt in pāda d, yielding the sense "he spoke unhappily," or as an adjective modifying the word "vibhīṣaṇam" in pāda c. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 334), the only translator to render this variant, apparently chooses the former option, translating, "in a toneless voice." Dutt (1893, p. 1504) oddly renders "delighted," while, as noted above, Roussel and his followers understand that Rāma is actually dissimulating.

19. "Heeding those words" sa tad vacanam ājñāya: Literally, "having acknowledged or received that speech." Ś,B1,D1–3,7–12,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead tasya tad vacanaṃ śrutvā, "having heard those words of his."

"made an effort to have the area cleared on every side" utsāraṇe yatnaṃ kārayāmāsa sarvataḥ: Literally, "he caused an effort to be made with regard to driving away on every side." As Cg explains in his gloss of the term utsāraṇe, "excluding the people (jananivāraṇe)," Vibhīṣaṇa is trying to get the assembled crowds to draw back or disperse. The idea, as it will emerge in the following verses, is that he is trying to protect Sītā, a woman of high status, from the gaze of males outside her immediate family. Ś,B1,D1–3,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead utsāraṇaṃ tatra kārayāmāsa dharmavit, "that knower of righteousness caused a driving away to be done there." Compare the exclamations of the royal guards escorting Padmāvatī at the opening of Bhāsa's Svapnavāsavadattam.

20. "Guards" puruṣāḥ: Literally, "men." This term, whose most common meaning is "male or man" must be taken here in its sense of "functionary, officer, or attendant." Ś,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the accusative plural tān yodhān, "those warriors," which then serves as the object of the participle utsārayantaḥ, "clearing or driving away."

"wearing mail and turbans" kañcukoṣṇīṣiṇaḥ: Literally, "possessing kañcukas and uṣṇīṣas." The former term can refer to a suit of armor, a short-fitted jacket, or a corselet. Translators choose one or the other of these meanings. Cg, with whom we agree, glosses vārabāṇam, "arrow-proof [vest]." The second term can refer to a variety of headdresses, including turbans, diadems, etc. The point is that these articles of clothing are doubtless intended as insignia or uniforms of guards or court functionaries.

"holding staves and drums in their hands" vetrajharjharapāṇayaḥ: Like many of the translators consulted, we understand the compound to be in part a dvandva consisting of vetra-, "a bamboo cane, staff, or lathi," and jharjhara, "a drum or tambourine." Presumably the former are used to drive back the spectators, while the latter is sounded to get their attention. Ck and Ct, however, understand the second term to be an onomatopoetic word indicating a scraping or jingling sound. They gloss, "whose hands made a sound like 'jharjhara,' because of their wielding their staves (vetrair vetragrahaṇair jharjharās tādṛśaśabdavantaḥ pāṇayo yeṣām)." Among the translators consulted, only Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1846) follows this interpretation. Gorresio (6.99.23), whose reading is the same as the critical text's, understands the compound as we do, rendering, "Tenenti in mano tamburi e canne" (1858, vol. 10, p. 226). In a note, he observes, however, that the commentator (Cl) understands the term jharjhara to mean veṇu, "bamboo." Gorresio then observes that if he were to have accepted this interpretation, he would have had to translate, "Tenenti in mano bacchette di bambu e canne" (p. 312). B1,D1,13, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read jarjara-, "old, worn out, wounded," for the critical text's jharjhara. Cg extends the meaning of this term to "rough or harsh." He glosses the compound as "worn or rough because of the staff, that is, those whose hands had a roughness produced by always grasping [staves] (vetreṇa jarjarāḥ sadāvalambanajanitapāruṣyāḥ pāṇayo yeṣāṃ te)." This reading and Cg's interpretation are reflected only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 334), who renders, "Persons . . . their hands calloused wielding the whip."

"clearing the area" utsārayantaḥ: Literally, "clearing or driving away." See note to verse 19 above.

21. "apes" ṛkṣāṇām: See R. Goldman 1989. See, too, 1.16.10 and note. Cf. 6.4.17; 6.101.34; and notes.

"Then . . . withdrew to a distance" dūram utsasṛjus tataḥ: Literally, "then they escaped to a distance." We follow Cm and Cg, who gloss "they retired or fled (apacakramuḥ) for utsasṛjuḥ, they withdrew." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dūram uttasthur antataḥ, "they rose up from the inside to a distance." Ct glosses, "having arisen, they departed (utthāya jagmuḥ)." Cr takes antataḥ in the sense of "from the proximity (samīpadeśāt)," reading it with the participle utsāryamāṇāni, "being driven off," and then takes the adverb dūram, "far," with the finite verb uttasthuḥ, "they stood up." This yields, "being driven off from close in, they stood at a distance." This interpretation is rendered by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1846).

22. "all . . . there arose a sound" sarveṣāṃ dhvanir utthitaḥ: B1,D3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead niḥsvanaḥ sumahān abhūt, "there was a great sound."

"by a gale" vāyunā: Literally, "by the wind."

23. "when . . . saw them . . . on all sides" tān dṛṣṭvā samantāt: Literally, "having seen them . . . on all sides." B2,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dṛṣṭvātha jagatyām, "now having seen on the ground or earth." Among the translators who follow the text of Ct, only Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 381) attempts to translate this awkward and inferior reading. He renders the term jagatyām as "dans le pays."

"out of kindness and because he could not abide it" dākṣiṇyāt tadamarṣāc ca: The commentators understand the term to refer to Rāma's great tenderness toward the monkey troops who have served him (svabhaktavānarasenāsu . . . kṛpāviśeṣāt—so Ck, Ct). Ct and Ck note that Rāma is angry with Vibhīṣaṇa because he has driven the spectators back without an order to do so (madājñāṃ vinotsārayatīti vibhīṣaṇe 'marṣaḥ). The other commentators see Rāma's anger as directed more against the action of driving the monkeys away than against Vibhīṣaṇa personally, although in the following verses it is clear that Rāma is, indeed, angry with Vibhīṣaṇa.

24. "Furious" saṃrabdhaḥ: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read instead saṃrambhāt, "out of anger or agitation."

"seeming almost to burn him up with his eyes" cakṣuṣā pradahann iva: Literally, "as if burning with his eye." Burning someone with an angry glance is a common trope in Sanskrit literature. Here, however, Cg seems disturbed at the idea of Rāma's turning such a blazing glance in the direction of Vibhīṣaṇa toward whom he has expressed such gratitude and affection. He attempts to soften the force of the metaphor by suggesting that Rāma is really drinking up Vibhīṣaṇa with his eyes and that his staring hard at a figure who is a fit object of his respect is only caused by Rāma's inability to endure the harsh treatment of his [Rāma's] own people (cakṣuṣā pradahann iveti locanābhyāṃ pibann ivety uktādarapātrabhūtasya vibhīṣaṇasyaivaṃvidhadarśanaviṣayatākaraṇaṃ svajananigrahāsahiṣṇutvāt). Cg also proposes, as an alternative, that Rāma is particularly angry because annoyance [toward Vibhīṣaṇa] is superimposed on the anger he feels toward Sītā (as expressed in verse 16 above) (sītāviṣayasamāropitaroṣaviśeṣād vā).

25. "with complete disregard for my wishes" mām anādṛtya: Literally, "having disrespected or dishonored me." The idea, as we have attempted to convey in our translation, is that Rāma feels he has been slighted, since Vibhīṣaṇa has taken it upon himself to drive away the spectators without consulting him. Cr glosses, "without having asked (apṛṣṭvā)."

"this business" udyogam: Literally, "this undertaking, exertion, or industrious activity." B1,D1–3,6,9–11,T2,3,G1,2,M1,2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead udvegam, "trouble, agitation."

"These people are like my own kin." jano 'yaṃ svajano mama: Literally, "these people are my kinfolk." Since the reference is to the rākṣasas and monkeys, we follow Ck, Cr, and Ct, who understand, "like kinfolk, such as my brother, and so forth (bhrātrādisvajanasadṛśa eva—so Ck, Ct)." Cm glosses bandhujana, in which case we must understand bandhu in its sense of "friend" rather than "relative."

26. "curtains" tiraskriyāḥ: We follow Cm and Cg in taking the term here as the fourth in a list of specific screening devices designed to protect the modesty of elite women. They gloss, "curtains or veils (tiraskariṇyaḥ)." Ck, Ct, and Cr, however, take the word to be a generic term for screening devices of which the preceding three are examples (gṛhāditrayaṃ tiraskriyā āvaraṇam). Cf. GPP 2.15.20 and KumāSaṃ 1.14, where the term is used to indicate a screen or a veil.

"such royal treatment" īdṛśā rājasatkārāḥ: Literally, "such royal honors." We understand the adjective īdṛśāḥ, "of such a nature," to modify rājasatkārāḥ, "royal honors," which, we understand, with Cg, to be a reference to the royal treatment Vibhīṣaṇa accords Sītā by driving the vulgar crowd away from her path. Ck and Ct take the adjective īdṛśāḥ to refer elliptically to this treatment, while taking rājasatkārāḥ separately to refer to the mere insignia of royalty, such as the parasol and the fly whisk. (īdṛśā janāpasaraṇādivyāpārā na striyā āvaraṇam, kiṃtu rājasatkārā eva kevalaṃ chatracāmarādivat—so Ct.) See 6.47.13–14; 6.60.14; 6.115.13–16; 6.116.25–26; and notes.

"that shields a woman; it is her virtuous conduct alone" vṛttam āvaraṇaṃ striyaḥ: Literally, "[good] conduct is a covering or protection for a woman."

27. "there is nothing wrong with a woman being seen in public" na . . . darśanaṃ duṣyate striyaḥ: Literally, "the seeing of a woman is not wrong."

"during emergencies, periods of hardship" vyasaneṣu . . . kṛcchreṣu: The commentators attempt to differentiate the nearly synonymous terms. Ct understands the former to mean "a time of death or major calamity (vipattikālaḥ)," while he glosses the second as "trouble, suffering, pain (pīḍā)." Ck understands similarly but is more specific, glossing the former as "the time of the death of one's mother, father, etc. (mātṛpitrādivipattikālaḥ)" and the latter as "afflictions such as a serious illness, seizure (by demons?), etc. (mahārogagrahādipīḍā)." Cr similarly sees the first term as referring to "distress caused by a major emergency or calamity (āpatkālajanitaḥ khedaḥ)," while he takes the latter to be "suffering caused by illness, etc. (rogādijanitaḥ khedaḥ)." Cg takes the opposite view, understanding the first term to refer to personal distress such as separation from a beloved person (iṣṭajanaviyogeṣu), while he takes the second to refer to public upheavals such as the overthrow of the state, etc. (rājyakṣobhādiṣu). Cm understands similarly, glossing the first as "suffering caused by the death of a beloved person (iṣṭajanamaraṇaduḥkham)" and the second as "major calamities or emergencies (āpatsu)."

"in time of war" yuddhe: Literally, "in battle." Cg, attempting perhaps to find at least one of the conditions in Rāma's list that actually applies to the present circumstance, glosses, "on the battlefield (yuddhabhūmau)," presumably on the understanding that Rāma is awaiting Sītā in the area outside the walls of Laṅkā, which had, until recently been a battlefield. D2,4,6,9–11,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead yuddheṣu, "in or during battles,"

"at a ceremony of choosing her husband" svayaṃvare: Literally, "in a self-choice." Sītā was given to Rāma at Bālakāṇḍa 66 as the prize in a contest of strength. The term svayaṃvara, "self-choice," is not used there. However, the event is described several times as a svayaṃvara during a conversation between Sītā and Anasūyā at Ayodhyākāṇḍa 110. See 2.110.23,37,57, and notes. The term is used in the Bālakāṇḍa by the daughters of Kuśanābha in their unfortunate encounter with Vāyu, where, refusing his advances, they claim they will never choose their own husband. See 1.31.18 and notes.

28. "She has been through a war" saiṣā yuddhagatā: D9–11,T1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead saiṣā vipadgatā, "she has been through hardship."

"and has been placed in tremendous hardship" kṛcchre mahati ca sthitā: Cg, the only commentator to share and remark on this reading, is similarly alone in taking the term kṛcchre, "hardship," here to refer to Sītā's impending ordeal by fire (vakṣyamāṇāgnipraveśe). See sarga 104. D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead kṛcchreṇa ca samanvitā, "[she is] filled with suffering. Cr glosses, "filled with mental suffering (mānasikaduḥkhena)."

"there would be nothing wrong in her being seen publicly" darśane 'syā na doṣaḥ syāt: Literally, "there would be no fault in the seeing of her." See S. Goldman 1994 and 1996.

29. Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr substitute a passage of two lines [3213*]: "Let her therefore leave the palanquin and approach on foot. Let these forest-dwelling monkeys see Vaidehī in my presence."

30. "by Rāma . . . his" rāmeṇa . . . rāmasya: Literally, "by Rāma . . . of Rāma."

"reflecting on all of this" savimarśaḥ: Literally, "with thought or deliberation." The commentators differ as to the content of Vibhīṣaṇa's deliberations. Ck and Ct understand that he is thinking the following: "Since he spoke in this fashion, probably he has no respect for her and has no desire to take her back. If those two things were present, then he would sanction appropriate behavior with respect to the queen. (evaṃvādād asyāṃ prāyeṇābhimāno nāsti jighṛkṣā ca nāsti. yadi tau syātāṃ tadā rājapatnyucitam upacāram anumanyetaiveti cintāyukta ity arthaḥ.)"

Cm understands that Vibhīṣaṇa is wondering, "What is the lord's thinking with regard to Sītā? (sītāviṣaye svāminaś cittaṃ kīdṛśam iti vicāraḥ)." Cg, in keeping with his interpretation of the term kṛcchra, "hardship," in verse 28 above, to refer to Sītā's upcoming fire ordeal, glosses vimarśa as "filled with foreboding because of [Rāma's] use of the word 'hardship' (kṛcchraśabdaprayogāt sāśaṅkaḥ)."

32. "Because of his demeanor" iṅgitaiḥ: Literally, "by the gestures." The term is frequently used to indicate bodily movements or facial expressions that betray inner emotions or hidden intentions.

"seemed to show no regard for his wife" kalatranirapekṣaiś ca: Literally, "which had disregard for the wife."

Although the fact is not noted in the critical apparatus, this verse does not belong to the texts of Ct, Ck, and Cr. It is omitted entirely from NSP and placed in parentheses without a number in GPP, which, in a footnote, mentions that it belongs [only] to the text of Cg. It is, however, found in the printed editions of VSP, KK, and Gita Press.

33. "Trying to make her body appear small in her shame" lajjayā tv avalīyantī sveṣu gātreṣu: Literally, "through her shame, disappearing into her own limbs." As Ck and Ct explain, Sītā is contracting her limbs because of the shame produced by her having to approach her husband in full view of the people (janasamakṣabhartṛsamīpasthitijanyalajjayāvalīyantī saṃkocaṃ gacchantī—so Ct). The idea, as we see it, is that Sītā is attempting to make herself as invisible as possible before the inappropriate gaze of the male spectators. Compare 5.17.3; 5.23.5; 5.56.57; and notes, where, in fear and shame, she similarly shrinks away from the gaze of Rāvaṇa.

34. "there before the assembled people" janasaṃsadi: Literally, "in the assembly of the people."

"murmuring" bhāṣiṇī: Literally, "saying, speaking."

"My noble husband" āryaputra: Literally, "O son of the noble [elder.]" This is the conventional term of address used by a wife to a husband, especially in the Sanskrit dramas. See 2.24.2, where Sītā also uses this term to address Rāma. See 6.23.34 and note. Cf. 6.61.19 and note.

D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse.

35. "whose face was more radiant than the moon . . . moonlike face" mukham . . . saumyaṃ saumyatarānanā: Literally, "she of the exceedingly lovely face . . . the handsome face." The verse plays on the ambiguity of the term saumya, which means both "lovely, gentle," on the one hand, and "moonlike, lunar," on the other. The moon is the literature's virtually universal standard of comparison for facial beauty. Cg notes that the term is used to express the radiance of Sītā's face at the time of her gazing [on Rāma's face] (udīkṣaṇakālikamukhaprasādam āha saumyeti). Cf. 3147* following notes to 6.99.44; see, esp., n. 2.

"with amazement, joy, and love" vismayāc ca praharṣāc ca snehāc ca: Literally, "out of amazement and out of joy and out of love." The three emotions experienced by Sītā here form a balanced and interesting contrast to those felt by Rāma in verse 16 above. Commentators offer a variety of explanations for the different emotions. Ck and Ct understand that Sītā is astonished at the sight of the abundance of so many friends and followers (bahumitraparivārasampattidarśanajo vismayaḥ—so Ct). Cr, on the other hand, thinks that her amazement is produced by the sight of Rāma's anger (vismayo rāmakopadarśanajanitaḥ). Cg and Cm think that she is simply amazed to see Rāma once again, something she thought impossible (aghaṭitarāmapunardarśanād vismayaḥ—so Cg).

Ck, Cg, Cm, and Ct all agree that Sītā's joy derives from seeing her beloved (priyadarśanajo harṣaḥ—so Ct). Only Cg comments on the term sneha, "love," which he explains as natural (svābhāvikaḥ) to Sītā.

36. "her beloved's face . . . which was as lovely as the full moon rising . . . her face became as radiant as the hare-marked moon" priyasya / vadanam uditapūrṇacandrakāntaṃ vimalaśaśāṅkanibhānanā tadāsīt: Literally, "the beloved's face, whose splendor was that of the risen full moon . . . [she] became one whose face resembled the bright hare-marked one." The poet echoes his lunar imagery from the previous verse. Cg, continuing in his anticipation of the emotionally fraught scenes that are to immediately follow, claims that the comparison of Rāma's face to the newly risen full moon indicates that it was red with rage, while the comparison of Sītā's face to the bright moon suggests its waning in the period that is to follow. (uditapūrṇacandrety anena koparaktatvam uktam. vimalaśaśāṅkety anenottarakālikakṣayaḥ sūcyate.)

The meter is puṣpitāgrā.

Sarga 103

1. "meekly" prahvām: Literally, "humble, meek." Cg, taking his cue from 6.102.33, understands that Sītā is crouching down in shame (lajjayā namrām).

"as rage simmered in his heart" hṛdayāntargatakrodhaḥ: Literally, "having rage gone into his heart." Ś,B1,D1–4,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead hṛdayāntargataṃ bhāvam. This lends the second half of the verse the sense "he began to express the emotion within his heart."

2. "my good woman" bhadre: This mode of address is somewhat distant and is clearly meant to foreshadow the harsh words Rāma will now use to address Sītā. Among the commentators consulted, only Cg takes note of this formal mode of address, observing that it is a term used to address someone who is not a close relation (bhadra ity asaṃbandhanivedakasambodhanam). Prior to Sītā's abduction, Rāma typically addressed her by her proper name, patronymic, etc., e.g., Sītā, Jānakī, Maithilī (2.23.18,19; 2.21.2,3,4,8; 3.9.2,4; etc.), or with terms of endearment such as abalā ("frail lady," 2.25.3,12), bhīrū ("timid lady," 3.46.18; 3.53.22), etc. He will do so again after the public demonstration of her faithfulness by a fire ordeal at sargas 104–105 as, for example, at 6.111.3,4,5,11, etc. In this context, the use of the formal address is both pointed and striking. Cf. verses 23–25 below, where Rāma again addresses Sītā by name.

"I . . . in battle" mayā raṇe: Literally, "by me in battle." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead raṇājire, "on the battlefield."

"Whatever there was to be done through manly valor, I have now accomplished." pauruṣād yad anuṣṭheyaṃ tad etad upapāditam: Literally, "What was to be performed out of manliness, that very thing has been done." Cg observes that the real meaning of this statement is that Rāma has acted merely out of the demands of the warrior code and not in an effort to recover Sītā. (pauruṣād yad anuṣṭheyaṃ tad eva kṛtam. na tu tvallābhāya yatnaḥ kṛta iti bhāvaḥ.) Ś,D8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mayaitat, "by me this [has been done]," for tad etat.

3. "my wrath is appeased" gato 'smy antam amarṣasya: Literally, "I have gone to the end of [my] anger." Cg, Cm, and Cr all gloss antam, "end," with "fruit, result, reward (phalam)." This interpretation is explicitly followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1848), which translates, "I have attained the reward of my indignation."

"eliminated" uddhṛtau: Literally, "pulled up, eradicated." Cg glosses, "uprooted (nirmūlitau)." Ś,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nihatau, "slain, struck down."

4. "witnessed" dṛṣṭam: Literally, "seen." Ck and Ct understand the implied subject to be "by the people or the worlds (lokaiḥ)." Cr suggests adding instead "by you (tvayā)."

"I am . . . master of myself" prabhavāmi . . . cātmanaḥ: Literally, "and I rule over myself or my mind." Along with most translators consulted, we understand, as does Cg, who glosses, "free, independent (svatantraḥ)," that Rāma is expressing that he has discharged his obligation to avenge himself on Rāvaṇa. Cr, however, understands, "I have become powerful through my own efforts (ātmanaḥ svaprayatnāt prabhavāmi prabhāvavān bhavāmi)." The verb pra √bhū has a spectrum of meanings that include both temporal and supernatural power. Thus, it is possible to understand Cr's comment in a theological sense that Rāma, having through his own human efforts accomplished the destruction of Rāvaṇa, is now free to regard himself once more as the Lord (prabhu).

5. "wanton" calacittena: Literally, "whose mind is moveable or fickle." The term normally refers to someone whose mind is flighty or fickle (compare 6.45.9) and most translators who share this reading render accordingly. This meaning, however, seems a bit weak given the context, where the reference is not to Rāvaṇa's flightiness but rather to his libidinous nature.

"through manly action, I" mānuṣeṇa mayā: The phrase can be interpreted in two ways. The word mānuṣa can be taken either as a noun, in the sense of "man, mortal," or as an adjective, in the sense of "manly, human," standing elliptically for "manly action or effort." In the first interpretation, the two words are in apposition and serve collectively as the kartṛ, or subject, of the participle jitaḥ, "conquered." Thus the sense would be "[conquered] by me, a man." In the second, mānuṣeṇa would be the karaṇa, or instrument, lending the phrase the meaning "[conquered] by me through manly action." Cr appears to favor the first interpretation; Ck, Ct, and Cg, the second; while Cm offers both. We believe that the second interpretation is superior in this context, since it is in keeping with the epic's continuing meditation on the opposition between fate (daiva) and manly or human effort (pauruṣa). See 6.6.7–8; 6.98.23; and notes. See, too, Pollock 1986, pp. 33–36. All translations consulted that share the reading of the critical edition have chosen the first alternative, rendering either "man" or "a mere man." Several northern manuscripts and the edition of Gorresio (6.100.5) appear to gloss the term in favor of the second interpretation, reading instead pauruṣāt, "through manly force or action." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 229) translates, "dalla forza."

6. "What human purpose can a man serve if his spirit is so feeble" kas tasya puruṣārtho 'sti puruṣasyālpatejasaḥ: Literally, "what is the human goal of a man of little energy." The term puruṣārtha here is strongly resonant of its common śāstraic use to refer to the four specified goals of human life: dharma, artha, kāma, and mokṣa. Here the term may refer, by a kind of metonymy, to life itself. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 335), the only translator consulted to render the critical reading, perhaps captures this sense best in translating, "what earthly use is that . . . fellow . . .?"

A number of manuscripts, the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr, and the printed editions of Gorresio and Lahore substitute kas tasya pauruṣeṇārtho mahatāpy alpacetasaḥ, "of what use is even great manly strength to such a small-minded person?"

9. "of my devoted" bhaktasya: Literally, "of the devoted [Vibhīṣaṇa]." Ś,B1,3,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ca tathā, "and as well."

"evil" nirguṇam: Literally, "devoid of virtues." Cr understands, "characterized by prohibited qualities (niṣiddhaguṇaviśiṣṭam)."

10. "As Rāma was saying these words in that fashion" ity evaṃ bruvatas tasya . . . rāmasya tad vacaḥ: D10,11,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read śrutvā,

"having heard," for tasya, "of him [Rāma]." This lends the line the meaning: "When Sītā had heard those words of Rāma, who was speaking in this fashion."

Ck and Ct suggest that, by the term evam, "in this fashion," we are to understand that Rāma is speaking in such a way as to convey the meaning "I have no use for you" and that it is this punitive attitude that causes Sītā to become tearful through sorrow (ity evaṃ vadata [v.l. for bruvata] ity arthāt tvayā me prayojanaṃ nāstīti pratiphalanād duḥkhenāśrupariplutā babhūva). Cg and Cm indicate that Rāma's words make clear his lack of interest [in Sītā] (tadvaco nairāśyadyotakaṃ vacaḥ).

11. "Rāma . . . his anger . . . like the raging flame . . . of a . . . fire" rāmasya . . . krodhaḥ . . . pāvakasyeva: Literally, " the anger of Rāma, who was like a fire." The simile is defective in that there is no expressed upamāna for Rāma's anger. Cg, the only commentator who reads the line and remarks on it, notes that we are to carry over the word krodhaḥ, "anger," to the second half of the verse, understanding that the anger of a fire is its intense blazing (pāvakasya krodho 'tīva jvalanam). In something of the same spirit, we supply the phrase "like the raging flame."

"his anger flared up once more" bhūyaḥ krodho 'bhyavartata: Ś,B1,3,D1–4,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead samīpe hṛdayapriyām, lending the line the meaning: "But as Rāma gazed upon his heart's beloved [who stood] nearby . . ." This line now construes with 3224*, line 1.

Following 11ab, D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert lines 1 and 2 of a passage of three lines [3224*, lines 1 and 3—here following the text of Ct as given at GPP 6.115.11cd–12ab]: "[But as Rāma gazed upon his heart's beloved,] the king's heart was divided within him out of fear of the people's censure.[1] [He then spoke to fair-hipped Sītā,—GPP 6.115.12cd] her eyes like petals of the blue lotus and her hair dark and waving.[2]"

B1,D4, and the texts and printed editions of Ct (NSP and Gita Press omit 11cd, GPP in brackets unnumbered between 6.115.10–11, unnoted in the critical apparatus) omit 11cd.

12. "Knitting his brows on his forehead and glancing at her from the corner of his eye" sa baddhvā bhrukuṭiṃ vaktre tiryakprekṣitalocanaḥ: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct (GPP in brackets for 6.115.11ab) omit this line.

"on his forehead" vaktre: Literally, "on the face."

"glancing at her from the corner of his eye" tiryakprekṣitalocanaḥ: Literally, "the gaze of whose eyes was oblique." We follow the interpretation of Cm and Cg. Cg understands that Rāma is staring straight ahead of him because he cannot bear the sight of Sītā (tiryakprekṣaṇaṃ puratoḥ sītādarśanāsahiṣṇutvakṛtam). The only translator to share this reading, Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 336), renders, "looking askance."

"he spoke harshly to Sītā" abravīt paruṣaṃ sītām: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead avadad vai varārohām, "he spoke to that fair-hipped one."

13–14. "Sītā, I have accomplished all that . . . In my wrath . . . from the hands of my enemy" tatkṛtaṃ sakalaṃ sīte śatruhastād amarṣaṇāt: Ś,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tatkṛtaṃ rāvaṇaṃ hatvā mayedaṃ mānakāṅkṣiṇā, "Having killed Rāvaṇa, this was done by me who was desirous [of defending my] honor."

"I have won you back" nirjitā: Literally, "[you] are won back or conquered [by me]." The pronouns "I (mayā)" and "you (tvam)" must be supplied, as Cg and Cm suggest.

"just as . . . Agastya won back the southern lands that had been inaccessible to all living beings" jīvalokasya . . . / agastyena durādharṣā . . . dakṣiṇeva dik: Literally, "just as

[was] the southern quarter, unapproachable to the world of the living, by Agastya." The ṛṣi Agastya is widely credited in Sanskrit literature for having led the advance of Aryan-brahmanical civilization into peninsular India. See Gorresio 1858, vol. 10, p. 313, n. 103; and Lassen 1858–1874, pp. 582–83. Ck, Ct, Cr, and Cg note that the southern lands were off limits to most beings because of the fear of the demons Ilvala and Vātāpi (Cg, Ilvala only), who infested them. The story of Agastya's destruction of these demons is told at MBh 3.94–97.

We follow the reading of Cg, Cr, Ct, and Ck, who argue that we should construe the compound jīvalokasya, "the world of the living," with durādharṣā, "unassailable, unapproachable," even though the two words are widely separated in the verse. Cm, however, understands the form as a genitive of specification (nirdhāraṇe ṣaṣṭhī) and prefers to read it with nirjitā, "won back," in 14a, understanding that Agastya won back the southern region in the midst of living creatures. (jīvalokasyeti nirdhāraṇe ṣaṣṭhī. prāṇijātasya madhye . . . agastyena . . . nirjiteti.)

Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1849) understands the term durādharṣā, "unapproachable, unassailable," to refer to Sītā, rendering, "Though difficult to approach for the world of mortals (for fear of Rāvaṇa), you have been won (back)."

15. "it was not on your account" na tvadartham: Dutt (1893, p. 1507), perhaps reading a variant (cf. 3226*, where vā is read for na), translates, "[all my labour, in the battle-field . . .] is for thee."

17. "as profoundly disagreeable to me as is a bright lamp to a man afflicted with a disease of the eye" dīpo netrāturasyeva pratikūlāsi me dṛdham: Literally, "as sharply disagreeable to me as a lamp to one with eye disease." Cg, interestingly, observes that, by the use of this comparison, Rāma is really saying that Sītā is without fault. What is suggested, Cg goes on, is that it is through Rāma's own doubts that he has made her disagreeable. (anenopamānena vastutaḥ sītāyā doṣo nāsti. svasaṃdehenāhaṃ pratikūlīkaromīti vyajyate.) The idea is that it is not the lamp's fault that it pains the diseased eye.

18. "Here are the ten directions." etā daśa diśaḥ: Rāma is suggesting that Sītā is free to go anywhere she pleases.

"I have no further use for you" kāryam asti na me tvayā: Literally, "of [by] me there is nothing to be done with you.

"my good woman" bhadre: See note to verse 2 above.

19. "powerful" tejasvī: Literally, "possessing blazing energy."

"his heart tinged with affection" suhṛllekhena cetasā: Literally, "with a mind or heart having the tracing or coloring of a friend." We follow Cm, Cv, Crā, and Cg, who understand the adjective to mean "conjoined with an excess of longing (raṇaraṇakātiśayayuktenety arthaḥ—so Cg). D10,11,T2,3,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead suhṛllobhena cetasā, "with a mind or heart possessing desire, passion, or lust for one's companion."

20. "just risen" -paribhraṣṭām: Literally, "fallen from." Ś,Ñ2,V,B,D1–4,7,8,10–12,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cr read instead parikliṣṭām (B1,D4, parikliṣṭā) literally, "pained, tormented, pressed." Translations that follow the text of Ct render this word variously with such terms as "pressed, squeezed, soiled, taken, etc."

"by his lustful eye" duṣṭena cakṣusā: Literally, "with a depraved or corrupted eye."

21. "I have recovered my reputation, and that is the purpose for which I won you back." tadarthaṃ nirjitā me tvaṃ yaśaḥ pratyāhṛtaṃ mayā: Literally, "By me reputation has been taken back. For that purpose you were won back by me." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead yad[tad—D9–11]arthaṃ nirjitā me tvaṃ so 'yam āsādito mayā, "I have accomplished the purpose for which I won you back."

"I do not love you anymore." nāsti me tvayy abhiṣvaṅgaḥ: Literally, "of me there is not love or attachment for [in respect to] you."

"hence" itaḥ: Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4–6,8–12,G2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the somewhat contextually awkward quotation marker iti.

22. "I have made up my mind in saying this" iti pravyāhṛtam . . . mayaitat kṛtabuddhinā: Literally, "[this] has been said in this fashion by me whose mind is made up." D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read tad adya for iti pra-, yielding the meaning "so this very day it has been said by me whose mind is made up."

"my good woman" bhadre: See note to verse 2 above.

23. "set your mind on" niveśaya manaḥ: Literally, "fix or focus your heart or mind on." Compare the usage at BhagGī 12.8b (mayi buddhiṃ niveśaya). See note below on "or on whomever you please."

"on Sugrīva, lord of the monkeys, or on the rākṣasa lord Vibhīṣaṇa" sugrīve vānarendre vā rākṣasendre vibhīṣaṇe: D2,3,9–11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śatrughne vātha sugrīve rākṣase vā vibhīṣaṇe. This lends the line the meaning "on Śatrughna, or on Sugrīva, or on the rākṣasa Vibhīṣaṇa."

"or on whomever you please" yathā vā sukham ātmanaḥ: Literally, "or just as is pleasing to [your] mind or yourself." Ct understands that Sītā is being offered the option of returning to her parental home (svamātṛpitṛkule vā ity arthaḥ). This phrase could also be construed to be offering Sītā the choice of the specific individuals mentioned in verses 22 and 23. The issue is of significance in keeping with the śāstraic dictum that a woman can never be independent. So, for the commentators at least, Rāma is not giving Sītā away as a wife to the individuals named but rather assigning her to the house of a close relative, who would protect her. Thus, Cm understands that Sītā should pick one of those named individuals who are like sons to her so that she can be supported. (putrasadṛśeṣu lakṣmaṇādiṣu madhye yatra kutrāpi mano niveśaya. ātmabharaṇārtham iti śeṣaḥ.) This culturally sensitive issue is addressed most elaborately by Cg, who states that a woman with no protector of her own must get her living in the house of someone and that is why she is supposed to choose from among males such as Lakṣmaṇa, etc. This is because it is enjoined in the śāstras that a woman rejected by her husband is to live in the house of a male relative. In this context, Cg refers to the famous quote from Manusmṛti 9.3 that a woman must never be independent. Cg concludes by insisting that it would be improper to understand the passage in any other way. (atra lakṣmaṇādau manaskaraṇaṃ nāmānāthāyā rakṣakatvena tat tadgṛhe vartanam. bhartrā parityaktāyāḥ striyā bandhugṛhe vāsavidhānāt. na strīsvātantryam arhatīti smṛteḥ na tv atrānyathā grahītuṃ yuktam.) See notes to 6.104.4 on 3229*.

24. "would not long have left you unmolested" na . . . tvām . . . / marṣayeta ciram: Literally, "he would not have put up with or excused you for long." Ck and Cr, the only commentators to remark on this phrase, understand the adverb ciram, "for long," to construe with the participle parivartinīm, "residing" (Cr's v.l. paryavasthitām), giving the sense "who had long resided." V2,D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the somewhat awkward na . . . tvām . . . / marṣyaty aciram, "he did not spare you for a short time." Ct does not comment on the term aciram. Translators who follow the text of Ct either translate as we do, i.e., "for long (ciram)," or ignore the term entirely.

25. "Maithilī" maithilī: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead māninī, "the self-respecting or proud woman." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 384), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 336) and Pagani (1999, p. 1184), understands the variant to mean that Sītā had hitherto long been honored [by her husband].

"and trembled violently" subhṛśaṃ pravepitā: Ś,B1,D2,3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rudatī tadā bhṛśam, "[she] weeping copiously or bitterly then [shed tears]."

"a vallarī creeper" vallarī: The plant is identified by Apte (s.v.) and MW (s.v.) as Trigonella foenum-graecum (fenugreek or methī). However, the term can also apply to a creeper or any creeping plant. Ś2,D1,5,8,12,T1,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg read instead sallakī [v.l. śallakī]. Cg notes that this is a type of creeper that elephants feed upon (gajabhakṣyalatāviśeṣaḥ). Cm understands that the simile depends on the fact that the sallakī creeper emits a milky sap when it is broken by the trunks of elephants and that this is the basis of the comparison with Sītā's shedding tears (gajendrahastābhihatā sallakīlatā yathā kṣīraṃ muñcati tathā bāṣpaṃ mumocety arthaḥ). According to Apte (s.v.) the sallakī is a tree of which elephants are very fond. It is identified by MW (s.v.) as the tree Boswellia thurifera (frankincense), which seems inappropriate in the context. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 336) renders the variant of Cg and incorporates the comments of Cm. He translates, "like the sallakī creeper, crushed by the giant tusker, pouring out its juice."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 104

1. "in this cruel and horrifying manner" paruṣaṃ lomaharṣaṇam: Literally, "harshly [and] in a hair-raising manner."

"deeply" bhṛśam: Literally, "greatly, intensely." D5,9–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śrutvā, "having heard or having listened." This reading presupposes an unexpressed object such as vacaḥ, "speech," which would then be modified by paruṣam and lomaharṣaṇam as adjectives.

2. "cutting" rūkṣam: Literally, "harsh, rough, cruel." Ś,V1,B1,D1,2,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ghoram, "terrible, horrible."

"overcome with shame" lajjayā vrīḍitābhavat: Literally, "she became ashamed with embarrassment." Cg and Cm, the only commentators to share this reading and remark on it, gloss, "her face completely downcast (atinamramukhī)." Ś,B1,D1,2,6–8,10–12,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead lajjayāvanatābhavat, "she was bowed or bent down with shame."

3. "Pierced, as it were, by those verbal barbs" vākśalyais taiḥ saśalyeva: Literally, "as if [pierced] with darts by those word-darts." Ś,V2,B3,D6,7,9–12,G3, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read -śaraiḥ, "arrows," for the more generic -śalyaiḥ, "darts."

4. "tear-stained" bāṣpaparikliṣṭam: Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D1,2,4,8–12,M1,2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the slight variant -klinnam, "damp, moist," for -kliṣṭam, "stained."

Following verse 4, Ñ,V,B,D4,13 add a passage of two lines [3229*]: "I was born in a noble family, and I was given into a noble family. Lord of kings, do you now wish to give me to others as if I were some prostitute?[1]"

[1]"some prostitute" śailūṣīm: The term most generally refers to an actress, but, like its male counterpart, śailūṣa, it also refers to a person of loose morals. The passage is of particular note as it echoes the words Sītā utters at 2.27.8, where she accuses Rāma of acting like a pimp (śailūṣa), eager to hand her over to other men. See R. Goldman 2004. The verse perhaps sheds light on the interpretation of Rāma's instructions in the previous sarga (6.103.23) that she should go off with one of his brothers or allies or "whomever you please." In the previous passage, the commentators (Ck, Cm, and Cg) are at pains to assert that she should merely reside as a dependent in the household of these individuals rather than, as the passage seems to suggest, as a consort.

5. "heroic prince" vīra: Literally, "O hero."

"improper" asadṛśam: Cm, Cg, and Ct understand the term to mean that Rāma's words are improper for him to say and equally improper for Sītā to hear (tvayā vaktuṃ mayā śrotuṃ cāyogyam).

"as some vulgar man . . . to his vulgar wife" prākṛtaḥ prākṛtām iva: Literally, "like an ordinary [male] . . . to an ordinary [female]."

6. "by my own virtue" svena cāritreṇa: Literally, "by my own conduct." The reference, as Cm, Ck, Ct, and Cr point out, is to Sītā's exemplary devotion to her husband (pātivratyalakṣaṇena—Ck, Ct).

7. "If you really knew me, you would abandon your suspicion." parityajemāṃ śaṅkāṃ tu yadi te 'haṃ parīkṣitā: Literally, "If I were tested by you, you would have to abandon this suspicion." Our translation follows the suggestions of Cg and Cs. Cg glosses parīkṣitā, "tested, tried," with "one whose true nature is known (jñātasvabhāvā)." Cs explains, "If I were to be tested by you, then you would give up the wrong-headed thought: 'If corruption is found in one [woman], then all [women] must be similar' (yadi te tvayāhaṃ parīkṣitā syāṃ tademāṃ śaṅkām ekasyā yatra kvāpi duṣṭatve sarvā api tādṛśya iti viparītasambhāvanāṃ tyaja tyakṣyasi)."

8. "another's body" gātra-: Literally, "limbs, body."

"I had no choice in this matter. It is fate that was to blame here." kāmakāro na me tatra daivaṃ tatrāparādhyati: Literally, "There was no voluntary action of mine in this; fate offends or is to blame in this."

9. "But I could not control my body, which was in the power of another. What could I have done?" parādhīneṣu gātreṣu kiṃ kariṣyāmy anīśvarā: "What will I, powerless over my limbs that were under the power of another, do?" One can also construe the line slightly differently to mean: "Since my limbs were under the control of another, what could I, powerless, have done?" See S. Goldman 2001.

10. "my love" mānada: Literally, "bestower of pride." This is a common term of endearment for lovers in the literature. See notes to 6.13.7–8; 6.108.5, 3310*, n.1; and 6.110.6.

"despite our long-nurtured love and intimacy" sahasaṃvṛddhabhāvāc ca saṃsargeṇa ca: Literally, "because of the emotion that has grown together and contact." We understand the compound sahasaṃvṛddhabhāvāt as do Ck and Cr, in the sense of "mutual love that has grown up simultaneously (saha yugapat saṃvṛddho bhāvaḥ parasparānurāgalakṣaṇaḥ—so Ct)." Cg, Cm, and Cv put the two terms together as a dvandva, which they then explain as "contact and growing together, which has as its cause knowledge of one's true nature (svabhāvaparijñānahetubhūtasahasaṃvardhanasaṃsargāv api—so Cg)."

11. "When . . . hero" yadā vīraḥ: D9–11,G1,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mahā-, "great," for yadā. This lends the pāda the sense "that great hero was dispatched by you."

"to search for me" avalokakaḥ: Literally, "a looker." We follow the commentators, who gloss the infinitive avalokayitum, which they further gloss as "to search (anveṣṭum)."

"heroic prince" vīra: Literally, "O hero." D9–11,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rājan, "O king."

"while I was still being held in Laṅkā" laṅkāsthāham: Literally, "I [was] situated in Laṅkā." Given the syntax of the critical text with its sequence of relative and correlative clauses governed by the adverbs yadā and tadā, "when" and "then," respectively, we must understand Sītā, who is still in Laṅkā, to be referring to the period of her captivity. As noted above, D9–11,G1,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute the adjective mahā-, "great," for the relative adverb yadā. This substitution permits one to read the verse somewhat differently. According to this reading, Sītā is saying to Rāma, "You sent the great hero Hanumān out to search. Why then did you not [have him] repudiate me in Laṅkā?"

12. "No sooner had I heard your words to that effect" tvadvākyasamanantaram: Literally, "immediately after your speech." As Cr explains, the phrase means "at the time following my hearing of those words that informed me of my abandonment (tyāgabodhakavākyaśravaṇottarakāle)."

"heroic prince" vīra: Literally, "O hero."

"of that monkey lord" vānarendrasya: Ś,B1,D1,3,8–12,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vānarasyāsya, "of that monkey."

14. "tiger among men" naraśārdūla: Ś1,Ñ2,V2,3,B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nṛpaśārdūla, "O tiger among kings."

"taking into account only that I am a woman" strītvam eva puraskṛtam: Literally, "[you] put forward only femaleness (i.e., the fact that I am a woman)." As Cm explains, the phrase means "you have perceived only my womanhood but not my virtuous conduct (tvayā strītvam eva puraskṛtaṃ dṛṣṭaṃ na tu mama śīlam)."

15. "Since my name is derived from Janaka, you failed to take into account the fact that I was born from the earth itself . . . given due consideration to my virtuous conduct." apadeśena janakān notpattir vasudhātalāt / mama vṛttaṃ ca . . . bahu te na puraskṛtam: Literally, "by the name from Janaka, the birth from the surface of the earth is not, nor is my conduct properly put forward by you." The syntax of the verse as it appears in the critical edition and the texts and printed editions of Cv, Cg, and Cm is awkward and apparently elliptical. Our translation follows the interpretation of Cv and Cm, who understand the participle puraskṛtam, "put forward," to also govern the feminine nominative utpattiḥ in pāda a. Thus, they supply the feminine form puraskṛtā. This reading enables them to account for both the instrumental apadeśena, "by name," and the negative particle na in pāda a. One could, perhaps, force the syntax of the instrumental to lend the first half of the verse the sense "Despite my name, my birth was not from Janaka but rather from the surface of the earth." Textual support for the verse is somewhat suspicious, as Ś (as well as a few other manuscripts) omits this and the following nine verses. At other places in the critical edition, verses with similar textual evidence have been omitted. Compare, for example, the textual evidence for the exclusion of 3261* (following 6.105.27ab), where virtually all manuscripts except Ś and D8 read the line, and yet it is excluded from the critical text. Cf. 6.106.7–13. See Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv. Cf., too, 6.107.7–13. D6,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read the nominative apadeśo me, "my name," for the instrumental apadeśena. This appears to be a facilior reading that irons out, as it were, the syntactical problem of the critical text. This variant yields the meaning: "My name comes from Janaka, not my birth, which is from the surface of the earth." Regardless of the reading, Sītā's point here is that, despite her epithets such as Jānakī, Maithilī, etc., she is not the actual child of the human king Janaka but is rather the daughter of the earth goddess Pṛthivī. As Cr comments, Rāma does not realize that, since Sītā was born from the sacrificial ground and is thus pure from her very birth, she would always be pure (vasudhātalād yajñabhūmer utpattiś ca na puraskṛtotpattiśuddhyeyaṃ śuddhaiva bhaviṣyatīti matir na kṛtety arthaḥ). On Sītā's birth, see 1.65.14–17 and notes. See, too, 7.88, where the goddess Pṛthivī fetches Sītā back. See Sutherland 1989 and S. Goldman 2006.

16. Ś,V3,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"you do not weigh the fact that, as a boy, you firmly clasped my hand while I was but a child" na pramāṇīkṛtaḥ pāṇir bālye bālena pīḍitaḥ: Literally, "the hand that was pressed in childhood by a boy is not taken into account." The reference here, as several commentators point out, is to the act of clasping hands (pāṇigrahaṇa), which is the definitive moment in the Hindu wedding ceremony. D6,7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead mama ni- for bālena. This lends the phrase the sense "the hand that was firmly clasped in my childhood."

"you have turned your back on" te pṛṣṭhataḥ kṛtam: Literally, "has been placed behind by you."

17. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"who stood there, despondent and brooding" dīnaṃ dhyānaparaṃ sthitam: D4,10,11,13, and the text of Ct read instead dīnaṃ dhyānaparāyaṇam, "despondent and absorbed in brooding."

18. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"tainted by these false allegations" mithyāpavādopahatā: Literally, "afflicted or struck by false reproach."

19. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"in this public gathering" janasaṃsadi: Literally, "in the assembly of the people."

"the fire, bearer of oblations," havyavāhanam: Literally, "the bearer of oblations."

"the only path proper for me" yā kṣamā me gatiḥ: Literally, "the path or course that is fitting for me." Cg and Cm understand that this path or place (Cm) is suitable for generating trust (pratyayajananārtham). This interpretation appears to have influenced the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 338), who renders, "How can I vindicate myself? So I will throw myself into the fire."

20. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"he was overcome with anger and closely studied Rāghava's face" amarṣavaśam āpanno rāghavānanam aikṣata: Literally, "[having] come under the sway of anger, he looked at Rāghava's face." Commentators and translators differ somewhat in their understanding of the emotion that grips Lakṣmaṇa at this moment. The term amarṣa generally refers to "anger, intolerance, indignation," and most of the translators have rendered accordingly. Cg, however, is evidently troubled by the thought that Lakṣmaṇa could display anger toward his older brother and glosses amarṣavaśam, "the sway of anger," with dainyavaśam, "the sway of sorrow." Regardless of Lakṣmaṇa's inner feelings, it is clear from the following verses that he has no intention of going against his brother's wishes. Our understanding is that Lakṣmaṇa is uncertain as to how to respond to Sītā's dramatic order and is observing Rāma's face closely for signs of how his brother wishes him to proceed. This idea may have inspired the redactors of many of the northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.101.22) and Lahore (6.97.20), who read instead vimarṣavaśam, "the power of hesitation or doubt." B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read rāghavaṃ samudaikṣata, "looked at Rāghava," for the critical reading rāghavānanam aikṣata, "looked at Rāghava's face."

21. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"sensing Rāma's intentions" vijñāya manaścchandaṃ rāmasya: Literally, "having realized Rāma's mental wish or desire." We follow Ct and Cr, who gloss, "intention (abhiprāyaḥ)."

"which were betrayed by his facial expression" ākārasūcitam: Literally, "indicated or inferred by facial expression." As several of the commentators indicate, the expressions in question are the arching of the brow, etc. (bhrūbhaṅgādyākārasūcitam—so Ct).

"obedient to Rāma's wishes" mate rāmaysa: Literally, "in Rāma's thought or purpose." Cg proposes that we supply the participle sthitaḥ, giving the sense "firm or fixed in Rāma's thoughts."

Following verse 21, B1–3,4,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of two lines [3231*]: "And not a single one of his companions dared to appeal to, speak to, or even look at Rāma, who resembled Yama, who brings time itself to an end.[1]"

[1]"Yama, who brings time itself to an end" kālāntakayama-: Literally, "Yama, the ender of time." See 6.21.26 and note.

22. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"Then . . . slowly" tataḥ . . . śanaiḥ: Cg believes that Sītā walks slowly in order to prolong her last sight (lit., direct cognition or perception) of Rāma (śanaiḥ rāmānubhavena mandaṃ yathā tathā). B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sthitam . . . tataḥ, "stood . . . then." This lends the line the sense "then . . . Rāma, who stood [with his face downcast]."

"whose face was downcast" adhomukham: Cg attempts a psychological analysis of why Rāma keeps his eyes lowered, suggesting that this gesture is motivated by two factors.

The first is Rāma's shame brought on by the thought: "How can I look upon the guileless trust of a woman so devoted to her husband." Rāma's second thought, according to Cg, is that, if he were to look Sītā in the eye, it might be taken for a gesture of kindness or amorous gallantry. (pativratāyāḥ kathaṃ nirvyājaṃ pratyayaṃ paśyāmīti lajjayā mukhadarśane dākṣiṇyaṃ bhaviṣyatīti buddhyā cāvanatamukham.)

23. Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

24. See 5.51.22–28 and notes, where Sītā swears by her fidelity to Rāma to protect Hanumān from the fire and 5.53.17–26, where Hanumān reasons correctly that Sītā's virtue will similarly protect her from the conflagration he has started. Cf. 7.88.10, where Sītā once again swears by her fidelity to her husband. On this type of "truth act," see Hopkins 1932. Cf. 6.106.15 and note.

Ś,D8,12 omit this verse and, following the principles of the critical edition, its inclusion should be considered doubtful. See note to verse 15 above.

"Agni, the purifier" pāvakaḥ: Literally, "the purifier."

Following 24cd, D5–7,10,11,T,G1,3,M2,3 and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3236*] and then repeat 24cd: "Since Rāghava believes me, whose conduct is pure, to be unchaste, so may Agni, the purifier, witness of all the world, protect me in every way."

Following verse 24, D5–7,T,G1,3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of two lines [3238*]: "Since I have never, in word, thought, or deed, wronged Rāghava, who knows all righteousness, may Agni, the purifier, protect me."

Following 3238* (D9,M2 continue after 3239*), D5,T1,G3,M3, the texts and printed editions of Cg and Crā, and the edition of Gita Press (6.117.28) insert a passage of three lines [3240*]: "Since the Blessed Lord Āditya, Vāyu, the directions, the moon, the day, the two twilights, the night, the goddess Earth,[1] and whichever others know[2] me to be adorned[3] by my pure conduct, [may Agni, the purifier, protect me]."

[1]"the goddess Earth" pṛthivī: Literally, "the earth."

[2]"whichever others know" ye cānye 'py abhijānanti: Gita Press, M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Crā read instead yathānye 'pi vijānanti, "just as . . . and others know."

[3]"to be adorned" -bhūṣitām: M2,3, Gita Press, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Crā read instead -saṃyutām, "endowed with."

25. "the fire, eater of oblations" hutāśanam: Literally, "the eater of oblations."

"with complete detachment" niḥsaṅgenāntarātmanā: Literally, "with an internal faculty that was without attachment." Cg glosses, "with a mind completely detached with regard to her body (niḥsaṅgena śarīre nirabhilāṣeṇāntarātmanā manasā). Ck, who reads with the critical edition, glosses, "[with a mind] devoid of fondness for life (prāṇaprītirahitena)." Ś,Ñ,V,B,D2–4,8–13,M5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead niḥśaṅkenāntarātmanā, "with a fearless or courageous heart."

26. "filled with children and the aged" bālavṛddhasamākulaḥ: Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 338) takes -samākulaḥ somewhat awkwardly in its other sense of "agitated, frightened," rendering, "The great concourse of young and old was scared to see . . ." Presumably, we are to understand that most of the able-bodied male rākṣasas of Laṅkā have been killed in the war.

"there" tatra: D10,11,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dīptām, "blazing, glowing," which here refers to Sītā. This reading is rendered only in the translations of Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 386), Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1853), and Pagani (1999, p. 1185). Dutt (1893, p. 1509) mistakenly assigns the adjective to the fire, while Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 338) omits it entirely.

Following verse 26, V2 (in scattered order), D5 (lines 6–9 only),6,7,10,11,T1,G, M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert (while Ś,B1,D1–3,8,9,12,T2,3 continue after 3246*; Ñ1,D4,13 insert after colophon; Ñ2,V1,3,B3,4 insert after 27; B2 continues after 3247*; and M2 further continues after 3248*) a passage of nine lines [3243*]: "Then, in the presence of all those people, Sītā,[1] who, with her ornaments of refined gold, looked herself like newly refined gold, fell into the blazing fire.[1–2] All beings watched as wide-eyed Sītā, resembling a splendid altar of gold,[2] was falling into the fire, bearer of oblations.[3–4] All the three worlds watched as the blessed Sītā, like a pure offering of melted butter,[3] entered the fire. [5–6] When they saw her, who was like a stream of clarified butter sanctified by vedic mantras at a sacrifice, falling into the fire, bearer of oblations, all the women began to wail.[7–8] The three worlds, including the gods, gandharvas, and dānavas, watched her . . . (continuing on to 3244*).[9]"

[1]"Sītā" sā: Literally, "she."

[2]"resembling a splendid altar of gold" rukmavedīm ivottamām: D10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead rukmavedinibhāṃ tadā, "Then, resembling an altar of gold."

[3]"All the three worlds . . . Sītā, like a pure offering of melted butter" sītāṃ kṛtsnās trayo lokāḥ puṇyām ājyāhutīm iva: Ś1,B1,3,D1–3,8–11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ṛṣayo devagandharvā yajñe pūrṇāhutīm iva, "the seers, gods, and gandharvas [watched her,] who was like a complete oblation at a sacrifice."

All printed editions of the southern recension and the translations that follow them include or render this insert. Despite the fact that the critical apparatus shows it, in one place or another, in virtually every manuscript consulted, the printed editions of Gorresio (6.101.35) and Lahore (6.102.7) read only variations of lines 1 and 2. The omission of these lines from the critical text, given the evidence in the critical apparatus, is questionable.

Following 3243*, Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D5–7,10,11,13,T1,G,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3244*, line 3], which must be construed syntactically with line 9 of 3243*: "[her] like a goddess who has been cursed, falling from heaven into hell."

27. "deafening and prodigious cry" vipulaḥ svanaḥ / . . . adbhutopamaḥ: Literally, "a loud sound that was like a miracle or wonder." Our translation of adbhutopamaḥ, "like a miracle," follows Cg and Cm, who gloss, "like a prodigy or miracle (adbhutatulyaḥ)." This interpretation has been similarly followed by Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 387), Pagani (1999, p. 1186), and, with some stretching of the meaning, by Dutt (1893, p.

1510— "unheard of before") and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1853—"strange"). Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 338) renders, "terrible," while Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 339) renders, "a great cry from the astounded apes and Rākshasas." Ct and Ck take the term adbhutopamaḥ as a bahuvrīhi compound modifying svanaḥ, "sound or cry," and having the sense "in the production of which was the recognition that a miracle was taking place (āścaryam ity upamā jñānaṃ yat pravṛttau saḥ)."

At the conclusion of the sarga, with its dramatic climatic scene, Cg brings up the subject of Sītā's suffering on the terrestrial plane and the widely known legend, seemingly unknown to Vālmīki, of the real Sītā's having entered the fire at the time of Rāvaṇa's attempted abduction and her replacement by an illusory surrogate (chāyāsītā or māyāsītā). According to this tradition, the entire agniparīkṣā, or fire ordeal, is merely staged as a convenient way to dispose of the false Sītā and recover the real goddess without revealing this divine deception. See 6.102.5; 6.106.4; and notes and Introduction p. 104.

Sarga 105

Before verse 1, V,B2–4,D5–7,10,11,T,G,M1,2 (after 6.104.27),3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3247*]: "Then righteous Rāma, dejected, hearing the words they were saying, lapsed for a time into gloomy thought, his eyes brimming with tears.[1]

[1]"dejected . . . lapsed . . . into gloomy thought, his eyes brimming with tears" durmanāḥ . . . dadhyau . . . bāṣpavyākulalocanaḥ: Cm, Ck, and Ct understand that Rāma is now depressed at the thought of what he has done to Sītā and at the expressions of grief on the part of the people. Cm feels that Rāma is dejected by the thought that he has brought about a terrible action (dāruṇakarma kāritam iti cintāparo 'bhūd ity arthaḥ). Ck and Ct understand that Rāma is thinking, "What have I said? What have I done? What should I do now?" (kim uktaṃ kiṃ kṛtaṃ kiṃ cātaḥparaṃ kartavyam iti cintāparo babhūva).

1–3. "King Kubera Vaiśravaṇa: vaiśravaṇo rājā: Literally, "King Vaiśravaṇa."

"Yama, dragger of his foes" yamaś cāmitrakarśaṇaḥ: Literally, "and Yama, the dragger of non-friends." Yama is known in the literature to drag off his victims with his characteristic weapon, the pāśa, or noose. Ś,B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead yamaś ca pitṛbhiḥ saha, "and Yama together with the ancestors."

"great Indra of the thousand eyes" sahasrākṣo mahendraś ca: Ś,B1,D1–3,8–12,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ca deveśaḥ. This lends the phrase the sense "and the thousand-eyed lord of the gods."

"Varuṇa, scorcher of his foes." varuṇaś ca paraṃtapaḥ: Ś,B1,D1–3,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead jaleśvaraḥ, "lord of the waters," for paraṃtapaḥ, "scorcher of foes."

"the great god, majestic Śiva, with his half-six eyes" ṣaḍardhanayanaḥ śrīmān mahādevaḥ: The unusual epithet ṣaḍardhanayanaḥ, "having half of six eyes," is a variant of more common epithets of Śiva such as trilocanaḥ, trinetraḥ, etc. See note on Brahmā below and notes to verse 12.

"Brahmā" brahmā: Cr, alone among the commentators, expresses discomfort at the exclusion of Viṣṇu from the list of deities that assemble in Rāma's presence. He offers two alternative strategies for including his chosen deity. The first is to take the epithet śrīmān, "majestic," which appears to refer to Śiva, instead as "he who possesses the goddess Śrī, i.e., Viṣṇu. Alternatively, he proposes that "aḥ," a monosyllabic epithet of Viṣṇu, is present in the list after the name of Brahmā but is obscured because of its coalescence with the final "ā" of that name. (brahmā aḥ viṣṇuś ca . . . śrīmāñśabdena viṣṇulābho vā bodhyaḥ). See notes to verse 12 below.

4. "the foremost of the thirty gods" tridaśaśreṣṭhāḥ: Literally, "the best among the thirty."

"Rāghava, who stood before them, his hands cupped in reverence" prāñjaliṃ rāghavaṃ sthitam: For some reason, Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 339) and Dutt (1893, p. 1510) appear to read the adjective prāñjalim adverbially, construing it with abruvan, "they spoke." Their translations, therefore, have the gods holding their hands in supplication to Rāma. See note to verse 10 below.

5. "the creator of the entire universe" kartā sarvasya lokasya: Cg, noticing the seeming contradiction between applying the epithet here to Rāma when it was just applied to Brahmā in verse 2 above, argues that, in fact, there is no contradiction because the earlier reference was to Brahmā's direct or unmediated role as the creator, while here the reference is to Viṣṇu's indirect or mediated role (pūrvaṃ brahmaṇo 'dvārakaṃ kartṛtvam atra sadvārakaṃ kartṛtvam iti na virodhaḥ).

"the most ancient one" śreṣṭhaḥ: In its most common usage this term, in the sense of "best, foremost," construes with a noun in the genitive plural or is placed at the end of a tatpuruṣa compound to mean "the best of or foremost among." Since that role is served in the critical reading by the synonymous term varaḥ, "best, foremost," we have rendered śreṣṭhaḥ in its other sense of "eldest, primal, ancient."

"foremost among those possessing supreme knowledge" jñānavatāṃ varaḥ: Literally, "the best of those possessing knowledge." As Ct and Ck point out, the knowledge referred to here must be the ultimate knowledge articulated in the upaniṣads (aupaniṣadajñānavatām). The word varaḥ is marked as doubtful in the critical edition. It has a wide range of manuscript variations, most of which have the sense of "lord." B2,D7,10,11,G1,2,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead jñānavidāṃ vibhūḥ, "the lord of those who know supreme knowledge."

"How can you . . . stand by and watch . . . How can you not realize" upekṣase katham . . . katham . . . nāvabudhyase: Literally, "How do you ignore or overlook, how do you not know?" Cr argues that, in choosing their words in this verse, the gods are saying that Rāma, or Viṣṇu, who is omniscient, must know that Sītā has not the slightest trace of wrongdoing. And therefore, in ascribing guilt to someone he knows to be innocent, he has acted improperly. (jñānavatāṃ sarvaviṣayakajñānaviśiṣṭānāṃ vibhuḥ svāmī tvaṃ havyavāhane patantīṃ sītāṃ katham upekṣasa etena sītāyā na kiṃcid doṣasaṃsarga iti bhavato jñānam astīti sūcitam. tenādoṣe doṣāropaṇam anucitam iti dhvanitam.) Compare 6.106.14 and note.

"into the fire, eater of oblations" havyavāhane: Literally, "into the eater of oblations."

6. 6cd = 3256*ab. (See note to verse 17 below.)

"Long ago" pūrvam: Literally, "earlier." Cm, quoted by Ct, understands the term to refer either to a previous kalpa, "a great cosmic age," or to the time before creation itself (pūrvaṃ pūrvasmin kalpe sṛṣṭeḥ pūrvaṃ vā).

"the Vasu Ṛtadhāman" ṛtadhāmā vasuḥ: Ṛtadhāman, literally, "having truth or cosmic order for his abode or the resting place or abode of truth," is an epithet or name of Viṣṇu, especially in his role as creator.

"the progenitor of the Vasus" vasūnāṃ ca prajāpatiḥ: Literally, "and the Prajāpati (lord of progeny or creatures) of the Vasus." The term prajāpati is commonly used as a proper noun for the creator divinity who generates all creatures at the beginning of each cosmic cycle. See note to verse 25 below. The Vasus are a class of vedic divinities, normally eight in number.

"the untrammeled lord" svayaṃprabhuḥ: Literally, "lord in and of himself." We follow the remarks of the commentators who understand the epithet to refer to the lord who is under the control of no other (itarāniyamyaḥ—so Ct).

7. "Rudra, the eighth among the Rudras" rudrāṇām aṣṭamo rudraḥ: The Rudras are a class of eleven fearsome vedic divinities associated with the god Rudra (ṚV 1.85; 1.114; 2.33; etc.). The name "Rudra" in late and post-vedic texts is primarily an epithet of Śiva, as indicated by Ct and Cr, who gloss, "the great god (mahādevaḥ)," an epithet of Śiva.

"and . . . fifth among the sādhyas" sādhyānām api pañcamaḥ: The sādhyas are a class of divine beings, known from the vedas (see ṚV 10.90.7,16, etc.). Ct, Cr, and Cs claim that the fifth of the sādhyas is called Vīryavān. See notes to verse 17 below, 3256*, n. 2.

"The twin Aśvins" aśvinau: Literally, "the [two] Aśvins." The Aśvins are a well-known pair of vedic divinities, often credited with saving or curing people in distress (ṚV 1.116; 5.78, etc.).

8. "You are present before the beginning and after the end of the worlds" ante cādau ca lokānāṃ dṛśyase tvam: Literally, "you are visible in the beginning and the end of the worlds." As the various commentators suggest, this is a way to explain that, unlike created beings, Viṣṇu has neither beginning nor end (anenotpattivināśarāhityam uktam—so Cg). Ś,B1,D1–3,5,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read madhye ca, "and in the middle," for lokānām, "of the worlds."

9. "the lord of the world" svāmī lokasya: The phrase is somewhat ambiguous, perhaps intentionally so. It can be interpreted here, as do Ck, Cm, and Ct, to be a reference to Rāma's current kingship of the earth (bhūlokasyedānīṃ sākṣāt svāmī). The phrase can also refer to his divine role as the lord of the worlds or universe. Translators are divided.

"the thirty gods" tridaśa-: Literally, "the thirty."

10. For a discussion of the implications of this verse for our understanding of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa's position on the divinity of Rāma, see Pollock 1984b and 1991, pp. 15–54. See, too, note to 6.70.40, 1585* and note.

"who I really am, to whom I belong, and why I am here" yo 'haṃ yasya yataś cāham: Literally, "who [am] I, whose [am I], and from what [am] I." The commentators generally agree that the first relative pronoun (yaḥ) refers to Rāma's true nature (svarūpapraśnaḥ—Cg). Cm and Cg take the second relative pronoun (yasya) as we have done to refer to Rāma's affiliation (saṃbandhipraśnaḥ—so Cg). Cr, however, takes the genitive to be asking whose master Rāma is (yasya svāmī). Ck and Ct, who do not read the second pronoun (yasya), interpret the third (yataḥ) to refer to Rāma's origin or natural state (yataś ca yatprakṛtikaś ca—so Ct). Cr takes yataḥ to be a question with reference to the world from which Rāma has come (yato lokād āgato 'ham). Cg and Cm, whom we have followed, understand the term yataḥ to refer to the purpose for which Rāma has been born (yata iti prayojanapraśnaḥ). We believe this is so, because that is the question answered by Brahmā at verse 25 below. D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read for yo 'haṃ yasya, "who [am] I, of whom [am] I," so 'ham yaś ca, "and he who I am," thus omitting the critical edition's second question.

11. "Rāma" rāma: D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead vākyam, "speech, words."

12. In this and the following verses, as in the Ādityahṛdaya passage (App. I, No. 65, following note to 6.93.27), the commentators are at pains to provide etymological and scriptural explanations for most of Viṣṇu's names and epithets. We comment only on those that bear directly on issues of translation.

"majestic" śrīmān: Literally "possessed of majesty or good fortune." The term can also refer, in a specifically Vaiṣṇava context, to the fact that the Lord has the goddess Śrī or Lakṣmī as his constant companion—so Cg and Cṭś. (śrīmān iti nityayoge matup. bhavāñ śrīmān iti sītālakṣmīr bhavān viṣṇur ity uktaśriyaḥ patitvaṃ nityānapāyitvaṃ ca darśitam—so Cṭś.) See notes to verse 2 above and verse 19 below.

"Nārāyaṇa" nārāyaṇaḥ: The commentators provide two different etymologies for the term. Ck and Ct understand it to mean "he whose residence or place is the collectivity of all living creatures," i.e., that he resides in all creatures (nāraṃ jīvasamūho 'yanaṃ sthānaṃ yasya saḥ). Cm understands similarly. Cg cites the etymology given at Manusmṛti 1.10, where it is said that, because the waters are the sons of men (nara), they are called nārāḥ, and, since Viṣṇu's resting place (ayana) is on the waters, he is therefore called "he who rests on the waters (nārāyaṇa)." (nārā ayanaṃ yasyāsau nārāyaṇaḥ. āpo nārā iti proktā āpo vai narasūnavaḥ / tā yad asyāyanaṃ pūrvaṃ tena nārāyaṇaḥ smṛtaḥ // iti manusmaraṇāt.) This epithet is used, Cg argues, to indicate that Viṣṇu is the primal cause of the universe (tena jagatkāraṇatvam uktam).

"wielder of the discus" cakrāyudhaḥ: Literally, "whose weapon is the discus." Ck and Ct argue that the term cakra, "discus," is an upalakṣaṇa (metonymy) to express the complete set of Viṣṇu's four characteristic āyudhas—the discus, mace, conch shell, and lotus (idaṃ śaṅkhagadāder apy upalakṣaṇam).

"the single-tusked boar" ekaśṛṅgo varāhaḥ: The reference is to Viṣṇu's third incarnation as the varāhāvatāra, who raises the earth from the primal seas on his tusk (see ViṣṇuP 1.4.3–11,25–29,45–49; MBh 3.141; 12.202,339–340; BhāgP 3.13–19; and Varāhapurāṇa 113–115). Cm cites passages from the Skandapurāṇa (2.136 and 5.152) explaining how Viṣṇu came to be called "the single-tusked one." There Viṣṇu in his manifestation as the primal boar is said to have shaken the mountains with one of his tusks. The gods then, pleased, praised him for the accomplishment of this feat with a single tusk. Therefore, henceforth Mādhava (Viṣṇu) came to be called "the single-tusked boar." (ekaśṛṅgo varāha ādivarāhaḥ. tasyaikaśṛṅgatā skānde darśitā daṃṣṭrayā parvatendrāṇāṃ cālanaṃ kṛtavān mahat / tatas taṃ tuṣṭuvur devā ekaśṛṅgatvasiddhaye // ekaśṛṅgo varāho 'bhūt tadāprabhṛti mādhavaḥ.)

"the conqueror of your enemies, past and future" bhūtabhavyasapatnajit: Commentators are divided as to the meaning of the epithet. Ck and Ct understand that Viṣṇu's enemy is time itself, since it is the cause of birth and death. These commentators believe that the text is alluding to the fact that Viṣṇu is eternal. (bhūtabhavyakālarūpo yaḥ sapatno janimṛtihetutvāt taṃ jayati saḥ. nitya iti yāvat.) Cg, however, sees the term as an allusion to Viṣṇu's legendary conquest of such enemies of the past as the demons Madhu and Kaiṭabha (MBh 3.194), and to his future killing of the Cedi king Śiśupāla, an event that does not occur until the following yuga. The reference to Śiśupāla is to the Cedi monarch who reviles Kṛṣṇa and is slain by him at MBh 2.37–42. At MBh 2.42.21–24, it is said that blazing energy leaves the body of Śiśupāla when he is slain and enters the body of Kṛṣṇa. Śiśupāla is often held up in Vaiṣṇava theological literature as the archetypal practitioner of dveṣabhakti—single-minded concentration on the Lord in the form of obsessional hatred that nonetheless leads to salvation and union. See note to 5.7.68. See, too, 6.44.37; 6.99.39; and notes; and 7.94.5.

13. "the beginning, the middle, and the end" ca madhye cānte ca: Literally, "and in the middle, and in the end, and." We follow the commentators in reading the first occurrence of the conjunction ca, "and," with an unexpressed third term ādau, "in the beginning" (cakāreṇādāv api—Cr).

"the four-armed Viṣvaksena" viṣvaksenaś caturbhujaḥ: Ct, Cm, and Ck understand the epithet "four-armed (caturbhujaḥ)" to refer to the fact that the god possesses four arms that are adept at destroying his enemies (śatrunirasanadakṣabhujacatuṣṭhayavān—so Ct). Cg, on the other hand, understands the epithet to refer to Viṣṇu's simultaneously dispensing the four puruṣārthas, or "goals of man" (yugapaccaturvidhapuruṣārthaprada ity arthaḥ). Commentators offer a variety of interpretations of the epithet Viṣvaksena, literally, "whose army is all pervasive." Ct glosses, "whose hosts that subdue armies are everywhere (viṣvañcaḥ sarvagatāḥ senāniyāmakaganā yasya)." Ck understands the epithet to mean "whose [armies] are characterized by his own offspring, viz., the gods and asuras (viṣvañcaḥ senāviśeṣāḥ svāpatyadevāsuralakṣaṇaṃ yasya saḥ)." Cg and Cm understand simply, "whose army is everywhere." According to Cg, this means that Viṣṇu is the lord of everything. (viṣvadrīcī sarvagatā senā yasya saḥ viṣvaksenaḥ. sarvasvāmīty arthaḥ—so Cg.) See 6.51.9; 6.52.6; and notes.

14. "You are . . . You are . . . you are": This and the following two verses constitute a list of names and epithets. We have supplied the words "you are" at several points for the sake of readability.

"You are the wielder of the horn bow" śārṅgadhanvā: Literally, "possessing the bow made of horn." Ct understands Viṣṇu's bow to be in the form of kāla, "time" (kālarūpaḥ). This interpretation is rendered in the translation of Dutt (1893, p. 1511) as "thou art the holder of the bow of time."

"you are Hṛṣīkeśa" hṛṣīkeśaḥ: Several of the commentators understand this epithet to mean "the master or controller of the senses (hṛṣīkāṇām indriyāṇām īśo niyantā—so Ct). This interpretation is rendered by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 339), Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340), and Dutt (1893, p. 1511).

"the primal person" puruṣaḥ: Literally, "the person, male, man." The commentators, notably Cg, offer multiple etymologies for this term. One of these, "he who lies or resides in the lotus or innermost space of the heart (puri hṛdayaguhāyāṃ śeta iti puruṣaḥ—so Cg)," appears in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340), who renders, "the Lord That lies in the cave of the heart." Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 339) and Dutt (1893, p. 1511) appear to drop the term entirely, while Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855) seems to understand it in the sense of niyantā, "the controller" (following Cg's and Ct's gloss on hṛṣīkeśaḥ; see above), translating, "the Inner Controller" (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855).

"the . . . wielder of the sword" khaḍgadhṛk: According to Ct, the reference is to the sword Nandaka, which is known as "knowledge" (vidyākhyanandakakhaḍgadhṛk). The proper noun Nandaka appears in Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855). Dutt (1893, p. 1511) and Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 339) understand that Viṣṇu bears a dagger.

"invincible" ajitaḥ: Ct glosses, "unconquered by sin and by enemies (pāpmanāribhiś cājitaḥ)." This interpretation appears in the translation of Dutt (1893, p. 1511), who renders, "unconquerable by sins."

"and you are Kṛṣṇa of immense strength" kṛṣṇaś caiva bṛhadbalaḥ: Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 389) and Pagani (1999, p. 1187) understand bṛhadbalaḥ as a separate proper name. Dutt (1893, p. 1511) and Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 339) render it separately as an adjective. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855) appear to translate as we do. Most commentators understand the term bṛhadbalaḥ, "of immense strength," to refer to the Lord's great power to sustain or uphold (dharaṇa-sāmarthyam—so Cg). Ct and Ck take it to mean that he has the ability to hold up the entire universe as if it were a ball to play with (aśeṣabrahmāṇḍasya līlākandukavad-dhāraṇakṣamaḥ—so Ct). Cm, however, takes the epithet to be to the Rāmāvatāra, understanding bala in its sense of "army," and glossing, "he who has great armies of monkeys (bṛhanti vānarabalāni yasyeti tathā)." On the name Kṛṣṇa, see note to verse 25 below.

15. "You are the leader of the hosts" senānīḥ: Literally, "the army leader, general." Ck and Ct understand this to be a terrestrial reference, "lord of the king's army" (rājasenāpati—Ct) (Ck glosses only rājā, "king"). Cg understands the reference to be to the heavenly hosts (devasenānirvāhakaḥ). Cm continues to interpret in connection with the Rāmāvatāra, glossing, "the army leader is he who leads a great army of monkeys; it means a warrior. (mahatīṃ vānarasenāṃ nayatīti senānīḥ. yodha ity arthaḥ.)" Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855) takes the term as an epithet of the god Kārttikeya, who, according to Śaivite mythology, was born to lead the armies of the gods. See, too, notes to Bālakāṇḍa 35 for the birth of Kārttikeya.

"You are the leader of all beings" grāmaṇīḥ: Literally, "the leader of the people or of the village." We follow Cm, who takes grāma- to mean "the class of all living things (prāṇivargaḥ)." Cg understands, "the guardian of the heavenly countries, etc. (divya-janapadādipālakaḥ)." Ct and Ck understand the term to mean "the counselor (mantrī)." Dutt (1893, p. 1511) follows them, rendering "minister," while Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855) renders "village headman." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340) translates, "the leader of the world of men."

"You are intelligence, strength" ca tvaṃ buddhiḥ sattvaṃ: Literally, "and you [are] intelligence, strength." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarvaṃ tvaṃ buddhis tvam, "you [are] all, you [are] intelligence." Ct understands sarvam, "all," to refer to "the world, the universe (jagat)."

"You are Upendra, Indra's younger brother, and Madhusūdana, slayer of the asura Madhu" tvam upendro madhusūdanaḥ: Literally, "you are little Indra; [you are] the slayer of Madhu." Since Viṣṇu in his vāmanāvatāra, or dwarf incarnation, is born as the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi, the parents of the vedic gods, he earned the epithet Upendra, "Lesser Indra or Indra's younger brother." This association is made explicit in the translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855). See 6.40.43; 6.49.1–2; 6.59.7; 6.79.4; 6.87.9–10; and notes.

16. "You are the author of Indra's deeds." indrakarmā: Literally, "one possessing Indra's work or deeds." The various commentators offer three explanations of this ambiguous term. Our translation is inspired by the interpretation of Cg and Ctś, who gloss the compound as a bahuvrīhi, expressing an implied comparison: "whose acts are like those of Indra (indrasyeva karma yasya saḥ)." Ctś, however, extends this idea by indicating that, since Viṣṇu is the inner spirit of Indra, he is in reality the agent of Indra's feats, such as the slaying of the demon Vṛtra, etc. (vṛtrādivadhasyendrāntaryāmikartṛkatvāt). Ck and Ct take the word karma, "work," in the sense of "creation (sṛṣṭiḥ)," lending the compound the sense "having Indra for his creation or whose creation is Indra (indraḥ karma sṛṣṭir yasya sa indrakarmā)." They support this interpretation with a quote to the effect that Prajāpati (whom they equate here with Viṣṇu) created Indra (prajāpatir indram asṛjata). Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855) follows this interpretation, rendering, "You are the creator of Indra (in the form of Prajāpati)." Cm takes the term indra- in the sense of "lord" and thus reads it to mean "the work of the lord," that is, lordship, which Viṣṇu then possesses (indrasyeśvarasya karmaiśvaryaṃ tadvān ity arthaḥ).

"You are the lord of the great gods." mahendraḥ: Literally, "great Indra or great lord." This epithet is normally used of the god Indra, and the commentators offer various interpretations of its use in this verse. Ct understands, "the lord or controller of everything (sakaleśitā)." Cg glosses, "endowed with unsurpassed lordship (niratiśayaiśvaryasaṃpannaḥ)." Cm, whom we follow, takes the compound as a tatpuruṣa rather than a karmadhāraya, explaining, "the lord of the great ones, that is, the great gods. The meaning is: 'You are the Lord, the cause of the entire universe.' (mahatām īśvarāṇām indraḥ. īśitā sakalajagatkāraṇam ity arthaḥ.)"

"You are the lotus-naveled god" padmanābhaḥ: The epithet derives from the version of the creation myth in which a lotus rises from the navel of the sleeping Viṣṇu. From that lotus emerges Brahmā, who proceeds with the actual work of creation. Since Brahmā is the speaker in this passage, Cg notes, "the meaning is that 'you are my progenitor as well' (mamāpi janaka ity arthaḥ)."

"You are the destroyer of your enemies in battle." raṇāntakṛt: Literally, "the battle-end-maker." We follow the unanimous gloss of the commentators (raṇe śatrūṇāṃ nāśakartā—so Ct).

"The divine great seers call you fit for refuge and refuge itself." śaraṇyaṃ śaraṇaṃ ca tvām āhur divyā maharṣayaḥ: The terms śaraṇyam, "capable of offering refuge or protection," and śaraṇam, "refuge, protection," overlap somewhat in their semantic fields. Our translation more or less follows the distinction proposed by Ct, who glosses the former as "accessible as a means of refuge (śaraṇatvena prāpyam)" and the latter as "protection (rakṣaṇam)" itself. See 5.36.26–29; 6.13.4; 6.31.56; 6.47.43; 6.59.8; 6.81.14; and notes.

Cg makes a distinction between the great seers, whom he describes as "capable of the direct perception of supramundane truths (alaukikatattvasākṣātkārasamarthāḥ)," and the divine great seers, whom he understands to be Sanaka, etc. (sanakādayaḥ). (Sanaka is one of the four mind-born sons of Brahmā created to assist in the creation of the world—BhāgP 4.22.39). Ctś gives the same definition of the great seers but indicates that the divine seers are those among them who, like Vālmīki, etc., possess the special knowledge of the secrets of the avatāras, etc. (tatrāpi divyā avatārarahasyādiviśeṣajñānavanto vālmīkiprabhṛtayaḥ). As an alternative, he glosses, "the eternal sages (nityasūrayaḥ)."

17. "You are the great bull of a thousand horns and a hundred tongues that is the veda itself." sahasraśṛṅgo vedātmā śatajihvo maharṣabhaḥ: The commentators are unanimous in their understanding that the great thousand-horned, hundred-tongued bull is a metaphor for the veda itself, with its thousand śākhās, "branches or recensional traditions," and its many various ritual injunctions. (sahasraśṛṅgaḥ sahasraśākhārūpaśṛṅgaḥ. śatajihvo 'nekavidhacodanarūpajihvaḥ—so Cg.) Cm departs slightly from this interpretation, citing a well-known saying, "the paths of the Sāmaveda are a thousand (sahasraṃ sāmavartmeti prasiddheḥ)," and Kṛṣṇa's well-known statement in the Bhagavadgītā (10.22), "among the vedas I am the Sāmaveda (vedānāṃ sāmavedo 'smi)," to support his contention that the reference here is specifically to the Sāmaveda. A number of northern manuscripts, as well as the printed editions of Gorresio (6.102.17) and Lahore (6.98.18), tend to support this interpretation by reading ṛksāmaśṛṅgaḥ, "having the ṛk and the sāma [vedas] for its horns," for sahasraśṛṅgaḥ.

D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cr read śataśīrṣaḥ, "having one hundred heads," for the critical edition's śatajihvaḥ, "having one hundred tongues." Ct interprets this variant in the same way. Ck, quoted by Ct, understands this as "having the form of śiśumāraprajāpati," perhaps a reference to the constellation Śiśumāra, which is thought to be a form of Viṣṇu (see MW and Apte s.v.).

Cg does not take the term ṛṣabha in its sense of "bull" but rather derives it from a root $\sqrt{ṛṣ}$, in the sense of "to see or perceive." He thus takes it to mean "seer or witness," glossing, "the witness or seer of actions." He then interprets the compound maharṣabhaḥ as a dvandva to mean "[You are] great and a seer." (ṛṣabhaḥ karmaṇām ālocayitā. ṛṣa ālocana iti dhātuḥ. mahāṃś cāsāv ṛṣabhaś ca maharṣabhaḥ. evaṃbhūto vedātmā tvam ity arthaḥ.) Cm appears to interpret the term ṛṣabha, "bull," in its conventional metaphorical sense, "best or foremost [of anything]," glossing, "the most supreme (śreṣṭhatamaḥ)."

The interpretation that the multiple horns and tongues (or heads) refer, respectively, to the vedic schools and injunctions informs the translations of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 340), Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1855), and Dutt (1893, p. 1511). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 389), followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1187), understands, "(le dieu) aux mille cornes . . . le (dieu) aux cent têtes." These two translators understand that maharṣabha, "great bull," is a separate attribute. Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p, 339), taking the term śṛṅga in its sense of "peak," translates, "Thou art the Himalayas of a hundred [sic] peaks . . . the God of a Hundred Tongues, the great bull."

"the sacred utterance vaṣaṭ" vaṣaṭkāraḥ: This is the sacred exclamation uttered by the adhvaryu priest during the vedic sacrifice as the offering to a deity is poured into the āhavanīya fire.

"the sacred syllable oṃ" oṃkāraḥ: The praṇava, or sacred syllable oṃ, is believed to express the Absolute Brahman in the form of sound. Cg, citing a vedic passage to the effect that oṃ is Brahman expressed in a single syllable, glosses, "you are to be expressed by the praṇava." (oṃkāraḥ praṇavavācyaḥ. om ity ekākṣaraṃ brahmeti śruteḥ.)

"scorcher of your foes" paraṃtapa: Cg understands this common martial epithet here in the sense "[You are] supreme austerity (utkṛṣṭatapaḥ)." His text reads (as do Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1,2,4,8,9,12,13,T1,G3,M1,5) the compound as a nominative singular, paraṃtapaḥ, rather than as a vocative. Cg then understands the compound to mean "[you who are] to be propitiated by supreme austerity. (paraṃtapa utkṛṣṭatapa ity arthaḥ. utkṛṣṭatapaḥ samārādhyeti yāvat.)" D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead parāt paraḥ, "higher than the highest."

Following 17ab, D5–7,10,11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3256*]: "You are the primal creator of the three worlds, the untrammeled lord.[1] Eldest of all,[2] you are the highest refuge of perfected beings and those striving for perfection.[3]"

[1]line 1 = 6cd above.

[2]"Eldest of all" pūrvajaḥ: Literally, "born previously." Ck and Ct cite the vedic utterance, "I am the first born of ṛta (cosmic order). (aham asmi prathamajā ṛtasyeti śruteḥ—see Āraṇyasaṃhitā 1.9a; TaiBr 2.8.8.1a; Taittirīyāraṇyaka 9.10.6a; Taittirīyopaniṣad 3.10.6a; and Nirukta 14.2a.) Cg understands the term to mean that Viṣṇu is prior to all those who are dependent on him [e.g., the siddhas and the sādhyas] and he comes into existence for their protection (āśritāpekṣāyāḥ pūrvaṃ tadrakṣaṇāya janitaḥ). Cm glosses, "existing even before creation (sṛṣṭeḥ pūrvam api sthitaḥ)."

[3]"the highest refuge of perfected beings and those striving for perfection" siddhānām api sādhyānām āśrayaḥ: The sādhyas, literally, "those who are to be accomplished or perfected," are a class of divine beings, and, as such, we have left the term untranslated in verse 7 above. In this verse, however, the text is playing on the different derivatives of the root $\sqrt{sidh}$, "to be perfected." Our translation follows the gloss of Ct, who understands the first term to mean "those who are ascended or who have ascended," and the second to mean "those who desire to ascend." He understands the term āśrayaḥ in the sense of "goal." (siddhānām ārūḍhānāṃ sādhyānām ārurukṣūṇām āśrayaḥ prāpyaḥ.) Cg understands the siddhas to be those who have obtained liberation and the sādhyas to be the eternal divinities of that name mentioned in the closing stanza of the puruṣasūkta (ṚV 10.90.16). Cm agrees with Cg's definition of the siddhas but understands the sādhyas to be "those to be worshiped or propitiated (sādhyanta ārādhyanta iti sādhyānām)." Cg then understands the term sādhya as an adjective that modifies the siddhas. He understands the term āśraya to mean "the one who dispenses enjoyments equally." (siddhānāṃ muktānām. sādhyānāṃ yatra pūrve sādhyāḥ santi devā ity uktānāṃ nityānām āśrayaḥ sāmyabhogapradaḥ.) Ck understands the siddhas to be those beings who have authority to attain Indra's realm and the sādhyas to be those who are liberated (siddhā indrapadādhikārasiddhāḥ sādhyā muktāḥ).

18. "No one knows" na viduḥ: Literally, "they do not know." Cg supplies, as subjects for the verb, "the vedas and the vedic scholars (vedā vaidikāś ca)." Cr adds the phrase "even those who know the highest truth (tattvajñā apīti śeṣaḥ)."

"People wonder, 'Who are you?' " ko bhavān iti: Literally, "Who are you?"

"You are manifest" dṛśyase: Literally, "You are seen." Since the most characteristic feature of the Supreme Spirit is its interiority and invisibility, several of the commentators feel it necessary to gloss the verb here. Ct glosses, " 'you are seen,' means you are heard of as being the innermost spirit (dṛśyase 'ntaryāmitayā śrūyase)." Cg provides a restricted subject, supplying "by yogis (yogibhir iti śeṣaḥ)."

"in . . . especially brahmans and cows" brāhmaṇeṣu ca goṣu ca: Literally, "in brahmans and in cows." This appears to be an example of the gobalīvardhanyāya, in which specific members of a group are mentioned along with that group for emphasis. In this case, it is appropriate because cows and brahmans are frequently held up as objects of special sanctity or reverence in the traditional literature. See 1.24.13, where Viśvāmitra urges Rāma to kill Tāṭakā "for the sake of cows and brahmans." Compare 1.25.5. See notes to 6.75.2.

"in . . . the forests" vaneṣu: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nadīṣu, "in the rivers."

19. "majestic" śrīmān: Cg sees the term here as referring to both royal fortune or majesty as well as Viṣṇu's association with his twin consorts, Śrī and Lakṣmī. He cites a line from the Uttaranārāyaṇa, a supplement to the well-known puruṣasūkta, to support this claim. (śrīmān iti bhūpatitvasyāpy upalakṣaṇam. śrīś [hrīś—so KK, VSP] ca te lakṣmīś ca patnyāv ity uttaranārāyaṇokteḥ.) See notes to verses 2 and 12 above.

"a thousand heads" śataśīrṣaḥ: Normally, the word śata refers to one hundred, but it is also frequently used in the sense of any large number or a myriad. We agree with Cg and Cm that this verse repeats the substance of the opening verse of the puruṣasūkta (ṚV 10.90), where the primal puruṣa is said explicitly to have "a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, and a thousand feet." Therefore, we follow Cg's suggestion that the word śata here is intended to express the number one thousand. (puruṣasūktārtham āha. sahasrety atra śataśabdaḥ sahasravācakaḥ. sahasraśīrṣā puruṣaḥ sahasrākṣaḥ sahasrapād iti śruteḥ.) Translations variously render "one hundred" or "one thousand."

"You support . . . the earth with all its mountains." tvaṃ dhārayasi . . . vasudhāṃ ca saparvatām: Cm sees this as a reference to Viṣṇu's incarnation as the primal tortoise who upheld the great Mount Mandara used by the gods and demons to churn the primal ocean (saṃpratyādikūrmātmanā stauti). On the story of the churning of the ocean, see 6.12.22; 6.40.29; 6.41.17; 6.53.23; 6.80.19; and notes. See, too, 1.44.14–27 and notes.

D9–11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read pṛthivīṃ sarvaparvatān for the critical text's vasudhāṃ ca saparvatām, yielding the sense "the earth and all the mountains."

20. "At the end of the world" ante pṛthivyāḥ: Literally, "At the end of the earth." Commentators differ in their interpretation of this phrase. Ct and Ck do not construe the words together but take the word ante, "at the end," separately to mean "at the end of the day." They understand that at the end of the [cosmic] day Viṣṇu appears in the waters that are above the earth. They then argue that what is expressed here is the Lord's inherent power to establish himself both above and below the world. (tathānte 'harante pṛthivyā uparivartini salile tvam . . . dṛśyase. evaṃ ca pṛthivyā adha upari ca pratiṣṭhitasvaśaktis tvam ity uktam—so Ct.) These commentators are evidently referring to the second half of the verse, where Viṣṇu is said to support the earth (cf. verse 19). Cg, whom we and virtually all the translators consulted follow, sees the reference to be to Viṣṇu's sleep during the recurrent periods of cosmic night that follow universal destruction. (dainandinaprayalavṛttāntam āha. anta iti. pṛthivyā ante vināśe.) Cr glosses ante as "in the midst (madhye)," understanding that the god manifests himself in the midst of the waters at the end [of the existence] of the earth (pṛthivyā ante madhye salile). This reading is reminiscent of the variant antaḥ, "within," found in many northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.102.23) and Lahore (6.98.34).

"you manifest yourself resting on the great serpent" dṛśyase tvaṃ mahoragaḥ: Literally, "you appear as the great serpent." We follow Ck, Ct, and Cg in understanding the reference here to be to the fact that, during the periods of dissolution of the ordered universe, Viṣṇu rests on the cosmic serpent Śeṣa. Cg thus reads the term mahoragaḥ, "great serpent," as a bahuvrīhi compound, "he who has a great serpent, that is, he who lies on Śeṣa (mahān uragaḥ śeṣo yasya saḥ śeṣaśāyī san). Because generally no one would be around during periods of dissolution to observe Viṣṇu in his dormant state, Cg adds the phrase "seen by Mārkaṇḍeya, etc." referring to the well-known Mahābhārata (3.183–190) and purāṇic legend (MatsyaP 167) of the sage Mārkaṇḍeya, whose extreme spiritual advancement enables him to survive the cosmic dissolution and who, wandering across the featureless cosmic ocean, encounters Viṣṇu Nārāyaṇa. Cr appears to understand that Viṣṇu actually manifests himself as the great serpent Śeṣa (mahoragaḥ śeṣas tvam eva dṛśyase). Cm shares this view and, in his effort to point out the various allusions to specific avatāras, believes that the reference here is to Saṅkarṣaṇa, that is, Balarāma, the elder half brother of Kṛṣṇa, who is understood in many Vaiṣṇava texts to be an incarnation of Śeṣa (see, for example, MBh 16.5.12). (idānīṃ saṅkarṣaṇātmanā stauti—anta iti. mahoragaḥ saṅkarṣaṇa ity arthaḥ.) See 6.116.90, 3709*, lines 5, 6, n. 16; and notes to 6.4.9 and 6.107.6.

"You support the three worlds" trīṃl lokān dhārayan: Literally, "[you] supporting the three worlds." Since Cg understands the entire verse to refer to the period following the dissolution of the material universe, he suggests that we understand that Viṣṇu maintains the world inside him or in his belly (kukṣau dhārayan).

21. "I am your heart . . . It is I, Brahmā . . . who made the gods, who are the hairs on your limbs" ahaṃ te hṛdayam . . . devā gātreṣu lomāni nirmitā brahmaṇā: Literally, "I am your heart . . . [I] Brahmā made the gods, the hairs on the limbs." Brahmā is the speaker as well as the subject of this verse (see verse 11 above). Several translators render the phrase devā gātreṣu lomāni nirmitā brahmaṇā slightly differently, giving the line the sense: "The gods were created in such as way as to be the hairs on your body." (Compare Pagani 1999, p. 1187; Roussel 1903, vol. 3, p. 389; and Shastri 1959, vol. 3, p. 340.) Cr takes brahmaṇā in its sense of "the veda," and the participle nirmitāḥ, "constructed," in the sense of "said, explained." He glosses, "the meaning is 'the vedas state that they [the gods] are the hairs on your limbs' (devā romāṇi . . . te gātreṣu brahmaṇā vedena nirmitāḥ kathitā ity arthaḥ)." Ck, Ct, and Cs visualize the bodily hair of god [who is the world] as existing in the form of plants, trees, etc. (oṣadhīvanaspaty-ādineti śeṣaḥ).

Printed editions of Cg (VSP 6.120.25 and KK 6.120.23) show, as a variant, the genitive or ablative brahmaṇaḥ, "of or out of Brahmā," for the critical edition's instrumental brahmaṇā. This variant is not noted in the critical apparatus. Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, glosses, "of or from the Supreme Brahman (parabrahmaṇaḥ)." He explains, "those gods on your limbs are like the hairs and, like them, inseparable. (brahmaṇaḥ parabrahmaṇaḥ. te devā gātreṣu sthitā romāṇīva sthitās tadvad avinābhūtāḥ.)" Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 341), the only translator to render this variant, translates, "the gods are as inseparable from the body of the Supreme Brahmā, O Lord, as is the hair on one's body."

22. "Your ritual practices are the ordinances of the vedas." saṃskārās te 'bhavan vedāḥ: Literally, "your saṃskāras were the vedas." The term saṃskāra has a broad range of meanings, and some, it seems to us, are more appropriate in the present context than others. Some translators, notably Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 340) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1856), understand the term in its sense of "latent mental impressions," but this seems inappropriate in the context. We understand the term in its sense "ritual practices," e.g., the life-cycle rituals that are enjoined in the vedic texts. This view is informed by the interpretation of Ct, Ck, Cr, Cm, Cs, and Cv, who understand the reference to be to those precepts of the vedas that instruct (or purify—so Cv) humanity by telling them what they should and should not do. (saṃskārā bodhakāḥ. pravṛtti- nivṛttivyavasthāpakā iti yāvat—so Cm.) Cg cites a vedic passage in support of his contention that the Ṛgveda is Viṣṇu's exhalation. (vedāḥ saṃskārā niḥśvasitabhūtā ity arthaḥ. tasya ha vā etasya mahato bhūtasya niḥśvasitam etad yad ṛgveda ity ādiśruteḥ.)

"Without you, there is nothing" na tad asti tvayā vinā: Literally, "without you, that is not." Cm remarks, "Why go on? Everything that exists, whether sentient or insentient, consists of you alone. (kiṃ bahunā? sarvaṃ cidacidvastujātaṃ tvadātmakam evety arthaḥ.)"

23. "your steadfastness, the earth" sthairyaṃ te vasudhātalam: Literally, "your stability, the surface of the bearer of wealth." Cf. notes to 6.104.15.

"Soma, your gentleness" prasādas te somaḥ: Literally, "Soma or the moon is your graciousness." Cf. note to 6.102.35.

"O bearer of the Śrīvatsa mark" śrīvatsalakṣaṇa: The Śrīvatsa mark is an auspicious, white, flower-shaped curl on Viṣṇu's chest. Ś1,Ñ2,V1,3,B2,3,D2,3,9–11,T2,3,G2, 3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead the nominative singular, śrīvatsalakṣaṇaḥ, for the critical edition's vocative, lending the sense "You are the one who bears the Śrīvatsa."

24. The verse is an unmistakable reference to the vāmanāvatāra, or dwarf incarnation, of Viṣṇu. The story is widely told in the Vaiṣṇava canon. See 6.40.43; 6.47.119; 6.49.1–2; 6.53.25; 6.59.7; and notes. See, too, 1.28.2 and note.

"you spanned the three worlds with as many strides" tvayā lokās trayaḥ krāntāḥ . . . vikramais tribhiḥ: Literally, "by you the three worlds were crossed with three strides."

"After confining" baddhvā: Literally, "having bound." According to most standard versions of the story, the overly generous demon king, deprived of his lordship of the three worlds by Viṣṇu's feat, must be bound and confined to the underworld (see, for example, VāyuP 2.36.74–86).

"the great asura" mahāsuram: D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the adjective sudāruṇam, "very dreadful, very fearsome."

25. "You are Kṛṣṇa" kṛṣṇaḥ: Literally, "Kṛṣṇa." The commentators generally agree that this term should be taken in its adjectival sense of "black, blue-black, or of a dark color (kṛṣṇavarṇaḥ)." This is probably because they wish to avoid the apparent anachronism of mentioning an avatāra who will not appear until the next cosmic age. Nonetheless, in the context of this thoroughgoing Vaiṣṇava stotra, like all translators consulted, with the exception of Raghunathan, we believe that the reference is probably to the name of the other major avatāra of Viṣṇu. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 341), reading the adjective with devaḥ, "the god," renders, "the Lord that has assumed a dark form." See note to verse 14 above.

"You are Prajāpati, the lord of creatures." prajāpatiḥ: Literally, "Prajāpati." The epithet is most frequently used of the speaker, Brahmā himself. See note to verse 6 above.

26. "to heaven" divam: The commentators differ slightly as to the locus of heaven. Ck and Ct believe that the gods are asking Rāma to return to the Brahmaloka, which is known as the highest vault of heaven, after spending some time pleasurably as king (mahārājyena kiṃcitkālaṃ prahṛṣṭaḥ san divaṃ paranākākhyaṃ brahmalokam ākrama prāpnuhi—Ct). Cr understands Rāma's destination to be his eternal playground, Ayodhyā (nityakrīḍāsthalam ayodhyām ity arthaḥ).

27. "strength and might" balavīryam: The two terms are closely synonymous. Ś,B1,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the vocative deva, "O god," for bala-, "strength." This yields the sense "Your strength, O god."

"nor has your valor" amoghas te parākramaḥ: Literally, "your valor is not in vain." B3,D7,10,11,G2,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the plural na te moghāḥ parākramāḥ, "nor have your feats of valor been in vain."

"fail of their purpose" amoghāḥ: Literally, "[be] in vain."

Following 27ab, Ñ,V,B,D1–7,9–11,13,S insert a passage of one line [3261*]: "A vision of you, Rāma, is not in vain, nor is your praise."

28. "You are the ancient god and Supreme Spirit . . . to you." tvāṃ devam . . . purāṇaṃ puruṣottam: Literally, "to you, the ancient god and supreme person."

"will never fail in any way" nāsti teṣāṃ parābhavaḥ: Literally, "of them there is no defeat or humiliation."

Following 28ab, D3,5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of two lines [3264* and 3265*]: "They will always attain what they desire in this world and the next.[3264*] [Those are the men who recite[1]] this divine and ancient history, this hymn of praise composed by the seers.[3265*]"

[1]"Those are the men who recite" ye narāḥ kīrtayiṣyanti: The phrase is taken from 28c, where we have translated, "those men who praise." However, in the present context, which supplies a direct object, the meaning changes to "they will recite."

Sarga 106

Before verse 1, Ś,B1,D1–3,8,9 (preceded by 3268*),12 insert; while Ñ,V,B2–4 insert line 2 after 1ab; and D5–7,10,11,S insert following verse 9, a passage of two lines [3267*]: "Hearing this, Rāma, foremost among the eloquent, rejoiced at heart. Then that righteous man was absorbed in thought for a while, his eyes clouded with joy." Virtually all manuscripts admit this verse in whole or in part, although in different locations. Its omission from the critical text is questionable.

Following 3267*, D1–3,8,12,N (except V3) continue (either following 3267* or verse 1), while D5–7,10,11,S insert after verse 1 (D9 before 3267*), a passage of two lines [3268*]: "Then, taking Janaka's daughter Vaidehī with him, Agni, the bearer of oblations, in bodily form,[1] swiftly rose up, scattering the pyre."

[1]"in bodily form" mūrtimān: We follow Cg, who glosses, "possessed of a human body (manuṣyavigrahavān)."

1. "Agni, the shining god of fire" vibhāvasuḥ: Literally, "the one whose wealth is light or splendor."

"holding Vaidehī at his side" aṅkenādāya vaidehīm: Literally, "having taken Vaidehī by [his] hip, flank, or lap." Most English translations consulted take the word aṅka in its sense of "lap," although this seems to us improbable in light of the verb utpapāta, "he leapt or stood up." We understand with Cs that the reference is to Agni's right hip or flank, which would be the appropriate place for a male to hold a woman who stands in the relation of a daughter or daughter-in-law to him. (aṅkena svadakṣiṇotsaṅgenādāya tasya putrībhāgatvāt. yathoktaṃ bhāgo hi dakṣo duhituḥ snuṣāyā iti.) Cs argues that, since Sītā takes her life, as it were, from Agni, after having fallen into him, it is appropriate for him to regard her as his daughter. Otherwise, it would be inappropriate to say, "on the lap." (agnipātānantaraṃ jīvane 'gnijātatvaprāptyā tatputrītvasyocitatvāt. anyathāṅkeneti vyartham.) Other translators apparently share our concern. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1857) translates, "taking . . . in his arms," while both Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 391) and Pagani (1999, p. 1188) understand that Agni is holding Sītā "sur son sein."

Following verse 1, D5–7,9(before 3267*)–11,S insert a passage of two lines [3268*], which northern manuscripts insert before verse 1. See above.

2–3. "and clad in a red garment" raktāmbaradharām: Sītā, having put off the soiled yellow garments that she wore during her captivity, is now wearing the new clothing given to her at 6.102.13–14. The color of the clothing sends an ambiguous message, since red would suggest both a wedding dress and the draping of a sacrificial victim (6.102.13–14 and notes). Cf. 6.67.5 and note.

"unsinged" akliṣṭa-: Literally, "undamaged, unsullied." The idea is, as Cr indicates, that Sītā's adornments have not been damaged even through their contact with the fire (na kliṣṭāny agnisaṃbandhenāpi vibādhitāni).

"Her mind was calm" manasvinīm: Literally, "high minded or proud." We follow Cg, who glosses, "having a calm mind (prasannamanaskām)." Ś,V3,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead aninditām, "blameless."

"she looked unchanged" tathārūpām: Literally, "having such an appearance." The idea, as Cg points out, is that Sītā looks exactly as she did the moment she entered the fire, that is, she has suffered no ill effects from its flames (praveśakālikarūpavatīm). Cm supports this view.

"holding Vaidehī at his side" vaidehīm aṅke kṛtvā: See note to verse 1 above.

"Agni, the shining god of fire" vibhāvasuḥ: Literally, "the one whose wealth is light or splendor."

4. "the witness of all the world" sākṣī lokasya: As Ck and Ct note, Agni, in the form of Vaiśvānara, who resides within the bodies of all living beings, is the witness of all people's actions, both virtuous and sinful, performed mentally, verbally, or physically. (manovākkāyair lokakṛtapuṇyapāpakarmaṇaḥ sākṣī sākṣād draṣṭā. sarvadehāntarvaiśvānarātmanā nityapratiṣṭhitatvād iti bhāvaḥ.)

"Here is your Vaidehī" eṣā te . . . vaidehī: Ct, Ck, Cg, and Cs see this phrase as an allusion to the legendary substitution of an illusory Sītā (māyāsītā or chāyāsītā) for the real one, who is thought to have entered the fire at the time of her abduction by Rāvaṇa. Cs adds the detail that the real Sītā has been living on Mount Kailāsa since the abduction. These commentators thus put a special emphasis on the enclitic pronoun te, "your," which they see as referring to Rāma's real wife and not her simulacrum. See 6.102.5; 6.104.27; and notes.

"She has committed no sin." pāpam asyā na vidyate: Literally, "Of her there is no sin." Since he subscribes to the māyāsītā theory, Ct notes that the real Sītā has no taint of sin even to the extent of having been touched by Rāvaṇa (pāpaṃ rāvaṇasparśarūpam api).

5. "of . . . high moral character" vṛttaśauṇḍīrā: Literally, "elevated in or by conduct." The compound shows a fair amount of variation on the word śauṇḍīrā, "proud, haughty, elevated." The printed editions of Ct (GPP 6.118.6; NSP 6.118.6; and Gita Press 6.118.6) read instead the accusative variant vṛttaśauṭīryam, "proud of [his] good conduct or heroic in conduct." In this reading, the term agrees with tvām and refers to Rāma. The printed editions of Cg (VSP 6.121.7 and KK 6.121.7) read instead the vocative vṛttaśauṇḍīra, "O one of high moral character," which then modifies Rāma.

"She . . . has never betrayed you" na tvām aticacāra ha: Literally, "she has not been unfaithful to you." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead na tvām atyacarac chubhā, "she, the auspicious or lovely one, has not been unfaithful to you."

6. "from the deserted forest" nirjanād vanāt: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nirjane satī, "she being in a deserted [place or spot]."

Ś,D8,12 omit verses 7–13. Their inclusion in the critical text is questionable. See note to 6.104.15; cf. 3261* (following 6.105.27ab).

7. "by hordes of hideous rākṣasa women, dreadful to behold" rākṣasīsaṃghair vikṛtair ghoradarśanaiḥ: D1–4,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rākṣasībhiś ca ghorābhir ghorabuddhibhiḥ, "by terrible rākṣasa women, with terrible intentions or thoughts."

9. "Rāghava" rāghava: D1–4,9–11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead maithilīm, which lends the first line the sense "you must take Maithilī back."

"there is nothing further to be said" na kiṃcid abhidhātavyam: Literally, "nothing whatever is to be said." B1,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the feminine abhidhātavyā, yielding the sense "she is not to be discussed or criticized [further]."

Following verse 9, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of two lines [3267*]. See the note preceding the notes to verse 1.

10. "firm in his valor" dṛḍhavikramaḥ: B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead uruvikramaḥ, "of immense valor." Inexplicably, Pagani (1999, p. 1188) appears to translate this as "aux longs bras."

11. "Sītā needed to be proven innocent" sītā pāvanam arhati: Literally, "Sītā merits purification." D5,T1,G1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read instead na sītā pāpam arhati, "Sītā does not deserve [the imputation of] sin." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 342), alone among the translators consulted, renders, "Sita is not to be blamed in the least."

"before the three worlds" triṣu lokeṣu: B1,3,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead cāpi lokeṣu, "and before the people." Cr glosses this reading as "in the midst of the people, the rākṣasas, and the rest (rākṣasādijanamadhyeṣu)."

12. "surely" khalu: B1,D1–3,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bata, a particle that can express regret or censure. This value of the particle seems to have been rendered only in the translation of Pagani (1999, p. 1189), who offers, "Malheur!"

"the virtuous would have said of me" vakṣyanti māṃ santaḥ: Literally, "the virtuous will say about me." B1,D1,2,7,10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead vakṣyati māṃ lokaḥ, "people will say of me."

13. "devoted" bhaktām: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sītām, "Sītā."

14. "I . . . simply stood by" upekṣe: Literally, "I ignore or I overlook." Compare 6.105.5 and note. D5,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit verse 14 (GPP unnumbered, in brackets, between 6.118.16 and 17).

15. "her own blazing energy" svena tejasā: Ck and Ct gloss, "by [her] wifely devotion (pātivratyena)." See 6.104.24 and note.

17. "auspicious" śubhā: B3,D9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead satī, which, given the context, probably should be read as "virtuous or good woman." Cf. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 392), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 342), and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1858).

"This . . . woman could never have ruled over" neyam arhati caiśvaryam: Literally, "she was incapable of governance." Cg understands the term aiśvaryam, literally, "lordship," as an elliptical allusion to the state of having Rāvaṇa as one's lord or husband. He glosses, "she could never have had Rāvaṇa for her lord but could only have me (rāvaṇaiśvaryaṃ neyam arhati kiṃtu mamaiśvaryam arhatīty arthaḥ)." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read vaiklavyam, "timidity, weakness," for caiśvaryam, "and lordship." Ct and Ck gloss, "the oppression of cowardice (kātarya-pīḍām)." Cr glosses, "she did not deserve suffering (vaiklavyaṃ kleśaṃ nārhati)."

19. "of you . . . respected throughout the worlds" vaḥ . . . lokamānyānām: Ś,B2,D2,3, 8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead vaḥ . . . lokanāthānām, "of [you] lords or protectors of the worlds."

20. "When he had uttered these words" itīdam uktvā vacanam: Literally, "having spoken that speech." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–4,8–11,13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ity evam uktvā vijayī, "having spoken in this fashion, the victorious [Rāma] . . ."

"mighty" mahābalaḥ: Literally, "of immense power." Ś,B1,D1,3,8–12,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mahāyaśāḥ, "glorious, renowned, of great fame."

"by his mighty companions" mahābalaiḥ: Literally, "by those immensely powerful ones." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–4,8–13,T2,3,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the nominative singular mahābalaḥ, "the immensely powerful one," which then becomes a modifier of Rāma.

"Then Rāghava experienced the happiness he so richly deserved." sukhaṃ sukhārho 'nubabhūva rāghavaḥ: Literally, "Rāghava, deserving of happiness, experienced happiness."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 107

1. "Maheśvara" maheśvaraḥ: Literally, "the great lord." This epithet is most characteristic of Śiva, although it could conceivably apply to any of the great divinities. Since Brahmā appeared to be the spokesman for the gods in the previous sarga, the epithet is possibly meant to apply to him. This appears to be the understanding of the majority of northern manuscripts and the printed edition of Gorresio (6.104.1), which read instead pitāmahaḥ, "the grandfather," i.e., Brahmā. However, since none of the southern commentators feels called upon to gloss "Brahmā," and since the only other specific reference to the deity in question, mahādeva- (at verse 9 below), is also most commonly associated with Śiva, we agree with Cg and Ck, who gloss rudraḥ, "Rudra," that the speaker here is probably Śiva. Cf. note to 6.113.8–11.

2. "Foremost of weapon bearers" śastrabhṛtāṃ vara: Ñ,V,B2,4,D4,5,7,10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead dharmabhṛtāṃ vara, "O foremost of those who uphold righteousness."

3. "the vast . . . darkness . . . that had engulfed the entire world" sarvasya lokasya pravṛddham . . . tamaḥ: Literally, "the expanded or extended darkness of the whole world." Ck, Cr, and Ct gloss duḥkham, "pain, misery," for tamaḥ, "darkness."

"in the form of the fear of Rāvaṇa" rāvaṇajaṃ bhayam: Literally, "[that was the] fear generated by Rāvaṇa."

4–6. "You must now console . . . see . . . You must assume . . . reward . . . Then . . . you must establish . . . At last, once you have offered . . . and attained . . . you should give away . . . and ascend" āśvāsya . . . dṛṣṭvā . . . prāpya . . . nandayitvā . . . sthāpayitvā . . . iṣṭvā . . . prāpya . . . dattvā . . . gantum arhasi: Literally, "having consoled, having seen, having attained, having gratified, having established, having sacrificed, having attained, having given, you should go." The entire passage of three verses is a single extended complex sentence, consisting of a string of subordinate clauses governed by eight gerunds that are only resolved in the final pāda with the finite construction gantum arhasi, "you should go." We have broken the series up into smaller syntactic units and have supplied transitions for the sake of readability. The commentators see this as a recapitulation of Viṣṇu's promise in the Bālakāṇḍa (467*, following 1.15.20 = GPP 1.15.29–30). Cf. 1.1.74–76.

"despondent Bharata" bharataṃ dīnam: Cs notes that Bharata is despondent over the death of his father and his separation from Rāma (pitṛnāśena tvadadarśanena ca).

"illustrious Kausalyā . . . Kaikeyī" kausalyāṃ ca yaśasvinīm / kaikeyīṃ ca: Despite the syntax, which places the adjective in the same pāda as Kausalyā, Cg believes that the adjective yaśasvinīm, "illustrious," is meant to apply to Kaikeyī, as it is she who is the root cause of the destruction of Rāvaṇa (yaśasvinīm iti kaikeyīviśeṣaṇaṃ tanmūlatvād rāvaṇavadhasya tasyā yaśasvitvam). Cg's interpretation, which might appear forced in this context, is, no doubt, inspired by 6.109.19 and 6.115.39. This reading is reflected only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 342), who renders, "you should bring comfort . . . to Kausalyā and to Kaikeyī of the great renown." Compare 6.109.17–19; 6.115.39; and notes.

"the Horse Sacrifice" turagamedhena: Daśaratha performs an aśvamedha in the Bālakāṇḍa (1.12–13 and notes), and Rāma performs his aśvamedha at 7.83. See S. Goldman 2004. See, too, 6.116.81 and notes.

"the triple heaven" tridivam: Commentators differ as to the exact location intended here. Ct and Ck understand the reference to be to the world of Brahmā, which is the third heaven with respect to the two lower realms of earth and atmosphere (bhūsvaḥpadāpekṣayā tṛtīyaṃ divaṃ brahmalokam). This interpretation is in keeping with the description at 1.1.76. Cr identifies it as Sāketa, the Vaiṣṇava name for the eternal heavenly city of Ayodhyā. Cs believes it is the shining triple world known as Vaikuṇṭha, which is the abode of Ananta [Śeṣa] in Śvetadvīpa (śvetadvīpānantāsanavaikuṇṭhākhyaprakāśamānalokatrayam). Cf. 6.116.90, 3709*, lines 5–6, n. 16. See notes to 6.5.9 and 6.105.20.

7. "here . . . is" eṣaḥ: Literally, "this [one is]." The commentators are virtually unanimous in their opinion that the pronoun here is deictic in that, since Daśaratha will have taken on a divine body, Rāma would not be able to recognize him immediately. Therefore Śiva must point him out with his finger (eṣa iti purāḥsthasyāpi devadehaparigraheṇājñāyamānatayāṅgulyā nirdeśaḥ—so Ct). Compare note to verse 30 below.

"your illustrious elder" gurus tava mahāyaśāḥ: Cs differs from the other commentators in arguing that we should read the sequence gurus + tava, "your elder," together as the bahuvrīhi compound gurustava, "O you who praise [stava] your elders [guru-]," which is then a vocative epithet of Rāma. As an alternative, he proposes reading all three words together as a bahuvrīhi compound with the sense "who is greatly illustrious through the praise of his gurus," which would be an epithet of Daśaratha.

8. "Saved by you" tvayā . . . tāritaḥ: Literally, "made to cross over by you." It may be that the reference here is to Daśaratha's having been saved from uttering a falsehood by Rāma's willing acceptance of banishment. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 314), in a note, offers this as one possible explanation. His second is that Rāma would have performed the pious acts and funerary rites obligatory upon the son of a deceased person. Cr, the only commentator to remark on the term tāritaḥ here, understands that Daśaratha, who, through his separation from his son Rāma, had gone merely to the world of Indra, has now ascended to the blessed realm of Sāketa, which is characterized by perfect lordship (putreṇa tvayā tvadviyogena tāritaḥ prasthāpita indralokaṃ sakalaiśvaryaviśiṣṭa sāketaṃ gataḥ). See note to verse 16 below.

"the majestic king" śrīmān: Literally, "the majestic one."

9. "the great god Śiva" mahādeva-: Literally, "the great god." See verse 1 above and notes.

"Kākutstha" kākutsthaḥ: V3,D7,10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rāghavaḥ, "Rāghava."

"who stood atop his flying chariot" vimānaśikharasthasya: Literally, "who stood on the top or summit of his flying chariot." See 6.115.30 and note.

10. "his own innate splendor" svayā lakṣmyā: Literally, "with his own splendor."

13. "I care nothing for heaven and the esteem of the divine seers" na me svargo bahumataḥ saṃmānaś ca surarṣibhiḥ: Literally, "heaven is not esteemed by [of] me [nor is] honor by the god-seers." Cg takes the term surarṣi as a synonym for the more common term devarṣi, "divine seer," and we believe he is probably correct in this. The compound can also be taken as a dvandva in the sense of "by the gods and seers." Of the two translators consulted who share this reading, only Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 240), who reads saṃvāso vā surarṣibhiḥ, "living together with the surarṣis," for saṃmānaś ca surarṣibhiḥ, translates in this way, rendering, "il coabitar coi Devi e coi Risci." D10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read samānaś ca surarṣabhaiḥ for saṃmānaś ca surarṣibhiḥ, which gives the line the meaning "Heaven, which is honored by the bulls among the gods, is not esteemed by me."

Following verse 13, M3 and the texts and printed edition of Cg insert a passage of two lines [3285*, lines 3–4]: "Seeing you today, when you have slain your enemy, fulfilled your intention,[1] and completed your sojourn in the wilderness, I have experienced supreme delight."

[1]"fulfilled your intention" saṃpūrṇamānasam: Literally, "one by whom one's mental [desire] has been fulfilled."

14. "regarding your banishment" tava pravrājanārthāni: Literally, "having your banishment for their object."

"were still rankling in my heart" sthitāni hṛdraye mama: Literally, "stand or remain in my heart." Cg notes that, in so stating, Daśaratha is suggesting that he has been sorely grieved by the events alluded to (tena duḥkhito 'bhūvam iti sūcitam).

"most eloquent of men" vadatāṃ vara: Literally, "best among speakers."

15. "safe and sound" kuśalinam: Literally, "well, healthy, prosperous."

"like the sun, maker of day, emerging from a dense fog" nīhārād iva bhāskaraḥ: Literally, "like the day-maker from fog."

16. "a great man" mahātmanā: Literally, "a great one or a great-souled one."

"just as a righteous brahman was saved by Aṣṭāvakra" aṣṭāvakreṇa dharmātmā tārito brāhmaṇo yathā: As Cg, Cm, and Cs point out, the allusion here is to the Mahābhārata's tale of how the deformed sage Aṣṭāvakra saved his father, Kahola, who had been drowned as punishment for losing a debate. The story is related at Mahābhārata 3.134. Other commentators identify this merely as "a purāṇic tale." D7,10,11, and the printed texts of Ct read kaholaḥ, "Kahola," for the second occurrence of tāritaḥ in pāda d. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, pp. 314–15) notes the story. On the notion that Daśaratha has been saved by the appearance of Rāma, compare notes to 6.115.39, where Ck, Cm, and Ct understand Daśaratha's salvation to have been achieved by the obduracy of Kaikeyī, which is the root cause of the destruction of Rāvaṇa, etc.

17. "my gentle son" saumya: Literally, "O gentle one."

"I now realize . . . that you are the Supreme Spirit, who was enjoined" idānīṃ vijānāmi yathā . . . vihitaṃ puruṣottamam: Literally, "I know Puruṣottama [to have been] enjoined." Given the context in which this verse is uttered, there is little question but that Cg is correct in understanding the term puruṣottamam (v.l. puruṣottama) here to be the Vaiṣṇava epithet for the Lord as the Supreme Spirit. He notes, "the use of the term puruṣottama expresses the idea, 'You are none other than Viṣṇu, who has taken on a human form in order to slay Rāvaṇa' (puruṣottamety anena bhavān viṣṇur eva rāvaṇavadhārthaṃ manuṣyatvaṃ gata ity ucyate)." Despite this, several translators render the epithet in its nontheological sense, "best of men." Printed editions of the text of Cg and Cm (VSP 6.122.18 and KK 6.122.18)—unnoted by the critical edition (p. 788)—read the vocative puruṣottama for the critical edition's accusative puruṣottamam. Given this reading, the verse has to be understood to mean "O Puruṣottama, I now realize that all this was ordained." Cg fleshes out the ellipsis by supplying the phrase "these events such as the obstruction to your consecration, etc. (idam abhiṣekavighnādikaṃ karma)." This idea is reflected in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 344), who renders, "Only now, I know . . . how all this was contrived . . . O best of men." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read pihitam, "concealed, covered, disguised," for vihitam, "enjoined." Ct and Ck gloss, "The Supreme Spirit was concealed. One must add the phrase 'in the form of my son.' (pihitaṃ puruṣottamam ācchāditam. matputratveneti śeṣaḥ.)" Cr adds the accusative pronoun tvām, "you," and glosses pihitam with prāptam, "attained, reached," which we must understand here as "made to come" (puruṣottamaṃ tvāṃ yathā pihitaṃ prāptam).

18. "will have achieved her most cherished desire" siddhārthā: Literally, "she whose end or goal has been achieved."

19. "will the people have achieved their most cherished desire" siddhārthāḥ . . . narāḥ: Literally, "men whose end or goal has been achieved."

"dripping with water" jalārdram: Literally, "moist or wet with water." The reference is to the water used in the ritual of royal consecration, which gives that ceremony, the abhiṣeka, literally, "the sprinkling," its name. Ś,Ñ2,V,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rājye caiva, "in the kingship."

21. "and wise Lakṣmaṇa" lakṣmaṇena ca dhīmatā: Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2,4,D4,8,10,11, the texts and printed editions of Ct, and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.104.27) read instead matprītyā lakṣmaṇena ca, "and at my pleasure, with Lakṣmaṇa." This has been more or less correctly rendered by Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 241) as "per mio amore," but preferably, we feel, by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1861) as "for my pleasure." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 394) incorrectly reads matprītyā adjectivally in the sense of "dear," yielding "avec ma chère Sītā." In this he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 343) and Pagani (1999, p. 1190). Dutt (1893, p. 1516) ignores the phrase entirely.

22. "and have thus fulfilled your vow" pratijñā saphalā kṛtā: Literally, "the promise has been made fruitful." Ś1,Ñ2,V1,2,B3,D8,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read the slight variant pratijñā pūritā tvayā, "the vow has been fulfilled by you." The phrase is slightly ambiguous, as it could refer to a vow of Rāma's to carry out his father's order of banishment or to destroy Rāvaṇa. On the other hand, it could also refer to Rāma's having brought about the fulfillment of Daśaratha's promise to Kaikeyī to grant her wishes. Among the commentators, only Cr addresses this question directly, claiming that, in killing Rāvaṇa and thereby satisfying the gods, Rāma has fulfilled his vows (rāvaṇaṃ hatvā devatāḥ paritoṣitā ata eva pratijñāḥ pūritāḥ). Among the translations consulted, all, with the exception of Gita Press, understand the reference to be to Rāma's own vow. Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 344) makes it clear that he believes the reference is to Rāma's vow to spend fourteen years in the forest. He translates: "Having stayed the full term of fourteen years in the forest, you have fulfilled your vow." Dutt (1893, p. 1516) understands similarly. Other translators who see the vow as Rāma's are less clear about what they take that vow to be. Only Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1861) understands the reference to be to Rāma's dedication to making his father's vow truthful, translating, "my pledge (given to Kaikeyī) has (also) been implemented by you."

23. "You have performed a praiseworthy feat and gained renown" kṛtaṃ karma yaśaḥ ślāghyaṃ prāptam: Despite the word order, we agree with Cr in reading the adjective ślāghyam, "praiseworthy," to modify only the noun karma, "feat, deed." Other commentators are silent on this point, while several translators read the adjective in two different senses with the word karma, "feat," and the word yaśaḥ, "glory."

25. "may . . . not be visited upon" na spṛśet: Literally, "may it not touch."

"I renounce both you and your son" saputrāṃ tvāṃ tyajāmi: Daśaratha renounces Kaikeyī and Bharata at Ayodhyākāṇḍa 12. See 2.12.11 and note.

26. "he now spoke to him" punaḥ . . . uvāca: Literally, "he spoke again."

27. 6.107.27ab = 6.107.32cd.

"In devotedly serving Rāma as well as Sītā Vaidehī, you" rāmaṃ śuśrūṣatā bhaktyā vaidehyā saha sītayā . . . te: Literally, "by you who, obeying Rāma with devotion together with Sītā Vaidehī." The syntax of the verse is slightly ambiguous since the phrase vaidehyā saha sītayā," together with Sītā Vaidehī," can be read as construing either with rāmaṃ, "Rāma," or with te, "by you (lit., of you, Lakṣmaṇa)," to indicate either that Lakṣmaṇa served both Rāma and Sītā or that Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā served Rāma. Given the tenor of the narrative and Lakṣmaṇa's role in it, it is far more probable that Lakṣmaṇa is serving both his brother and sister-in-law. Compare Lakṣmaṇa's vow at 2.28.10. See, too, R. Goldman 1980. This is certainly the understanding of Cg, who reorders the words in his gloss to avoid any ambiguity. He glosses, " 'by you serving Rāma along with Sītā,' that is the syntax (sītayā saha rāmaṃ śuśrūṣatety anvayaḥ)."

Ñ,V,B2–4,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse. Translations that follow the text of Ct omit it as well. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1861), however, knows and translates it (6.119.28). The inclusion of the verse in the critical edition is seriously questionable, as it clearly violates the principles set forth by the critical editors in volume 1 (Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv).

28. "you will attain" prāpsyasi: The translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1861) has apparently accidentally omitted the subject of the verb, "you," resulting in the clearly incorrect reading, "Rama being pleased (with you), will attain."

"and everlasting glory" mahimānaṃ tathaiva ca: Literally, "and greatness as well." Since this apparently refers to Lakṣmaṇa's reward in heaven as opposed to his earthly glory mentioned in pāda b (yaśaś ca vipulaṃ bhuvi), we have added the word "eternal" to emphasize the contrast. Cg makes an interesting remark in this context: that, on the basis of his comments in this verse, it is apparent that Daśaratha is unaware that Lakṣmaṇa, too, is an avatāra of Viṣṇu (lakṣmaṇasyāpi viṣṇvavatāratvaṃ na jānāti daśarathaḥ).

29. "to the welfare" śubheṣu: Literally, "with regard to auspicious or propitious things." Ś1,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4,8,10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead hiteṣu, "welfare or benefits." In the context, the difference in meaning appears slight.

30. "All these gods, including Indra, along with the three worlds" ete sendrās trayo lokāḥ: Literally, "these with Indra, the three worlds." We follow the suggestion of Cg, who believes that Daśaratha is making a gesture with his hand to include Rudra as well (among the gods present) (eta iti hastanirdeśena rudro 'py antargataḥ). Compare note to verse 7 above. All translators consulted subordinate the pronoun and adjective to the phrase trayo lokāḥ, understanding, "the three worlds, including Indra." But we believe that the pronoun ete makes this problematic and that we should read as Cg suggests.

"have approached" abhigamya: Literally, "having approached." Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D4,8, 10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead abhivādya, "having respectfully saluted."

31. "has been revealed by them" taduktam: Literally, "is said [to be] by them." We understand the pronoun tat- to refer to the gods, divine seers, etc., mentioned in the preceding verse.

"Brahman, the . . . Supreme Spirit" brahmanirmitam: Literally, "consisting of Brahman." The commentators' interpretations differ, however. Cv and Cm gloss, "expounded in the vedas (vedapratipādikam)." Cg understands, "that is Brahman, who is said to be fashioned in the form of Rāma, that is, incarnated in the form of Rāma (tad etad brahma rāmo rāmarūpeṇa nirmitaṃ rāmarūpeṇāvatīrṇam ity uktam)." D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr read instead brahmasaṃmitam, "equal to or measured out by Brahman." Ct and Ck understand the compound in the same way that Cv and Cm understand the critical reading. They argue that it means "expounded in the vedic passage that states 'all these worlds are within him (TaiBr 2.8.8.9a)' (brahmasaṃmitaṃ brahmaṇāntar asminn ime lokā ityādi śrutyā pratipāditam)." Cr glosses, simply, "equal to the vedas (vedatulyam)."

32. 6.107.32cd = 6.107.27ab.

"Devotedly serving Rāma as well as Sītā Vaidehī" rāmaṃ śuśrūṣatā bhaktyā vaidehyā saha sītayā: See note to verse 27 above. D10–12 and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read vyagram, "intently," for the critical edition's bhaktyā, "devotedly." D10–12 and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct also read enam, "him," for the critical edition's rāmam, "Rāma."

"you have attained righteousness" avāptaṃ dharmacaraṇam . . . tvayā: Literally, "the practice of dharma is attained by you." D7 and the printed editions of Ct read instead the awkward compound avāptadharmācaraṇam. Translations that follow this reading are forced to read avāpta- as if it were avāpatam.

33. For verse 33, Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8–12,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck substitute a passage of two lines [3300*]: "When the king had spoken in this fashion to Lakṣmaṇa, he said, 'My daughter,' and then, sweetly and softly, spoke to his daughter-in-law, who stood with her hands cupped in reverence."

34. "to demonstrate your purity" tvadviśuddhyartham: Literally, "for the sake of your purification."

Following verse 34, Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D4,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and KK (in brackets, 6.122.36) insert, while B1,D1–3,9 continue following 3301*, a passage of two lines [3302*]: "My daughter, this proof of your virtuous character,[1] so difficult to perform, that you have accomplished, shall outshine[2] the glory of all other women."

[1]"this proof of your virtuous character" cāritralakṣaṇam: Literally, "a sign or indication of conduct or character."

[2]"shall outshine" abhibhaviṣyati: Literally, "it will surpass or overcome."

35. "Fair-browed woman" subhru: Literally, "O one of beautiful brows." Ñ,V1,B2–4,D4,10,11,13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead the adverb kāmam, "granted or it is true."

"you do not need to be instructed" na tvam . . . samādheyā: The verb sam + ā $\sqrt{dhā}$, normally, "to put together, to concentrate, to take on, to conceive, etc.," does not appear to carry a meaning suitable to the context. Like all translations consulted, we follow the glosses of Ct, Ck, Cm, and Cg, who, in various ways, understand that the verb must be taken in the sense of "to be instructed or enjoined (upadeṣṭavyā—so Cg)."

36. "and his daughter-in-law" tathā snuṣām: Literally, "and the daughter-in-law." Ś,Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ca rāghavaḥ, "and Rāghava." The family dynastic name here refers to Daśaratha.

"radiant" jvalan: Literally, "blazing." Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D4,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nṛpaḥ, "the king."

Following verse 36, Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8–12,T2,3,M2, the edition of KK (within brackets, 6.122.39), and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of four lines [3304]: "Mounting his flying chariot, the illustrious and majestic foremost of kings took leave of his two sons and Sītā, and, the hairs of his body bristling with delight,[1] he proceeded to the world of Indra, the foremost of the gods.[2]"

[1]"the hairs of his body bristling with delight" saṃhṛṣṭatanuḥ: Literally, "his body thrilled or horripilating."

[2]"of Indra, the foremost of the gods" devapravarasya: Literally, "of the chief or foremost of the gods."

The meter is upajāti, with a hypermetric pāda b.

Sarga 108

1. "Daśaratha Kākutstha" kākutsthe: Literally, "Kākutstha."

"great Indra, the chastiser of Pāka" mahendraḥ pākaśāsanaḥ: Ct, Cm, and Cs are disturbed by the fact that both the Rāmopākhyāna (MBh 2.375.42–43) and the Padmapurāṇa (citing the śloka—pitāmahavarāt tūrṇaṃ jīvayāmāsa tān nṛpaḥ) ascribe the miracle of the resurrection of the slain monkeys to Brahmā. In an effort to avoid this seeming contradiction, they argue that we are to take the reference to Mahendra here to mean Brahmā, who is accompanied by Indra (mahendraḥ tatsahito brahmety arthaḥ—Ct, Cm).

2. "Your seeing us" darśanam . . . tavāsmākam: Cg argues that it is the gods who are the agents of the darśana, or "vision," here. He acknowledges, however, that others understand that the agent is Rāma (tavāsmākaṃ darśanam asmatkartṛkaṃ darśanam . . . kecit tu tvatkartṛkam asmadviṣayaṃ darśanam ity artha ity āhuḥ). This latter position makes better sense to us, as it is the gods who are offering to repay Rāma's service in the form of granting him "the fruit," as it were, of his vision of them.

"I am pleased" prītiyukto 'smi: D5,10,11,T2,3,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead the plural prītiyuktāḥ smaḥ, "we are pleased."

"what your heart desires" yan manasecchasi: Literally, "what you desire with [your] mind."

3. Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2,4,D4,8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute for verse 3 a passage of two lines [3307*]: "Addressed in this fashion by the great god mighty Indra,[1] who was so pleased, Rāghava, delighted and with a very calm mind, spoke these words."

[1]"the great god mighty Indra" mahendreṇa . . . mahātmanā: Literally, "by the great one, great Indra."

4. "If you are truly pleased with me" yadi prītiḥ samutpannā mayi: Literally, "if pleasure has arisen with respect to me."

"lord of all the gods" sarvasureśvara: Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead te vibudheśvara, "on your part, O lord of the wise [gods]."

"my words" me . . . vacanam: T3,G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read te, "your," for me, "mine," yielding the sense "please make your words come true."

5. "restored to life" jīvitaṃ prāpya: Literally, "having obtained life."

Following verse 5, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M1,2,3,5 (M2 inserts 3309* after 3310*, line 2), and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators (printed editions of Cg read line 1 only) read a passage of two lines [3309*]: "Humbler of pride,[1] I wish to see all of those monkeys who, for my sake, were sundered from their sons and wives now happy once again.[2]"

[1]"Humbler of pride" mānada: The term is ambiguous. Its verbal element -da can be derived from either the root √do, "to destroy," as we have done, or from the root √dā

"to give." In the latter sense the epithet normally means "bestower of pride," and the translations consulted have rendered it in this fashion. See 6.13.7–8; 6.110.6; and notes. Cf. 6.104.10 and note.

[2]"now happy once again" prītamanasaḥ: Literally, "their minds or hearts pleased or delighted."

D7,10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, following 3309*, continue, while Ñ2,V1,2,B2,4,D13,M2 insert after verse 5, a passage of two lines [3310*, lines 1 and 2]: "Bull among the gods, let those valorous heroes who, heedless of death, were slain after making great efforts, live once more.[1] [1–2]"

[1]"Bull among the gods, let . . . live once more" jīveyuḥ surarṣabha: Ś,Ñ2,V1,2,B2, 3,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead jīvayaitān puraṃdara, 'O destroyer of citadels, bring them to life."

6. "be reunited" sameyuḥ: Literally, "let them come together." Ck, Ct, Cm, and Cg understand that the revivified monkeys should be reunited with their sons and wives as mentioned at 3309* (following verse 5 above) (sameyur ity atra putrair dāraiś cety āvartanīyam—so Cg). See verse 11 below, where the reunion with relatives is made explicit.

7. "Humbler of pride" mānada: See note to 3309* (following verse 5 above).

7ab = 3314*, line 4 (with minor variants). See 3314* following verse 10 below.

8. "choice" mukhyāni: Literally, "foremost, principal, best." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4,8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead puṣpāṇi, "flowers."

9. "words, which manifested his pleasure" vacanaṃ prītilakṣaṇam: Literally, "words having signs of pleasure." Cg explains, "prītilakṣaṇam means 'that by which pleasure is indicated,' in other words, that which manifests or suggests pleasure (prītir lakṣyate 'neneti prītilakṣaṇaṃ prītivyañjakam)." Ś,Ñ,V,B3,4,D8,10–13,T1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read prītisaṃyutam, "joined or filled with pleasure," for prītilakṣaṇam.

10. "This is a major boon" mahān ayaṃ varaḥ: Literally, "this is a great boon." As the commentators point out, Indra means that this boon is difficult to accomplish (duḥsādhyaḥ—so Cr). As Ct notes, it is difficult to revive even a single dead creature, let alone immeasurable numbers of them, and the feat is thus beyond the capacities of anyone other than Indra. (ekasyāpi mṛtasya punar ujjīvanaṃ duṣkaram. aparimitamṛtajīvanaṃ tu madatiriktāśakyam.) Cg goes into some detail as to what is involved here, noting that the greatness of the boon involves bringing about a feat never accomplished before in the form of reassembling in their proper places the scattered hands, feet, tails, etc., of the slain monkeys and bringing them back from the next world (varasya mahattvam itas tato viprakīrṇakaracaraṇapucchādisvasvasaṃsthānasaṃdhānalokāntaragatānayanādirūpāghaṭitārthaghaṭitatvam). Cm understands similarly.

"when their sleep is done" nidrākṣaye: Literally, "at the end or destruction of sleep."

Following 10ab, D5–7,10,11,S, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of four lines [3314*]: "Nonetheless, I have never spoken falsely,[1] and therefore this shall come to pass.[1] Those apes and tawny monkeys who have been slain—their heads and arms severed[2] by the rākṣasas in battle—shall arise,[3] together with the langurs.[3] Free from their pain and their wounds, they shall be filled once more with strength and vigor.[4][4]"

[1]"I have never spoken falsely" dvir mayā noktapūrvam: Literally, "never before by me has it been spoken twice."

[2]"their heads and arms severed" nikṛttānanabāhavaḥ: Literally, "whose faces and arms had been cut."

[3]"Those . . . tawny monkeys . . . shall arise" samutsthāsyanti harayaḥ: D7,10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead samuttiṣṭhantu te sarve, "let them all arise."

[4]3314* line 4 = 7ab (with minor variants).

11. "with their friends, their relatives, their kinsmen, and their own people" suhṛdbhir bāndhavaiś caiva jñātibhiḥ svajanena ca: The four terms tend to overlap in their semantic fields. It is difficult to find a comparable list of words in English that would convey the specific meanings that each term may carry. Construed more precisely, the terms can have relatively restricted meanings as follows: suhṛd refers to friends, companions, or allies; bāndhava, to maternal relatives; jñāti, to paternal relatives; and svajana, generically to all those people, e.g., family, servants, and countrymen, who may be associated with an individual although not necessarily related by blood.

12. Compare 6.4.48; 6.18.32–34; 6.112.17; and notes.

13. "now healed and free of wounds" saṃvṛtair nirvraṇaiḥ punaḥ: The critical reading saṃvṛtaiḥ, literally, "covered over, knit together, closed up," has to be interpreted here, we believe, in the sense of "healed." No commentator or printed edition shares this reading. G,M1–3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm, whose reading is closest to the critical text, read instead saṃvṛttaiḥ, "became or had become." This yields the sense "with limbs or bodies that had become free from wounds." Cg explains similarly, "characterized by bodies that had become free from wounds (nirvraṇaiḥ saṃvṛttair nirvraṇībhūtair gātrair upalakṣitāḥ)."

Ś,Ñ1,V2,B2–4,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead idānīṃ nirvraṇaiḥ samaiḥ, "and [their bodies] now were whole and free from wounds." Translations that follow the text of Ct render this variant, although a number of them understand the term samaiḥ in its sense of "equal or identical."

Following 13ab, D5–7,10,11,S (M1 after verse 12) insert a passage of one line [3318*]: "Then all those bulls among the tawny monkeys[1] rose up as if they had been sleeping."

[1]"all those bulls among the tawny monkeys" haripuṃgavāḥ: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead harisattamāḥ, "the foremost among the tawny monkeys."

Following verse 13, M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read a passage of one line [3321*]: "All of the monkeys respectfully saluted Rāghava."

14. "had had his wish fulfilled" paripūrṇārtham: Literally, "whose goal had been fulfilled."

"they first praised him, who was so praiseworthy and who was accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa, and then they said" ūcus te prathamaṃ stutvā stavārhaṃ sahalakṣmaṇam: Ś2,Ñ,V,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead abruvan paramaprītāḥ stutvā rāmaṃ salakṣmaṇam, "Having praised Rāma together with Lakṣmaṇa, in the highest delight, they said."

15. "hero" vīra: Ñ,D10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rājan, "O king or your majesty."

"long-suffering" tapasvinīm: Literally, "wretched or miserable [woman]." Ś,Ñ2,V1,2, B,D1–4,8–12,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead yaśasvinīm, "illustrious, glorious."

Following verse 15, D5,6,T,G1,3,M insert, while V2,D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert following 16ab, a passage of one line [3323*]: "[You must see,] scorcher of your foes, great Śatrughna and all of your mothers."

16. "once you have gone there" gatvā: Literally, "having gone [there]." The idea evidently is that Rāma, after meeting Bharata in Nandigrāma, will proceed to Ayodhyā.

"and so bring joy to the people of the city" paurān . . . praharṣaya: Literally, "delight the people."

Following 16ab, V2,D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of one line [3323*]. See note to verse 15 above.

17. "When they had spoken in this fashion . . . took their leave of Rāma" evam uktvā tam āmantrya rāmam: Literally, "having spoken in this fashion and having taken leave of him, Rāma." Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead evam uktvā sahasrākṣo rāmam, "having spoken in this fashion to Rāma, thousand-eyed [Indra]."

"in great delight, they went off to heaven" hṛṣṭā jagmuḥ surā divam: Literally, "the happy gods went to heaven." Ś,Ñ2,V1,3,B2,4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead yayau hṛṣṭaḥ suraiḥ saha, "[Indra,] delighted, departed together with the gods."

18. "ordered the army to make camp" vāsam ājñāpayat: Literally, "he ordered a dwelling." We follow the commentators, who understand that Rāma orders the monkeys, etc., back to their encampment (vāsaṃ yathāpūrvaṃ vānarādisthitim ājñāpayat—so Cr).

19. "radiant with splendor" śriyā jvalantī: Literally, "blazing with śrī." Cr glosses "the goddess or glow of victory (vijayalakṣmyā)" for śriyā, "with splendor."

"as does the night illumined by the cool-rayed moon" niśā praṇīteva hi śītaraśminā: Literally, "like the night led forth by the one of cool rays." Nothing in the normal semantic range of the verb pra $\sqrt{nī}$, "to lead forth, set, establish," seems entirely appropriate to this simile. Given the context, we follow Cg's gloss, "illuminated (prakāśitā)." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 397) translates, "la nuit à la quelle préside l'astre aux froids rayons." In this he appears to be followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1193), who renders praṇītā as "sous la conduite de." Other translators tend to render as we have.

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Ct concludes his comments on this sarga with a discussion of the circumstances under which the slain monkeys have been restored to life. In this discussion he raises several points. The first is that, although Rāma could have easily accomplished this miracle on his own, he effects it through Indra and Brahmā in order to conceal his true divine form, since he remains incarnate in a human body. Next Ct takes up the issue that some authorities appear to believe that Indra has accomplished the resurrection of the monkeys by showering amṛta over the battlefield. This, in turn, raises the issue, similar to the one raised earlier in the kāṇḍa at the time of Hanumān's revival of the slain monkeys with the fragrance of the life-restoring herb, as to why this wholesale resurrection does not also bring the fallen rākṣasas to life. Ct argues that the ashes of the cremated rākṣasas would have been thrown into the sea on the day of Rāvaṇa's funeral and so there would be no question of their being restored to life. Moreover, Ct continues, earlier during the battle, it was stated that the bodies of the rākṣasa dead were thrown into the ocean. Ct acknowledges that some authorities believe that the verse in which the marine burial of the rākṣasa dead is reported is a "modern" interpolation. Still, he sees no contradiction, since he argues that all the slain could not, in fact, be revived by the mere aroma of the healing herbs. Instead, he claims that (as shown in sarga 89, where Lakṣmaṇa is revived in this fashion) the restoration can only be accomplished by the individual administration of the crushed or powdered herbs. Ct concludes by noting that, in any case, the dead are unable to smell anything and that nowhere is it stated that Rāvaṇa gave any order to dispose of the dead in the manner described above. (yady api rāmeṇāpīcchāmātreṇaitat sukaraṃ tathāpi gṛhītamanuṣyadehatvāt tatsvarūpagopanāya sendrabrahmadvārā tathā kṛtam iti dhyeyam. ye 'py amṛtavṛṣṭyendreṇa sarvasamutthānaṃ kṛtam iti vadanti. tatpakṣe 'pi rāvaṇasaṃskāradine sarvarakṣasāṃ dāhādisaṃskārapūrvakaṃ bhasmanaḥ samudre prakṣepān na tadutthānaśaṅkā. pūrvaṃ yuddhakāla eva mṛtānāṃ samudre prakṣepa iti mūla eva pūrvam uktatvāc ca. anye tu sa ślokas tatrādhunikaprakṣiptaḥ. na hy oṣadhigandhamātreṇa sarveṣāṃ viśalyatā. kiṃtu cūrṇīkṛtya tasya dāneneti prāg evoktam. tathā ca tadabhāvān na teṣāṃ viśalyatā. mṛtānāṃ gandhāghrāṇābhāvāc ca. rāvaṇasya tathājñāyā aśravaṇāc cety āhuḥ.) See note to 6.61.67, 1396* and note. Cf. note to 6.62.2.

Sarga 109

1. "risen at his leisure" sukhotthitam: Literally, "who had arisen comfortably." D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sukhoditam, which, if it is derived from ud $\sqrt{i}$ "to arise, get up," would be synonymous with sukhotthitam, and, indeed, this is the understanding of Ct, who glosses, "having awakened at leisure (sukhaprabuddham—so also Cm, glossing the critical reading)." Cr appears to understand uditam to be a participle of $\sqrt{vad}$, "to speak." He then takes the compound as an adverb modifying uṣitam, "passed, spent, dwelled," glossing, "who had passed the night in such a way that it was characterized by pleasant conversation (sukhakathanaviśiṣṭaṃ yathā bhavati tathoṣitam)."

"wishing him victory" jayaṃ pṛṣṭvā: Literally, "having asked about victory." We understand with Ct and Cm that Vibhīṣaṇa is offering the standard auspicious greeting to a king, "jaya! [be victorious!] (jayaśabdaṃ prayuṅkṣva)." Pagani (1999, p. 1193) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 347) understand that Vibhīṣaṇa is greeting Rāma as the victor.

2–3. "Here is water for your bath" snānāni: Literally, "baths." Our translation, like that of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 347), follows the gloss of Cg, who understands, "waters fit for bathing (snānīyajalāni)." Cm glosses, "implements for bathing (snānopa- karaṇāni)." Ck, Ct, and Cr gloss, "articles for the bath such as fragrances, oil, etc. (snānasādhanasugandhatailāni—so Ck, Ct).

"heavenly sandalpaste, and various kinds of garlands" candanāni ca divyāni mālyāni vividhāni ca: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct transpose the words divyāni and mālyāni, lending the half verse more the sense of "various kinds of divine sandalpaste and garlands."

"These lotus-eyed women" imā nāryaḥ padmanibhekṣaṇāḥ: Literally, "These women whose eyes are like lotuses."

"skilled in the arts of grooming" alaṃkāravidaḥ: Literally, "knowing ornamentation."

Following 3ab, T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of one line [3327*, line 1]: "Please accept all of this, out of a desire to grant me your favor."

4. "You should instead invite" upanimantraya: Literally, "[you] invite." We have added the word "instead," as Rāma will decline Vibhīṣaṇa's offer to bathe.

5–6. "the . . . prince" kumāraḥ: Ś,Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D1–3,8–12,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bharataḥ, "Bharata."

"who is delicate and accustomed to comforts" sukhocitaḥ / sukumāraḥ: Compare the description of Bharata at 3.15.28 and 6.113.26–30.

"is nonetheless true to his vows" satyasaṃśravaḥ: Literally, "one of true vows." Cg sees this term as a reference to Bharata's vow to immolate himself should Rāma not return on the very day that his fourteen years of exile are completed (see notes to 2.104.22, 2304*, line 2). See note to verse 20 below. Ñ2,V1,3,B2,3,D5–7,10,11, G1,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead satyasaṃśrayaḥ, "whose refuge is truth."

"I do not care for" na me . . . bahumatam: Literally, "it is not highly esteemed by me." The idea here is that Rāma does not feel that it would be appropriate for him to give up his ascetic vows when Bharata is still engaged in his while separated from Rāma (madviyogena bahuvratapare tasmin kathaṃ mayā vratatyāgaḥ kartuṃ yukta iti bhāvaḥ—so Cg). Compare, however, 3.15.37–39, where Rāma bathes in the Godāvarī River, and 6.112.4 and note, where Cg understands that both Bharata and Rāma have not bathed. See, too, 6.116.13–15 and notes, where the reunited brothers finally bathe in Nandigrāma.

7. "Moreover, we must return . . . immediately by this very road" ita eva pathā kṣipraṃ pratigacchāma: According to Cg, Rāma points with his hand to the road to indicate that it is the same one by which he came. (ita eveti. anena pathā yenāham āgatas tenety arthaḥ. eṣa iti hastanirdeśapūrvakam ucyate.) Ś,Ñ,V1,3,B,D2–4,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Ck read instead etat paśya yathā for the critical reading, ita eva pathā, lending the line the sense "consider (lit., look at) that whereby we may return to the city immediately."

"is extremely difficult" paramadurgamaḥ: Literally, "supremely hard to traverse." Cg understands that the road is difficult because of its extreme length (atidūratvāt).

8. "prince" pārthivātmaja: Literally, "O son of a king."

9. "which Rāvaṇa took from my brother Kubera by force" mama bhrātuḥ kuberasya rāvaṇeṇāhṛtaṃ balāt: The story of Rāvaṇa's stealing of the Puṣpakavimāna is told at 7.15. See 6.7.5 and notes. Ś,Ñ,V1,B2–4,D4,8,10–13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read rāvaṇena balīyasā, "by Rāvaṇa, who was more powerful," for rāvaṇeṇāhṛtaṃ balāt, "Rāvaṇa took by force." This variant deprives verse 9 of a finite verbal element and makes it grammatically dependent upon passage 3333*, which follows verse 9 in all southern and most northern manuscripts. See notes to verse 21 below.

Following verse 9, Ś,Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D5–8,10–12,S insert a passage of two lines [3333*]: "It is heavenly and superb and moves according to one's desire. It was taken [by Rāvaṇa] after conquering [Kubera] in battle.[1] I have kept it here for your use.[1] Here it is, O hero of unequaled valor.[2]" Given the manuscript support for this verse, its omission from the critical text is highly suspect. See Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv.

[1]"kept it here for your use" tvadarthaṃ pālitam: Literally, "[it was] protected for your sake." Cg sees this phrase as an answer to the potential ethical question as to why Vibhīṣaṇa does not return this stolen vehicle to its rightful owner, Kubera. (tarhi kuberāya samāgatāya tat kim arthaṃ na dattam ity atrāha. tvadartha iti.)

10. "which resembles a cloud" meghasaṃkāśam: According to Cg, the simile is intended to suggest great speed (meghasaṃkāśam iti vege dṛṣṭāntaḥ).

"is kept nearby" iha tiṣṭhati: Literally, "it stands or is located here." Ct and Cm note that, by "here," Vibhīṣaṇa means "in Laṅkā," but note that, because of its great height, those stationed outside the city in the monkey encampment are able to see it. That is why Vibhīṣaṇa points it out as if it were close at hand. (laṅkāyāṃ vartamānasyāpi puṣpakasyātyunnatatayā śibirasthair api dṛśyamānatvād idam iti pratyakṣavan nirdeśaḥ.)

11. "if you are cognizant of" yadi smarasi: Literally, "if you remember."

"my wise friend" prājña: Literally, "O wise one."

"for a while" tāvat: Literally, "so much, just a bit, just a little." Ck and Ct believe we should supply the words "for one day (ekadivasam iti śeṣaḥ—so Ct)." Cg understands the period of the requested stay to be two or three days (dvitradinamātram).

12. "you can depart" gamiṣyasi: Literally, "you will go."

13. "You are very dear to me" prītiyuktas tu me: Literally, "but [you are] joined by affection with me." Ś,Ñ,V1,3,B1–3,D1,7,8,10–13,G2,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators (except Cv) read instead prītiyuktasya me, in which case the adjective refers to Vibhīṣaṇa and has the sense "of me who am filled with affection."

14. "But I am not trying to give you orders" na khalv ājñāpayāmi te: Literally, "I am certainly not ordering you."

15. "in such a way that all the rākṣasas and monkeys could hear him" rakṣasāṃ vānarāṇāṃ ca sarveṣāṃ copaśṛṇvatām: Literally, "of all the rākṣasas and monkeys who were listening." We understand with Cg that this is an absolutive construction with the sense "while they were listening." Compare 6.110.3 and note.

16. "scorcher of your foes" paraṃtapa: Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D4,7,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead pareṇa ca, "and excellent [counsel]."

"your wholehearted assistance" sarvātmanā . . . ceṣṭābhiḥ: Literally, "by those actions [that were done] with the whole self." We agree with Ck, Ct, and Cr in reading these two terms together as one syntactic unit. Ck and Ct gloss, "actions performed in battle with body, speech, and mind (kāyavāṅmanobhiḥ kṛtayuddhaceṣṭābhiḥ—so Ct)." Cg, however, believes that ceṣṭābhiḥ, for which he glosses, "manly actions (pauruṣaiḥ)," should stand alone and that sarvātmanā should be construed with the participle "honored (pūjitaḥ)" in pāda a.

17–19. "But my heart is eager to see . . . And my heart is eager also to see" draṣṭum . . . tvarate manaḥ: Literally, "[my] heart or mind is hastening to see." Verse 18 constitutes a separate series of subordinate clauses. This verse intervenes between bhrātaram . . . bharatam, "[my] brother Bharata," which is the first object of the infinitive draṣṭum, "to see," in 17c, and the list of the remaining objects starting with kausalyām, "Kausalyā," in pāda 19a. We have repeated the verbal phrase in order to make the syntax intelligible.

"he came out to Citrakūṭa" yo 'sau citrakūṭam upāgataḥ: The reference is to Bharata's failed mission to persuade Rāma to return to Ayodhyā as king at Ayodhyākāṇḍa 76–107.

"he beseeched me, bowing his head to my feet" śirasā yācataḥ: Literally, "of him who was begging with his head."

"illustrious Kaikeyī" kaikeyīṃ ca yaśasvinīm: Compare 6.107.4–6 and notes, where Cg argues that we should construe the adjective yaśasvinīm, "illustrious," with kaikeyīm, "Kaikeyī." See, too, 6.116.39 and notes.

"as well as my elders, my friends, and the citizens, together with their children" gurūṃś ca suhṛdaś caiva paurāṃś ca tanayaiḥ saha: Ñ2,D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead guhaṃ ca suhṛdaṃ caiva paurāñ jānapadaiḥ saha, "and [my] friend Guha, and the people of the city, along with those of the countryside." However, although no available text, printed edition, or manuscript represented in the critical apparatus shows the variant gṛham, "house," Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 399) appears to have mistakenly read this, as he renders, "ainsi que ma maison." In this error he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 247), who renders, "as also mine house." Pagani (1999, p. 1194) apparently reads the erroneous representation of the text of Cg and Cr given as a footnote to verse 6.121.20 in GPP, where the singular gurum (known only to D3) is mistakenly given for the correct reading of Cg, which is the same as in the critical edition. She therefore renders, "mon maître et mes amis."

20. Ś,Ñ1,V1,3,B,D1–4,8–13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct transpose verses 20 and 21.

"For how indeed could I agree to stay here, now that my mission has been accomplished?" kṛtakāryasya me vāsaḥ kathaṃ svid iha saṃmataḥ: Literally, "How indeed is dwelling approved of me by whom a mission has been accomplished?" Cg understands that the phrase "now that my mission has been accomplished," means that Rāma has completed his fourteenth year of exile. Cg correctly notes that Rāma's question is rhetorical, noting that, should Rāma delay his return, Bharata would [as he had previously vowed] throw himself into the fire. (nivartitacaturdaśavarṣapravrājanasya kṛtakāryasya ma iha laṅkāyāṃ vāsaḥ saṃmataḥ kathaṃ svit. na saṃmata ity arthaḥ. anyathā bharatasyāgnipraveśād iti bhāvaḥ.) See note to verses 5–6 above.

V1,3,B2,4,D4,10,11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of two lines [3335*, = GPP, NSP, and Gita Press 6.121.23]. A number of other northern manuscripts insert 3335* in whole or in part following App. I, No. 71, which they also insert in whole or in part. "Addressed in this fashion by Rāma, Vibhīṣaṇa, lord of the rākṣasas, hastening, summoned that flying palace as radiant as the sun."

21. Ś,Ñ1,V1,3,B,D1–4,8–13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct transpose verses 20 and 21.

"my gentle friend" saumya: Literally, "gentle one."

"I have already been deeply honored" pūjito 'smi: Literally, "I am honored." Cg understands that we should add the phrase "by the gift of the flying palace (vimāna-pradāneneti śeṣaḥ)." Cg then notes that, because this gift now makes the Puṣpaka become Rāma's property, he will later send it back to Kubera, its original owner (pradattatvena svatvād uttaratra kuberāya preṣayiṣyati). See 6.115.49, where Rāma sends back the Puṣpakavimāna to Kubera. See notes to 3333* following verse 9 above.

"Please don't be angry" manyur na khalu kartavyaḥ: Literally, "anger indeed should not be made." As Cg points out, citing Amarakośa 3.3.153, the word manyuḥ can mean "sadness, depression (dainyam)" as well as "anger." Thus, the phrase could quite plausibly mean "Please don't be sad."

Following verse 21, D7,G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of two lines [3337* = VSP 6.124.25; KK 6.124.23]: "When he had heard those words of Rāghava, Vibhīṣaṇa, the lord of the rākṣasas, departed and quickly returned,[1] bringing that flying palace."

[1]"departed and quickly returned" tūrṇaṃ pratinivartata: Literally, "he quickly returned."

This verse is rendered only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 348). Ct, however, quotes the verse and notes that it is found in some manuscripts.

22–27. Compare the description of the Puṣpa (v.l. puṣpaka 5.6.5–14 and notes) and Puṣpaka (5.7.9–15 and notes) in the Sundarakāṇḍa. See, too, 6.7.5 and note.

"stood waiting" tasthau tatra: Literally, "he stood there."

"its raised platforms were made of lapis" vaidūryamaṇivedikam: See notes to 5.3.8–11 and 5.12.35. See, too, notes to 6.3.13 and 6.67.13.

"with penthouses" kūṭāgāraiḥ: Cg understands these to be "pavilions (maṇḍapaiḥ)," while Ck, Ct, and Cr understand the term to refer to śālagṛhas, literally, "chamber houses," which could perhaps refer to either single- or multi-room structures. See note to 5.7.13; cf. 5.10.13–15. See 6.62.12–14 and note.

"white flags and banners" pāṇḍurābhiḥ patākābhir dhvajaiś ca: Cg understands that patākas are plain banners (kevaladhvajaiḥ), while dhvajas bear insignia (sacihnaiḥ). This distinction appears to be represented in the translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1867), which renders, "decorated with whitish yellow pennons and flags with armorial bearings." Ck and Ct understand that patākas are tiny flags or pennants (sūkṣma-dhvajaiḥ).

"It was splendid" śobhitam: D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead kāñcanam, "golden."

"adorned with golden lotuses" hemapadmavibhūṣitam: Cg understands that these ornaments are hanging (lambamānāni), a suggestion reflected in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 348), who renders, "and it was hung with golden lotuses."

"windows" -gavākṣitam: Literally, "windowed." Compare 6.45.26; 6.50.3; 6.87.26; and notes.

"Fashioned by Viśvakarman" nirmitaṃ viśvakarmaṇā: See 5.7.10 and note. See, too, 6.111.3; 6.115.23; and notes.

"with many" bahubhiḥ: Ñ,V1,B2–4,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bṛhadbhiḥ, "with large, big."

Following verse 27, Ś,Ñ,V1,3,B,D1–4,8–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct (KK in brackets = 6.124.30) insert a passage of four lines [3341*]: "When Rāma, together with Lakṣmaṇa, saw that the flying palace Puṣpaka of heavenly beauty,[1] which moved according to one's desire, had arrived, he was as delighted as was great Indra long ago at the slaying of Vṛtra.[2]"

[1]"saw . . . of heavenly beauty" prekṣya hi divyarūpam: Ñ1,D4,10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead bhūdharasaṃnikāśam, "resembling a mountain."

[2]"When Rāma, together with Lakṣmaṇa . . . he was as delighted as was great Indra long ago at the slaying of Vṛtra" rāmaḥ prahṛṣṭaḥ saha lakṣmaṇena purā yathā vṛtravadhe mahendraḥ: Ñ,D10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dṛṣṭvā tadā vismayam ājagāma rāmaḥ sasaumitrir udārasattvaḥ, "then, when noble-spirited Rāma, together with Saumitri, saw [the Puṣpaka], he was wonderstruck."

The meter is upajāti.

Sarga 110

1. "When . . . saw" dṛṣṭvā: D6,10,11,T2,3,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead kṛtvā, "having made." This lends the phrase the sense "having made the Puṣpaka ready or having brought the Puṣpaka near." Cv observes that this is a better reading but acknowledges the critical reading, which he claims should then be read as a causative (so, too, Cm and Cg), i.e., "having shown the Puṣpaka." (kṛtveti samīcīnaḥ pāṭhaḥ. dṛṣṭveti pāṭhe dṛśir antarbhāvitaṇyartho veditavyaḥ. darśayitvety arthaḥ.)

"the flying palace Puṣpaka, all adorned with flowers" puṣpakaṃ puṣpabhūṣitam: The adjective is doubtless chosen because of the echoing effect of the repeated word puṣpa, "flower."

"Rāma, who stood nearby" avidūre sthitaṃ rāmam: D5,6,10,11,T1,G1,3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read the nominative sthitaḥ for the critical edition's accusative sthitam. According to this variant, it is Vibhīṣaṇa who is standing nearby.

2. "Cupping his hands in reverence, the humble" baddhāñjaliḥ prahvaḥ: Ś2,Ñ,V1,3,B,D1–3,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead baddhāñjaliputaḥ, "cupping his hands into the hollow of the añjali gesture."

"filled with a sense of urgency" tvarayopetaḥ: Literally, "accompanied by haste or urgency." Cg glosses, "respectfully (ādaropetaḥ)."

"What should I do now?" kiṃ karomi: Literally, "What do I do." As Cg explains, Vibhīṣaṇa is asking what he must do next (itaḥ paraṃ kiṃ karavāṇīty arthaḥ).

3. "in such a way that Lakṣmaṇa could hear them" lakṣmaṇasyopaśṛṇvataḥ: We agree with Cg in understanding that Rāma speaks loudly enough for Lakṣmaṇa to hear as a sign of respect for his brother (lakṣmaṇasaṃmatipūrvakam ity arthaḥ). Compare 6.109.15 and note.

4. Vibhīṣaṇa, the forest-dwelling monkeys: vibhīṣaṇa vanaukasaḥ: Literally, "Vibhīṣaṇa, the forest-dwelling ones." Ś2,Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarva eva vanaukasaḥ, "all the forest-dwelling monkeys."

"have performed arduous deeds" kṛtaprayatnakarmāṇaḥ: Literally, "by whom actions or deeds were performed with effort." We follow Cr, who glosses, "those by whom actions, that is, activities, were done with effort, that is, with extreme exertion or industry (kṛtāni prayatnenātyudyogena karmāṇi vyāpārā yais te). Ct glosses the word karma in the compound as "the work of battle (yuddhakarma)." Ck understands similarly.

"You must honor them with . . . ornaments" bhūṣaṇaiś cābhipūjaya: Literally, "and you must honor with ornaments." Ś2,Ñ2,V1,3,B2–4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead saṃpūjyantāṃ vibhīṣaṇa, "O Vibhīṣaṇa, they are to be honored."

"and other valuables" arthaiś ca: Literally, "and wealth or riches." Cr glosses, "things other than those [listed, i.e., gems and ornaments] (taditaradravyādibhiḥ)." Ck, Ct, and Cm gloss, "various kinds of food, drink, clothing, etc. (vicitrānnapānavastrādibhiḥ)." Cg simply refers to clothing, etc. (vastrādibhiḥ). Compare notes to verse 8 below.

5. "besieged . . . with the assistance of these monkeys" sahaibhir arditā: Literally, "afflicted or tormented [Laṅkā] . . . together with these." Ñ,V1,3,B2–4,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sahāmībhis tvayā, "by you along with these." D5,6,T1,G1,2,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cr, Cv, Cg, and Cm read instead sahaibhir ajitā, "unconquered [Laṅkā] together with these." Cg glosses the adjective "unconquered (ajitā)" as "previously unconquered even by the gods, etc. (pūrvaṃ surādibhir apy ajitā)."

"filled with the excitement of battle" hṛṣṭaiḥ: Literally, "delighted, excited." We understand with Ck and Ct that the reference is to the monkeys' being filled with the excitement or frenzy of battle (yuddhotsāhavadbhiḥ). Cg, however, understands, "filled with love for me (mayi prītimadbhir ity arthaḥ)."

"fear of death" prāṇabhayam: Literally, "fear for life breaths."

Following verse 5, Ñ,D4–7,10,11,13,S, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3347*]: "All these monkeys, who have accomplished their mission, should be honored.[1] You must reward their efforts[2] by bestowing[3] wealth and jewels."

[1]"All these monkeys . . . should be honored" pūjyantāṃ sarvavānarāḥ: Ñ2,D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarva eva vanaukasaḥ, "all the forest-dwelling monkeys."

[2]"You must reward their efforts" karmaiṣāṃ saphalaṃ kuru: Literally, "make their work fruitful."

[3]"bestowing" -pradānena: Ñ,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead -pradānaiś ca, "and with gifts [of]."

6. "by you, bestower of honor . . . who are deserving of honor" mānārhā mānada tvayā: Given the context, we believe that the sense of "bestower of honor" as opposed to "humbler of honor" is more apposite for the word mānada. Compare 3309* (following 6.108.5) and notes, and 6.108.7 and notes. Cf. 6.13.8; 6.104.10; and notes.

D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nandyamānā yathā tvayā, "in such a way that they are gratified by you."

"in your gratitude" kṛtajñena: Literally, "[by you who] are grateful."

7. "I am advising you" saṃbodhayāmi te: Cg remarks that Rāma uses the verb advisedly to emphasize that he is merely making a suggestion and not issuing an order (saṃbodhayāmi na tu codayāmīty arthaḥ).

"so that they may recognize that you" yatas tvām avagacchanti: Literally, "such that they know or understand you." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sarve tvām abhigacchanti, which, in the context, would mean much the same as the critical reading, i.e., "all understand or recognize you." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 400), however, understands, mistakenly in our opinion, the verb abhigacchanti in its sense of "they approach," rendering, "aussi tous viennent à toi." In this he has been followed by Pagani (1999, p. 1195), who translates similarly.

"you know both how to acquire wealth and dispense it" tyāginaṃ saṃgrahītāram . . . tvām: Literally, "you, an abandoner [i.e., giver] and a restrainer [i.e., collector]." Our interpretation follows that of Ck, Ct, and Cm, who gloss, " 'Giver': one should supply the words, 'to suitable recipients.' 'Collector': one who collects according to the proper time and the proper procedure. One should also add the words 'of gems, etc.' (tyāginam iti. ucitaviṣaya iti śeṣaḥ. saṃgrahītāraṃ yathākālaṃ yathānyāyam. ratnāder iti śeṣaḥ.)" Cr's understanding of the former term is similar to that of Ck, Ct, and Cm. However, he takes the second term more specifically to refer to a king's role as a collector of taxes, etc., adding the words "in a legitimate fashion from the populace, etc. (prajādibhyo yathānyāyaṃ grahītāram)." Cg understands saṃgrahītāram somewhat differently, glossing, "the meaning is 'one who gathers, controls, or supports his friends or allies by giving wealth' (dhanapradānena mitrasaṃgrahakāriṇam ity arthaḥ)." This interpretation is represented in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 349), who renders, "apt for friendship."

"illustrious" yaśasvinam: According to Cg, the term here means "possessed of glory achieved through generosity (tyāgakṛtayaśovantam)." Ñ,D4,10,11,13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead jitendriyam, "who has conquered [his] senses or master of the senses."

Following verse 7, Ś2,V1,3,B2,4,D4–8,10–13,S insert, while Ñ,B3 continue after 3348*, a passage of two lines [3349*]: "For, in battle, the troops, being disaffected,[1] will desert a king, a lord of men, who is punitive[2] and lacks all the qualities that would make them love him."

[1]"disaffected" saṃvignāḥ: Literally, "agitated, frightened." Several translators believe that the term refers to the troops' fear on the battlefield. We believe, however, that the term refers in this context to the soldiers' lack of loyalty to an abusive ruler.

[2]"in battle . . . will desert a king, a lord of men, who is punitive" abhihantāram āhave / tyajanti nṛpatim . . . taṃ nareśvaram: Literally, "[him] striking or injuring in battle, they desert the lord of men, him, a lord of men." Our translation follows the commentaries of Cm, Cv, Crā, and Cg, who understand the term abhihantāram to refer to a king who is violent and punitive and lacks the quality of graciousness. (abhihantāraṃ hiṃsanaśīlam. prasādaṃ vinā krodhaikaniratam iti yāvat—so Cm.) We believe this is correct, as it provides a stark contrast to the kind of munificent monarch that Rāma is urging Vibhīṣaṇa to be.

For line 2 ("the troops, being disaffected, will desert a king, a lord of men"), D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead the close variant, senā tyajati saṃvignā nṛpatiṃ taṃ nareśvara. Aside from the slight difference of word order, this reading substitutes the singular senā for the plural sainyāḥ, "troops," and avoids the redundancy of the critical edition's use of the two synonyms for "king," nṛpatim, "lord of men," and nareśvara, "lord of men," by placing the second word in the vocative, yielding, "O lord of men," which would then refer to Vibhīṣaṇa. Ck and Ct, and the translators who follow their texts, construe abhihantāram, literally, "striking, slaying," with āhave, "in battle," understanding that the frightened troops desert a king, even though he slays [the enemy] in battle.

The verse is known to all recensions, all printed editions except Gorresio, the southern commentators, and the vast majority of manuscripts (Ś2,Ñ,V1,3,B2–4,D4–8,10–13,S). As such, its omission from the critical text is questionable.

8. "honored all the monkeys" vānarāṃs tān . . . sarvān evānvapūjayat: Ct, perhaps concerned about the large number of monkeys to be rewarded, refers to the parallel passage in the Rāmopākhyāna (MBh 3.275.53), where it states that Rāma camped by the seashore for the night (uvāsa) during the distribution to support his argument that it took two days to honor all the monkeys (sarvavānarapūjārthaṃ dinadvayaṃ vāsaḥ).

"each according to his share, with gems and other valuables" ratnārthaiḥ saṃvibhāgena: Literally, "with jewels and wealth or riches, by division or sharing." Compare notes to verse 4 above. D7,11,G2,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead the compound ratnārthasaṃvibhāgena, which lends a slightly different meaning to pāda c, "with a distribution or division of gems and wealth." The commentators generally agree that here the term saṃvibhāga refers to a distribution of wealth according to the merit of the recipients (yathārham aṃśakalpanayā—so Ct). Cg adds that, if the wealth had been distributed in equal shares, it would have been an occasion for anger on the part of those who deserved more [by merit or status] (samatayā pradāne 'dhikānāṃ kopaprasaṅgād iti bhāvaḥ).

9–10. "the troop leaders honored with gems and other valuables" ratnair arthaiś ca yūthapān: See notes to verses 4 and 5 above. D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ratnārthair hariyūthapān, "the leaders of the troops of tawny monkeys with gems and valuables."

"glorious" yaśasvinīm: Ñ,V,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead manasvinīm, "wise, virtuous, or proud."

"but embarrassed" lajjamānām: Literally, "embarrassed." Cr believes that Vaidehī's modesty or embarrassment is natural and appropriate for a woman from a noble family (svabhāvikamahākulocitalajjāviśiṣṭām). Cg notes, more incisively, that she is embarrassed to be taken on her husband's lap in the midst of an assembly. He also notes that Rāma helps her onto his lap because of the absence of women to assist her. (sadasy aṅkārohaṇāya lajjantīm. rāmeṇāṅkāropaṇaṃ ca strīsahāyarahitatvāt.)

"who was armed with a bow" dhanuṣmatā: Although Lakṣmaṇa is normally represented as holding a bow and would probably be represented here as Rāma's bodyguard, Cg believes, probably because Rāma's hands would be full in taking Sītā on his lap, that Lakṣmaṇa is holding Rāma's bow (rāmadhanurdhāriṇā).

11. "Kākutstha" kākutsthaḥ: D7,10,11,G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead pūjayan, "honoring."

"the rākṣasa" rākṣasam: V3,D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead kākutsthaḥ, "Kākutstha."

12. "you have done all that friends could be expected to do" mitrakāryaṃ kṛtam: Literally, "what is to be done by friends has been done." Cf. note to verse 13 below.

13. "scorcher of your foes . . . and ally" suhṛdā vā paraṃtapa: Ś,Ñ2,V,B2,4,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead snigdhena ca hitena ca, "affectionate and well-disposed," both of which modify "friend (vayasyena)."

*"you who fear only unrighteousness" bhavatādharmabhīruṇā: Literally, "by you who fear unrighteousness." For some reason, the critical edition (also GPP 6.122.15) breaks the sequence up as bhavatā dharmabhīruṇā, yielding the obviously undesirable meaning "by you who fear righteousness." Cg, Cm, and Ct (Cg and Ct quoted in the critical apparatus) explicitly note that we are to break the sequence up as [bhavatā] adharmabhīruṇā. With the exception of GPP, other printed editions that share this reading break the sequence appropriately.

"have accomplished all that a friend and ally could be expected to do" yat tu kāryaṃ vayasyena suhṛdā vā . . . / kṛtam . . . tat sarvam: Literally, "all that which is to be done by a friend or ally has been done." Cf. note to verse 12 above.

14. "you . . . may dwell in . . . your own kingdom" svarājye vasa: Cg reads the imperative more pointedly as a subtle warning that Vibhīṣaṇa should not entertain the imperial designs of his late brother. He glosses, "but you must remain in your own kingdom, you should not attack anyone else's [kingdom] as Rāvaṇa did. Therefore, your guards in Janasthāna must be recalled. (svarājye vasa na tu parakīyaṃ rāvaṇavad ākramitavyam. ato janasthānarakṣiṇaḥ samānetavyā iti bhāvaḥ.)"

"the heaven-dwelling gods" divaukasaḥ: Literally, "those whose dwelling is in heaven."

16. "the immensely powerful monkeys" vānarās te mahābalāḥ: Ś2,V,D8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead harīndrā harayas tathā, "the lords of the tawny monkeys and the tawny monkeys."

"him" rāmam: Literally, "Rāma." Ś2,Ñ2,V1,2,B2–4,D8,10–12,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead sarve, "all."

Following verse 16, Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4–8,10–13,T,G,M (M5 after 17 ab) insert a passage of one line [3361*]: "We would energetically[1] roam its groves and towns."

[1]"energetically" udyuktāḥ: The term can also mean "diligently," and Cg, evidently recalling the havoc wrought by the celebrating monkeys in Sugrīva's madhuvana in the Sundarakāṇḍa (5.59–60), understands that the monkeys are reassuring Rāma that they will cause no such disturbance in Ayodhyā. He glosses, " 'udyukta' means 'carefully.' The meaning is 'without causing any harm to the countryside.' (udyuktāḥ sāvadhānāḥ. janapadapīḍām akurvanta ity arthaḥ.)" This interesting interpretation is represented in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 350), who renders, "circumspectly." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mudyuktā vicariṣyāmo vanāny upavanāni ca, "We will roam its groves and parks in great delight." The textual evidence would support the inclusion of this line into the critical text. See notes to 3348* following verse 7 above.

17. "dripping from your consecration" abhiṣekārdram: See 6.13.9; 6.100.12–16; and notes. Cf. 6.107.19. V2,D11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead abhiṣekārham, "worthy or deserving of consecration."

"O son of the lord of men" nṛpateḥ suta: Ñ2,V1,B2,4,D6,10,11,T2,3,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nṛpasattama, "O foremost or best of kings."

18. "by Vibhīṣaṇa and the monkeys . . . majestic Rāghava replied to them and to Sugrīva" vānaraiḥ savibhīṣaṇaiḥ / abravīd rāghavaḥ śrīmān sasugrīvavibhīṣaṇān: Literally, "by the monkeys with Vibhīṣaṇa . . . majestic Rāghava said to them, who were accompanied by Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4,8,10–13,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read vānarān rāmaḥ for the critical edition's rāghavaḥ śrīmān, lending the line the sense "Rāma said to the monkeys, who were accompanied by Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa."

19. "I would experience a pleasure greater than any other if I could share the joy" priyāt priyataraṃ labdhaṃ yad aham . . . prītiṃ lapsye: Literally, "in that something dearer than dear [would be] obtained [by me], I would obtain." The syntax of the verse is elliptical and confusing. Commentators attempt to identify exactly what the different sources of Rāma's pleasure might be. Ct indicates that the first pleasure is that of entering Ayodhyā after having accomplished his mission. Beyond that, Ct argues, Rāma would attain pleasure together with his friends [the monkeys, etc.] and with Bharata, etc.—the pleasure being the gratification obtained from his royal consecration. (prathamataḥ kṛtakṛtyasyāyodhyāpraveśanam eva priyam. tatrāpi suhṛdbhir bhavadbhiḥ sahito bharatādibhiḥ saha. prītiṃ lapsye. rājyābhiṣekasaṃtoṣaṃ lapsya ity arthaḥ.) Cg understands that the first pleasure is the recovery of Sītā, and that meeting Bharata would be even more pleasurable than that. Finally, he says that entering the city along with his friends would be a pleasure still greater than the preceding one. (sītālābhaḥ priyam. bharatadarśanaṃ priyāt priyam, bhavadbhiḥ saha purapraveśaḥ priyāt priyataram ity arthaḥ.)

21. "hastening . . . quickly ascended . . . as did" adhyārohat tvaraṅ śīghram: Literally, "hastening, he ascended . . . quickly." The stanza's only finite verb adhyārohat, "he ascended, mounted," is a third person singular but through kākākṣigolakanyāya must be understood as taking for its subjects both Sugrīva in pāda b and Vibhīṣaṇa in pāda d. Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead āruroha mudā yuktaḥ, "he ascended filled with joy."

"together with his army" saha senayā: Ñ,V,B2,3,D4,10,11,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead saha vānaraiḥ, "together with the monkeys."

22. "vehicle" -āsanam: Literally, "seat." The commentators all gloss either yānam or vāhanam, "vehicle."

"at Rāghava's command" rāghaveṇābhyanujñātam: Literally, "permitted by Rāghava."

23. "departed in that . . . flying palace" yayau tena vimānena: Literally, "he went by means of that flying palace." Ñ,V2,D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead khagatena vimānena, "the flying palace that had gone into the sky." See 6.7.5; 6.109.22–27; and notes.

"yoked to haṃsas" haṃsayuktena: The haṃsa is usually identified as the bar-headed goose (Anser indicus), but the bird intended may well be either the mute swan (Cygnus olor) or whooper swan (Cygnus cygnus). See Dave 1985, pp. 422–31. See, too, Thieme 1975, pp. 3–36. Cf. note to 6.57.35. The commentators are in agreement that the great flying palace is not actually drawn by these birds. Their general consensus is that some type of depictions of haṃsas are part of the décor of the vehicle. Ct notes that other, unnamed commentators, indicate that these artificial haṃsas are constructed to look as if they are drawing the vehicle (haṃsaśabdena vāhakatvākāreṇa nirmitahaṃsa-pratimā ucyata iti vyākhyātāraḥ—Ck). Cm understands that these haṃsas are fashioned to represent the vehicle of Brahmā (haṃsavadbrahmavāhakatvākāreṇa nirmitā haṃsā ucyate—Cm). Ck understands that there is no vehicle actually borne by haṃsas other than that of Brahmā (haṃsavāharatho brahmātiriktasya nāsti). Cs notes that, in reality, it is through the power of the vehicle's inner presiding deity that it appears to move of its own accord and we should understand that it has no need of any other external motive force. (vastutas tu tadvimānadevasyaiva tādṛśaśaktimattvena svecchayaivānya-nirapekṣeṇa gatir iti jñeyam.) See 6.111.1. Ś,B1,D1–3,8,12 read kāmagena, "moving at will," for haṃsayuktena. Although no printed edition shares this reading, it appears to have informed the translation of Dutt (1893, p. 1523), who renders, "coursing at will."

"Delighted in mind and body" prahṛṣṭaś ca pratītaś ca: We follow Ct and Cm in taking pratīta in its sense of "happy or delighted." To avoid redundancy between this term and prahṛṣṭa, which also means "delighted," these commentators understand that the former term applies to physical pleasure, such as the bristling of the hairs on the body, while the latter refers to mental delight (prahṛṣṭo hṛṣṭaromā pratītaḥ prahṛṣṭacittaḥ). Cg and Cs, however, understand the second term in its sense of "famous, illustrious." Cg glosses, "praised (ślāghitaḥ)." This interpretation is represented in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 350), who renders, "receiving the praises of all." Cs glosses, "famous (prasiddhaḥ)," an idea similar to that of Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 249), who renders, "glorioso."

Following verse 23, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of two lines [3369*]: "All those monkeys and apes[1] and the immensely powerful rākṣasas seated themselves in that divine vehicle,[2] comfortably and without any crowding."

[1]"those monkeys and apes" vānararkṣāś ca: Printed editions of Cg read instead vānarā hṛṣṭāḥ, "the delighted monkeys."

[2]"in that divine vehicle" divye tasmin: Literally, "in that divine [thing]."

Sarga 111

1. "At Rāma's command" anujñātaṃ tu rāmeṇa: See 6.110.22 and note.

"flew onward, like a great cloud driven before the wind" utpapāta mahāmeghaḥ śvasanenoddhato yathā: The verb utpapāta would properly mean "flew upward," but, given the tenor of the simile, it seems appropriate to understand the motion to be lateral.

D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead haṃsayuktaṃ mahānādam utpapāta vihāyasam, "yoked to haṃsas, it rose into the sky with a mighty roar." See note to 6.110.23.

2. "whose face was like the hare-marked moon" śaśinibhānanām: Literally, "whose face was like the one possessing a hare."

3. "fashioned by Viśvakarman" nirmitāṃ viśvakarmaṇā: See 5.2.19–22. Cf. 6.109.27 and notes.

4. Following verse 4, Ñ1,D5–7,9–11,13,S insert, while Ś,Ñ2,V,B2–4,D4,8,12 continue after 3382*, a passage of one line [3373*]: "There lies the troublesome lord of the rākṣasas, who had been granted a boon." This line appears in all recensions and printed editions consulted as well as in all but a few manuscripts (B1,D1,2,3). Its omission from the critical edition is questionable. The editors may have omitted it on the grounds of higher criticism, since Rāvaṇa has already been cremated (6.99.42). The commentators are not unaware of this issue. Ct understands the reference here to be to Rāvaṇa's cremation ground (eṣa iti taddāhabhūmidarśanam). Cg understands that Rāvaṇa lies there in the form of ashes (śete bhasmasvarūpeṇety arthaḥ).

5. Following verse 5, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of two lines [3376*]: "And here, too, was Dhūmrākṣa slain by the monkey Hanumān, as was Vidyunmālin by the great Suṣeṇa."

6. "slew . . . were also slain" nihataḥ: Literally, "[he was] slain."

"impossible to even look upon" duṣprekṣyaḥ: Ś2,Ñ,V,B2–4,D4,6,8,12,13,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and the edition of Gorresio (6.108.6) read instead durdharṣaḥ, "unassailable."

Following 6ab, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of one line [3380*]: "Here the rākṣasa called Vikaṭa[1] was slain by Aṅgada."

[1]"Vikaṭa" vikaṭaḥ: A rākṣasa named Vikaṭa is among those listed in an inserted passage (1686* [following 6.77.9–11]) who were slain by Vibhīṣaṇa and his companions. Ct, apparently concerned that only one of the numerous rākṣasas listed at 1686* is mentioned here, suggests that we take the name as standing for the entire group (aṅgadena vikaṭo hata ity anuvādād tad api jātam iti bodhyam). Cg understands similarly.

7. "as were those other powerful rākṣasas" balino 'nye ca rākṣasāḥ: We agree with Cr in taking the reference to be to the rākṣasas' names in the second half of the verse (akampano nihatas triśirahprabhṛtayo 'nye ca nihatāḥ).

Following verse 7, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of nine lines [3383*]: "[As were] the two prominent rākṣasas Yuddhonmatta and Matta,[1] and also Nikumbha and Kumbha, the two sons of Kumbhakarṇa, [1–2] Vajradaṃṣṭra, Daṃṣṭra,[2] and many rākṣasas were slain. And I struck down the unassailable Makarākṣa in battle.[3–4] Akampana, too, was slain as was the mighty Śoṇitākṣa. And it was here in the great battle that Yūpākṣa and Prajaṅgha were killed.[5–6] Here, too, the rākṣasa Vidyujjihva, of terrifying appearance, was slain; also slain were Yajñaśatru, the immensely powerful Suptaghna, Sūryaśatru, and the unexcelled Brahmaśatru.[3][7–9]" [2]"Daṃṣṭra" daṃṣṭraḥ: Literally, "Fang." No rākṣasa of this name is mentioned in the critical text, and there appears to be no other mention of a rākṣasa of this name in the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators.

[1]"Yuddhonmatta and Matta" yuddhonmattaś ca mattaś ca: See note to 6.59.1. Dutt (1893, p. 1524), alone among the translators consulted, takes these names as epithets of Nikumbha and Kumbha, rendering, "mad after conflict."

[3]"Brahmaśatru" brahmaśatruḥ: No rākṣasa of this name appears in the critical text or, apparently, elsewhere in the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators.

8. "Rāvaṇa's wife . . . mourned him" bhāryā taṃ paryadevayat: Literally, "the wife mourned him."

"drenched with tears" sāsreṇa: Literally, "tearful." Ś,Ñ,V1,B2–4,D1,2,5,7–12,T1,G2,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr read instead sāgreṇa, literally, "with a surplus." This lends the line the sense that Mandodarī's co-wives number more than a thousand.

9. "shore" tīrtham: Literally, "crossing spot, ford, bathing spot." This use of the term tīrtha is to be distinguished from the usage at 3395*, line 2, where it refers to the holy shrine of Rāmeśvara, a discussion of which will engage the energy and ingenuity of the commentators. Ct and Ck understand, "descent (avatāra)." Cr glosses, "a ghat, or bathing place (ghaṭṭaḥ)." See note 2 to 3395*, line 2, following verse 12 below.

"fair-faced woman" varānane: Literally, "having an excellent face."

10. "that bridge is Nala's bridge" eṣa setuḥ . . . nalasetuḥ: Several of the commentators offer explanations for the seeming redundancy implicit in the repetition of the term setuḥ, "bridge." Cr, whom we follow, understands Rāma to be repeating the term to indicate that this is the very bridge he had Nala build (mayā baddhaḥ eṣa setur nalasetur bhavati nalenaiva kārita ity arthaḥ). Ct and Cm understand similarly. Cg takes the second term, setu, as a participle derived from the root $\sqrt{}$ṣiñ in the sense of "to build," specifying that the bridge was built by Nala (eṣa setur nalasetur nalabaddhaḥ ṣiñ bandhana iti dhātuḥ). He believes that the specification is made here in order to exclude the idea that another bridge was constructed during the previous kalpa, for, Cg argues, if an earlier bridge had existed, the building of the newer bridge would have been pointless. (etena nalasetuḥ setur ity uktyā pūrvakalpakṛtasetvantaraṃ vyāvartyata iti pratyuktam. pūrvam eva setusattve punaḥ setukaraṇavaiyarthyāt.)

"all-but-impossible" suduṣkaraḥ: Literally, "extraordinarily difficult to accomplish." Several of the commentators understand the adjective to mean "impossible for anyone other than Nala to accomplish (nalabhinnena kartum aśakyam—so Cr)."

"across the ocean, the reservoir of waters" sāgare salilārṇave: Literally, "on the ocean, the ocean of water." The critical reading seems redundant. Of the commentators who share the reading, two of them, Cv and Cg, make efforts to avoid the redundancy. Cv, whom we follow, glosses "collection of water (salilākare)" for salilārṇave, "ocean of water." Cg takes the term sāgare as an elliptical adjective meaning "caused to be dug out by Sagara (sagarakhānite)," referring to the legend of Sagara's interrupted sacrifice and the digging of the ocean by his sixty thousand sons as told in the Bālakāṇḍa (1.38–43). Cg then notes that the ocean (arṇava) is said to be the ocean of water in order to distinguish it from the other oceans well known in purāṇic cosmology, such as the ocean of milk (salileti kṣīrodādivyāvṛttiḥ). D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read lavaṇārṇave, "the salt sea," for salilārṇave.

11. "boundless and roaring" apāram abhigarjantam: Literally, "having no farther shore and roaring." Cg understands the term apāram, "having no farther shore," to mean that there are no shores, that is, that there are no islands in the middle [of the ocean] (apāraṃ madhye dvīpabhūtapārarahitam). Ś2,Ñ,V,B,D, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read iva, "as if," for the critical text's abhi-, which lends the passage the sense "seeming to have no farther shore," i.e., "seemingly endless."

12. "And look . . . at the . . . lord of mountains, Mount Maināka, with its golden peak" hiraṇyanābhaṃ śailendram . . . paśya: Literally, "Look at the lord of mountains with its golden navel." The compound hiraṇyanābha is a common epithet for Mount Maināka. See 5.1.79,89,91–92,123,125, and notes to 5.1.79 and 87 for an explanation of why we interpret the compound to mean "with its golden peak." There appears to be something of a narrative contradiction here in having Rāma point out Mount Maināka to Sītā as they fly across the ocean. At 5.1.129, it is clearly stated that, after his encounter with Hanumān, the mountain once more sank beneath the waves. Note the southern variant of 3394* below, which may be an attempt to silently correct the discrepancy.

"to provide a resting place for Hanumān" viśramārthaṃ hanumato: Literally, "for the sake of Hanumān's repose." The incident is described in the Sundarkāṇḍa (5.1.79–129). It should be recalled, however, that Hanumān declines the mountain's offer.

Following verse 12, virtually all manuscripts (Ś2,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8,9,12 read lines 1–3; D5–7,10,11,13,T,G,M1, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read line 3) insert at least line 3 of 3394*: "There on the shore of the ocean was my encampment, Jānakī."

D5–7,9–11,T,G1,3,M1,2,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read a slight variation of 3394*, line 3, "[Mount Maināka] is in the middle of the ocean; [and there] is the encampment of the army (etat kukṣau samudrasya skandhāvāraniveśanam)." The line is somewhat obscure and our translation follows the interpretation of Ct, who understands that it is Mount Maināka that is situated in the middle of the ocean while the encampment of the army [prior to the crossing] was on its northern shore. (etan mainākaparvatasvarūpaṃ samudrasya kukṣau vartata iti śeṣaḥ. etad ity āvartate. etad skandhāvaraṇāveśanaṃ senāniveśanam. samudrottaratīrastham iti śeṣaḥ.) Cg, however, understands that it is the encampment that was located in the middle of the ocean, by which he understands it to have taken place in mid-journey on the bridge itself. (kukṣau madhye. setūparīti śeṣaḥ.) Since the original description of the army's crossing at 6.15.31 makes no reference to their making camp while crossing the bridge, we believe that Ct's interpretation is more plausible. It is possible that the term kukṣau in the context should be taken in its primary sense of "in the interior" and is intended to address the apparent contradiction mentioned above. The idea would be that Rāma is telling Sītā to observe the golden-peaked mountain shining from beneath the surface of the sea.

Following 3394*, line 3, D5–7,9–11,T,G2,3,M3,5 (while G1,M1 insert differently), and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of four lines [3395*]: "It was here that, prior to that, the great and lordly god granted his favor.[1][1] And there one can see that sacred spot[2] of great Sāgara, known as Setubandha, 'the Building of the Bridge,' which is worshiped by all the three worlds.[2–3] It is holy, and it is the supreme place for the expiation of great sin.[4]" This passage, and especially its first line, has been the subject of an elaborate and animated debate among the commentators as to its precise significance. There is little doubt that this interpolation alludes to the well-known purāṇic tradition that Rāma propitiated Śiva at the southern tip of the Indian subcontinent and, in his devotion and gratitude to the Lord for his blessing that enabled him to cross the ocean successfully, established there a Śivaliṅga at what is known as the tīrtha of Rāmeśvara. Not all the commentators, however, accept this, and those who do, differ as to when the liṅga was established.

[1]"It was here that, prior to that, the great and lordly god granted his favor." atra pūrvaṃ mahādevaḥ prasādam akarod vibhuḥ: Literally, "Here, formerly, the great god, the Lord, made prasāda." For Ct, Ck, Cr, and Cs there is no question that the epithet mahādevaḥ, literally, "great god," bears its normal significance as one of the prime epithets of Śiva (setor nirvighnatā siddhyai samudraprasādānantaraṃ śivasthāpanaṃ rāmeṇa kṛtam iti gamyate—so Ct). Cm and Cg, however, vigorously reject this position, arguing that here the term refers to the ocean god Sāgara, whose propitiation is fully described at 6.13.22–6.14. Cg argues that no prior mention has been made of any propitiation or other involvement on the part of Śiva in connection with the building of the bridge. Cm offers two explanations as to why the epithet must be understood as referring to the god of the ocean. In the first, he takes the term mahat to be a synonym for water, and the god who has the form of that water is mahādeva, the god of the waters, i.e., Samudra. In the second, he observes that, even if the term is taken in its normal sense as an epithet of Śiva, we should understand that the reference is to water, one of the eight elemental forms (aṣṭamūrti) of that god, and thus still refers to the ocean (mahādevo mahad iti jalaṃ tadrūpo devo mahādevaḥ samudraḥ . . . yadvā mahādevāṣṭamūrtiṣv anyatamatvān mahādevaśabdena samudra evocyate).

Ck and Ct understand by the adverb pūrvam that the establishment of the Śivaliṅga took place much earlier than the events currently being narrated. Ct understands that the liṅga was established at the time the bridge was built, and thus prior to the crossing of the bridge and the war in Laṅkā. Cs quotes Ct but claims that the latter's reading should be rejected, as it is based on an inadequate study of the purāṇas, which deal extensively with this topic. Cs himself believes that it is only now, after showing Sītā this spot, that Rāma descends from the flying palace and establishes the Śivaliṅga. To support his view, Cs cites relevant passages from a number of purāṇic sources, including the Agni-, Kūrma-, and Skandapurāṇas. Evidently concerned that the text makes no allusion to Śiva's involvement in the building of the bridge, Ck argues that the term pūrvam should be understood to refer to an earlier occurrence of the events in a previous kalpa, when the Rāma of that age propitiated Śiva. Cg takes a rationalist and text-based approach to refute these other opinions. He notes that the text has failed to mention any propitiation of Śiva, and therefore the current description cannot be to that divinity. Likewise, he dismisses Ck's argument, noting that, if the bridge had been built in a previous age, there would have been no point in building another one at the present time. Interestingly, Cg also refutes the arguments of those commentators who cite purāṇic sources for the establishment of the Rāmeśvara tīrtha by arguing that, although the purāṇas may deal effectively with such great cosmological events as the creation and destruction of the universe, they are poor sources for the reconstruction of history, an area in which the epics themselves are far more reliable. He thus argues that one must give credence to the account recorded in the Rāmāyaṇa over any found in the purāṇas. (na tv atra rudro mahādevaḥ. tena pūrvaṃ prāsādakaraṇānukteḥ . . . etādṛśapurāṇavacanānusareṇāyaṃ śloko liṅgapratisthāṃ bodhayatīti. maivam uktadoṣavistārāt. itihāso hi parigrahātiśayāt. granthasauṣṭhavāc ca. itihāsapurāṇaṃ pañcamam ityādāv adhikākṣaratve 'pi pūrvaprayogenābhyarhitatvāc ca purāṇebhyo garīyān iti.

vedaḥ prācetasād āsīd iti vedamayatoktyā caturmukhavarapradānamūlatayā ca prabalataraḥ. tadvirodhe tāmasapurāṇavacanāni na pramāṇāni. kiṃca purāṇaṃ sargapratisargādiṣv anyaparam iti netihāsavat purāvṛttakathane tātparyavat.) See 6.113.8–11 and note.

It should be noted that, in the textual tradition of Cv, Crā, Cg, and Cm, line 1 of this insert effectively becomes line 4. Several commentators make a point of listing what they believe to be the proper sequence of verses. The sequence reflected in this version is found only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 351).

[2]"that sacred spot" tīrtham: The context of the passage makes it clear that the term must be taken in this sense, in contrast to the way the term must be understood in verse 9 above. Cs and Cm understand the term in its technical sense of a salvific place of pilgrimage. Cm glosses, "a holy place (puṇyakṣetram)." Cs alludes to a number of purāṇic references to Rāma's establishing a Śivaliṅga at that spot [Rāmeśvara], since, according to purāṇic legend, it was through Śiva's grace that Rāma was able to build the bridge and kill Rāvaṇa. See notes to verse 9 above; and 6.113.24 and notes.

13. "came over to me" ājagāma: Literally, "he came."

14. Following verse 14, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of thirty lines [App. I, No. 72]: "Now, when Sītā saw Kiṣkindhā, which had been ruled by Vālin, she humbly spoke these words to Rāma, with the insistence born of love[1][1–2]: 'Your majesty, I should like to go[2] with you to the capital Ayodhyā in the company of Sugrīva's beloved wives, Tārā and the rest, as well as the wives of the other monkey lords.' [3–5] Addressed in this fashion by Vaidehī, Rāghava said, 'So be it.' Then, when they reached Kiṣkindhā, he stopped the flying palace and, looking at Sugrīva, said these words [6–8]: 'Tiger among the monkeys, you must inform all the bulls among monkeys that they are all to go to Ayodhyā with Sītā in the company of their own wives.[9–10] And you, too, immensely powerful Sugrīva, should make haste with all your wives. Let us go, lord of the leaping monkeys!'[11–12] Addressed in this fashion by Rāma of immeasurable blazing energy, Sugrīva, the majestic lord of the monkeys, quickly entered his inner apartments accompanied by everyone.[3] And, looking at Tārā, he said [13–15]: 'My dear, you and the wives of the great monkeys must hasten at Rāma's command. In order to please Maithilī, we must go, taking with us the wives[4] of the monkeys. We will show you Ayodhyā and introduce you to all of Daśaratha's wives.[5]'[16–19] When she had heard those words of Sugrīva, Tārā, who was lovely in every limb, summoned all the wives[4] of the monkeys, saying [20–21], 'Together with all the monkeys, you have been commanded by Sugrīva to go. You must also please me by seeing Ayodhyā. For you are to witness[6] the entrance of Rāma, together with the city folk and country folk, and the splendor of all of Daśaratha's wives.'[22–25] When they had been instructed in this way by Tārā, all the wives[4] of the monkeys attired themselves appropriately, and then, having reverently circumambulated the flying palace,[7] they ascended it[8] in their eagerness to see Sītā.[26–28] Seeing that the flying palace had swiftly risen with all of them, Rāghava spoke once more to Vaidehī as they approached Mount Ṛśyamūka.[9][29–30]"

[1]"with the insistence born of love" praṇayasādhvasā: Literally, "with the urgency or agitation of love." Ck and Ct understand the term to mean that Sītā is using Rāma's affection in order to get her husband to do what she wants (praṇayasādhvasaṃ ca bhartuḥ sveṣṭe pravartananimittaṃ yasyāḥ sā).

[2]"I should like to go" gantum icche: Ct notes that, for the purpose of fulfilling Sītā's request, it will be necessary to halt for one day in Kiṣkindhā. He then refers to the Rāmopākhyāna (MBh 3.275.57) in which it is stated that the day when they must halt is used to perform the consecration of Aṅgada as heir apparent. (atraitad artham ekadinavāsah. ata eva bhārate 'ṅgadasya yauvarājyābhiṣeko 'py etad dina uktaḥ.) Acting on Rāma's instruction (4.25.11), Sugrīva has already consecrated Aṅgada in the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa (4.25.35). Ct is probably trying to rationalize the apparent contradiction between the Yuddhakāṇḍa's account and that of the Rāmopākhyāna. Further, in light of the redundant consecrations of Vibhīṣaṇa in sargas 13 and 100, respectively, Ct may see no internal contradiction in the Rāmāyaṇa. See 6.13.9; 6.100.12–16; and notes. See, too, note to 6.51.10.

[3]"by everyone" taiś ca sarvaiḥ: Literally, "by all of them." As Cr notes, the reference must be to the monkeys (vānaraiḥ).

[4]"the wives" yoṣitaḥ: Literally, "the women."

[5]"We will show you Ayodhyā and introduce you to all of Daśaratha's wives." ayodhyāṃ darśayiṣyāmaḥ sarvā daśarathastriyaḥ: Literally, "we will cause [you] to see Ayodhyā and all of Daśaratha's women."

[6]"You must also please me by seeing . . . You must also witness" mama cāpi priyaṃ kāryam . . . -darśanena ca: Literally, "And my favor is to be done by seeing."

[7]"having reverently circumambulated the flying palace" kṛtvā cāpi pradakṣiṇam: Literally, "having made a[n auspicious] circle to the right." We agree with the commentators that they are circumambulating the Puṣpakavimāna.

[8]"they ascended it" adhyārohan vimānaṃ tat: Literally, "they ascended the flying palace." Cs raises an obscure issue here, which highlights how diligently the commentators attempt to reconcile any possible contradictions in the long and complex epic story. Cs recalls that, earlier in the Yuddhakāṇḍa, when Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had been struck down by the serpent-weapons of Indrajit, Sītā had been forced to fly over the battlefield in the Puṣpakavimāna to witness the apparent death of her husband. In the course of her flight, the rākṣasī Trijaṭā, in an effort to reassure Sītā that Rāma was not, in fact, dead, argues that, if he had been killed, the Puṣpakavimāna would not have carried her (6.38.25) because, as noted by Cr at that point, that auspicious vehicle will not carry a widow. This being the case, Cs argues, there is an apparent contradiction in that the flying palace now seems willing to transport Tārā, who was widowed when Rāma killed her husband, Vālin. Cs rebuts this argument first by saying that, because the passage only provides a negative example, the rule stated here cannot be tested since Rāma was not, in fact, dead, and therefore Sītā was not impure. Cs further notes that, even if one were to accept the validity of this rule, it still would not apply, since Tārā has now been remarried to Sugrīva and is therefore no longer a widow. Cs also cites a quotation from smṛti, according to which "a woman who has a son [as Tārā does in the form of Aṅgada] cannot be considered a widow (putriṇy avidhavā iti smṛteḥ). Interestingly, Cs, who is so meticulous in citing the minor contradiction in this passage, appears to assign, in error, the statements about the Puṣpaka to the rākṣasī Saramā. Although Saramā does console Sītā when she is shown the illusory head of her husband, it is, in fact, Trijaṭā who, in all versions of Vālmīki's text of which we are aware, informs her of the vimāna's inability to transport widows.

[9]"as they approached Mount Ṛśyamūka" ṛśyamūkasamīpe: Literally, "in the vicinity of Ṛśyamūka."

15. "Laced with . . . minerals . . . laced with lightning" savidyut . . . dhātubhir vṛtaḥ: Literally, "with lightning . . . covered with minerals."

19. "graceful . . . where, on your account, a great battle took place between cruel Rāvaṇa and great Jaṭāyus" yatra yuddhaṃ mahad vṛttaṃ tava hetor vilāsini / rāvaṇasya nṛśaṃsasya jaṭāyoś ca mahātmanaḥ: For 19c–f, D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute a passage of two lines [3402*]: ". . . where the foremost of birds, mighty Jaṭāyus, of immense blazing energy, was slain on your account by Rāvaṇa, graceful [woman]."

"that . . . tree, the lord of the forest" vanaspatiḥ: Literally, "the forest lord." The term is commonly used for large trees. The reference is to the tree in which the sleeping Jaṭāyus was perched when he was awakened by the cries of Sītā in the clutches of Rāvaṇa (3.48.2).

20. "And it was here, too, that . . . I slew" nihataḥ . . . mayā: Literally, "was slain by me."

"in battle" saṃkhye: D5,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead yatra, "where," which provides a transition lacking in the critical text.

D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct omit this verse.

Following verse 20 (or 3402*), D5,6,10,11,T,G1,3,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3404*]: "And this, lady of the fair complexion, was the site of our ashram."

21. "beautiful" śubhadarśanā: Literally, "of beautiful or lovely appearance." D5,7,10,11,13,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead the vocative śubhadarśane, which then refers to Sītā in the sense "O beautiful woman."

"the . . . leaf hut" parṇaśālā: This is the leaf hut built by Lakṣmaṇa at 3.14.20–21.

Following verse 21, D5,6,T,G1,3,M1,2,5 insert, while D7,G3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert following verse 22, a passage of one line [3408*]. For a translation, see notes to verse 22 below.

22. "Look, Maithilī" paśya maithili: Ñ,V,B,D1–4,8–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead kadalīvṛtaḥ, "surrounded by plantain trees." This adjective then describes Agastya's ashram.

"the ashram of Agastya" agastyasyāśramaḥ: See 3.10.84ff.

Following verse 22, D7,G3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert, while D5,6,T,G1,3,M1,2,5 insert following verse 2, a passage of one line [3408*]: "And there is the resplendent ashram of the great Sutīkṣṇa.[1]"

[1]"the . . . ashram of . . . Sutīkṣṇa" āśramaḥ sutīkṣṇasya: See 3.10.26ff.

23. "the . . . ashram of Śarabhaṅga" śarabhaṅgāśramaḥ: See 3.4.

"Śakra" śakraḥ: Literally, "the mighty one." See 3.4.5–21, where Indra visits the ashram of Śarabhaṅga.

24. "the dwellings of the ascetics" tāpasāvāsāḥ: Ñ,B1,D4,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead tāpasā devi, "the ascetics, O queen."

"where Atri, the ashram elder . . . dwells" atriḥ kulapatir yatra: Literally, "where the kulapati Atri [is]." The word kulapati, literally, "lord of the family," is a term used to describe the seniormost or chief ascetic in an ashram community. Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and Sītā visit Atri's ashram at 2.109.5ff.

"whose radiance is like that of Sūrya or Agni Vaiśvānara" sūryavaiśvānaraprabhaḥ: Literally, "whose radiance was that of Sūrya and/or Vaiśvānara." Ś2,Ñ,V1,3,B2–4,D4,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read -[u]pamaḥ for -prabhaḥ, which lends the compound the meaning "who was like Sūrya or Vaiśvānara."

"It was here, Sītā, that you met the ascetic woman who practiced righteousness." atra sīte tvayā dṛṣṭā tāpasī dharmacāriṇī: Commentators understand that the woman in question is Atri's wife, Anasūyā, whom Sītā meets in Atri's ashram (2.109.7ff.).

Ñ,V1,B2–4,D4,6,10,11,13,T2,3,G1,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct transpose this line (24ef) and verse 25. M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg transpose verses 24 and 25.

25. "the giant" mahākāyaḥ: Literally, "whose body is large."

"Virādha" virādhaḥ: The encounter with Virādha is described at 3.2.4–27.

See notes to verse 24 above on the ordering of the verses in the texts of the southern commentators.

26. "where Kaikeyī's son came to beseech me to return" yatra māṃ kaikeyīputraḥ prasādayitum āgataḥ: Literally, "where Kaikeyī's son came to beseech or propitiate me."

27. "in the distance" dūrāt: Literally, "from afar." Ś,Ñ,V,B3,4,D4,8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead ramyā, "lovely," which describes the river Yamunā.

"where . . . majestic . . . is just coming into view" yatra śrīmān eṣa prakāśate: Literally, "where this majestic [ashram] appears." Ś,Ñ,V,B3,D4,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śrīmān dṛśyate caiṣa maithili, "and one can see this majestic [ashram], Maithilī."

28. "And over there one can see the Ganges, which flows by three paths, lady of the fair complexion." eṣā tripathagā gaṅgā dṛśyate varavarṇini: Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute a passage of one line [3419*]: "And, Sītā, one can see the river Ganges[1] that flows by three paths." The story of the descent of the Gaṅgā is told at Bālakāṇḍa 38–43.

[1]"Sītā . . . Ganges": sīte . . . gaṅgā: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct substitute gaṅgā for sīte, and puṇyā, "holy," for gaṅgā. This yields the sense "and one can see the holy Ganges, the river that flows by three paths."

"met us" samāgataḥ: Literally, "was met." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2–4,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead sakhā mama, "my friend." This lends the phrase the sense "where my friend Guha [is]."

Following 28ab, D5–7,T2,3,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Cg insert a passage of one line [3420*]: "It is crowded with flocks of various birds and its woodlands are filled with blossoms."

Following verse 28, D5–7,T2,3,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gita Press (line 1 only) insert a passage of two lines [3424*]: "And there, Sītā, one can see the Sarayū River garlanded with sacrificial posts. It is lined with various trees and creepers[1] and its trees[2] are filled with blossoms."

[1]"creepers" -latā-: D5,G3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Cm, and Gita Press read instead śata-, "hundreds."

[2]"trees" -pādapā: D5,6,T2,3,G,M, and the texts and printed editions of Cg, Cm, and Gita Press read instead -kānanā, "woodlands."

These variants lend the second line the sense: "It is lined with hundreds of various trees and its woodlands are filled with blossoms."

29. "Ayodhyā" ayodhyā: Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1–3,7–13,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead sīte, "O Sītā," for 'yodhyā. See 6.113.1 and notes, where the commentators are concerned about whether it would be possible for Rāma to see Ayodhyā from Bharadvāja's ashram.

30. "and the rākṣasa Vibhīṣaṇa" rākṣasaś ca vibhīṣaṇaḥ: Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D6,9–13,T2, 3,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead rākṣasāḥ savibhīṣaṇāḥ, "the rākṣasas together with Vibhīṣaṇa."

"gazed at that beautiful city" dadṛśus tāṃ purīṃ śubhadarśanām: Ś,Ñ,V,B1,2,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead saṃhṛṣṭās tāṃ purīṃ dadṛśus tadā, "then in great delight they gazed upon the city."

31. "Those leaping monkeys gazed upon the city of Ayodhyā" purīm ayodhyāṃ dadṛśuḥ plavaṅgamāḥ: Ś,Ñ,V,B2–4,D8,10–13, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead purīm apaśyan plavagāḥ sarākṣasāḥ, "the leaping monkeys, together with the rākṣasas, gazed at the city."

"It had spacious courtyards" viśālakakṣyām: Literally, "having broad courtyards or enclosures." Ct and Ck gloss, "with its broad avenues (viśālarathyām—so Ct)."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 112

1."And so, on the fifth day of the fortnight when the fourteenth year was just complete" pūrṇe caturdaśe varṣe pañcamyām: Literally, "when the fourteenth year was completed on the fifth." According to Cv, Cm, and Cg, this would be the fifth day of the bright half of the lunar month of Caitra (March-April), the same date on which Rāma set forth in exile fourteen years earlier. (pūrṇe caitraśuddhapañcamyām ayodhyāto nirgamanam. tadārabhya caturdaśavarṣe pūrṇe sati pañcamyāṃ caitraśuddhapañcamyām—so Cg.) Cm and Cv document this with a careful chronology of the battle starting with Rāma's troops' ascent of Mount Suvela. Cg offers a still more elaborate chronology beginning from the day of Rāma's banishment from Ayodhyā and carrying on through his wanderings in the forest, his meeting with Sugrīva, the monkeys' search, the war and its aftermath, and the return journey. Both of these accounts, although they deal with different events, are in close agreement, and these three commentators, especially Cm, are at pains to offer textual citations to demonstrate that the events described take place on the specific days that they assign to them. Cg notices one important contradiction. He observes that, in the Sundarakāṇḍa, Sītā mentioned to Hanumān that she had only one month remaining of the year that Rāvaṇa had allowed her before she would either have to submit to him or be eaten (5.35.8 and notes; cf. 5.36.50 and notes), whereas Rāvaṇa himself had told Sītā that she had two months remaining before this grim deadline (3.54.22; 5.20.8). Cg explains the discrepancy by observing that Sītā's calculation is correct, while Rāvaṇa's is a result of his intoxication brought on by drinking too much honey-wine (avaśiṣṭau dvau māsāv ity uktir madhupānamattatayāvivekakṛtā).

Several northern manuscripts add that Rāma returned to Ayodhyā on the bright fortnight of Phālguna (February-March) [3430*].

Cg sets out a detailed itinerary of Rāma's adventures:

5th day of śuddhapakṣa of Caitra (=śuklapakṣa)	camps by Tamasā
6th	Śṛṅgaverapura
7th	at the foot of the vanaspati
8th	Bharadvāja's ashram
9th	banks of the Yamunā
10th	Guha tells Rāma to go to Citrakūṭa; Sumantra returns to Ayodhyā
10thnight	death of Daśaratha
11th	Daśaratha embalmed
12th	messengers sent to Bharata
13th	messengers on road
14th (pūrṇimā)	messengers arrive in Rājagṛha
kṛṣṇapakṣa pratipad	Bharata sets out for Ayodhyā
1st–8th	Bharata on the road but on the 8th night travels all night
9th sunrise	Bharata arrives in Ayodhyā
9th evening	Daśaratha's funeral
13th day from that = 5th day of śuddhapakṣa of Vaiśākhā,	on the early part of that day, Bharata performs śrāddha of Daśaratha
6th day of Vaiśākhā	purification of the cremation ground
7th–10th	construction of royal highway
11th	Bharata approaches Rāma
11th night	Bharata camps by the Ganges
12th	Bharata at Bharadvāja's ashram
13th	Bharata meets Rāma
14th (pūrṇimā) and pratipad (kṛṣṇapakṣa of Vaiśākhā)	Bharata at Citrakūṭa
2nd	Bharata departs for Ayodhyā
4th	Bharata enters Ayodhyā
5th	Rāma leaves Citrakūṭa and goes to Atri's ashram
10 years, 1.5 months	Rāma at Atri's ashram
2 years, 10.5 months	Rāma at Pañcavaṭī
14th year of exile
Caitra	abduction of Sītā
Vaiśākhā	Rāma meets Sugrīva
Āṣāḍha	Rāma slays Vālin
Āśvayuja	dispatch of search parties
Phālguna	fast of Aṅgada's party
14th day of śuddhapakṣa amāvāsyā	burning of Laṅkā death of Rāvaṇa
1st day of śuddhapakṣa of Caitra	funeral of Rāvaṇa
2nd day	consecration of Vibhīṣaṇa, return of Sītā, departure of the gods

3rd	departure from Laṅkā
4th	Rāma in Kiṣkindhā
5th	Rāma at Bharadvāja's ashram

Cm's Chronology:

Phālguna
pūrṇimā	climbing of Suvela
1st day of kṛṣṇapakṣa	battle begins
1st night	Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are bound and released
2nd	death of Dhūmrākṣa
3rd	death of Vajradaṃṣṭra
4th	death of Makarākṣa [but really dies on the 10th—Cm]
10th	death of Kumbha, Nikumbha, and Makarākṣa
11th–13th	battle with Indrajit
13th	death of Indrajit
Caitra
1st day of śuklapakṣa	funeral of Rāvaṇa
2nd	consecration of Vibhīṣaṇa
3rd	reunion with Sītā
4th	leave Laṅkā, arrive Kiṣkindhā
5th	arrive at Bharadvāja's ashram 14-year period completed
6th	Rāma at Nandigrāma, puts off ascetic garb, enters Ayodhyā
7th (Puṣya nakṣatra)	consecration of Rāma

2. "holy sage" bhagavan: Literally, "blessed or holy one."

"that you hear" śṛṇoṣi: Ct and Ck note that we should add the words "from the mouth[s] of your disciple[s], etc. (śiṣyādimukheneti śeṣaḥ)."

"that the people of the city are healthy and well fed" subhikṣānāma yaṃ pure: Literally, "that there are good alms and an absence of illness in the city." The commentators agree that subhikṣā- refers to an abundance of food (annasamṛddhiḥ—so Ct).

"intent on his duties" yuktaḥ: Literally, "intent, engaged." We agree with the commentators, who understand the reference to be elliptical and offer such glosses as "devoted to protection, etc. (pālanādau niratataḥ—Cr)" and "intent upon the protection of the populace (prajāpālane samāhitaḥ—so Cg; Ct, Cm similarly)."

3. "smiled" smitapūrvam: Literally, "preceded or accompanied by a smile." The commentators are in general agreement that Bharadvāja is smiling at the irony of the omniscient Lord Rāma's asking him these questions as if he did not know the answers (sarvajño 'pi bhagavān ajānann iva māṃ pṛcchati—so Ct). Cg offers an optional interpretation, according to which Bharadvāja understands that the point of Rāma's questioning is to find out whether Bharata is happy protecting the citizens. The sage smiles, according to Cg, at the thought, "How could he possibly be so [happy], when he [Bharata] is not a free agent?" (yadvā kiṃ bharataḥ prajāpālanasaṃtuṣṭo vartata iti praśnasāraṃ matvā paratantre tasmin katham itthaṃ saṃbhavatīti smitakaraṇam.)

"in great delight" prahṛṣṭavat: Cg glosses, "happily (prahṛṣṭam)," specifying that the term is to be read adverbially (kriyāviśeṣaṇam). Ct reads the indeclinable as if it were an adjective meaning "worthy of happiness (prahṛṣṭārham)." Our translation follows the interpretation of Ck and Cm, who take it as if it were an adjective modifying Bharadvāja in the sense of "happy (prahṛṣṭaḥ san—so Ck; Cm similarly)."

4. "Smeared with mud and wearing matted locks" paṅkadigdhaḥ . . . jaṭilaḥ: Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, indicates that Bharata is covered with mud because he has not been bathing. Nonetheless, Cg argues, despite his lack of bathing, he is like someone who has been consecrated for an obligatory ritual performance by means of a symbolic bath. Bharata has failed to bathe, Cg continues, because he is wearing the matted locks of an ascetic, for whom bathing in water is prohibited. Cg then notes the passage at 3.15.27–28, where Lakṣmaṇa imagines that poor, suffering, delicate Bharata is bathing in the cold waters of the Sarayū River. Cg's response to this seeming contradiction is to note that an occasional bath, even for someone in Bharata's situation, is permissible. As an alternative explanation for Bharata's soiled body, Cg suggests that it is because he is sleeping on the bare ground. (snānābhāvāt paṅkadigdhatvam. snānābhāve 'pi nityānuṣṭhānaṃ dīkṣitavad gauṇasnānena. snānābhāve nimittam āha jaṭila iti. . . . jaṭilānāṃ vāruṇasnānaṃ niṣiddham iti bhāvaḥ. kathaṃ nv apararātreṣu sarayūm avagāhata ityādy uktis tu kādācitkasnānaparatve 'py upapadyate. yadvā sadānāstṛtabhūmiśāyanādinā vā tādṛśatvam.) The reader will recall that Rāma has declined Vibhīṣaṇa's offer of a luxurious bath on the grounds that he could not indulge in such pleasures when Bharata was depriving himself of them on his account. (See 6.109.5–6 and notes.) See, too, 6.111.26–30 and notes. Compare 6.102.7–14 and notes, where Rāma insists that Sītā bathe before appearing before him.

D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cr read instead ājñāvaśatve, literally, "under the control of an order," that is, "obedient to your instructions."

"having placed your sandals in a position of honor" pāduke te puraskṛtya: Literally, "having put forward your two sandals." The reference is to Bharata's celebrated act of fraternal subordination in which he consecrates Rāma's sandals as a symbol of Rāma's kingship (2.104–105; 2.107.14–22). See, too, 6.113.26–30.

5–7. "When last I saw you . . . At that time: tvāṃ purā . . . dṛṣṭvā . . . pūrvam: Literally, "Long ago having seen you . . . long ago." Since the three verses constitute a single, long sentence, the repetition of the synonymous adverbs purā and pūrvam is redundant. Cg attempts to eliminate the redundancy by suggesting that we read purā as an adjective in the sense of purātana, "old," and in composition with the following term cīravasana, "clad in barkcloth garments." This would create a compound with the sense "clad in old barkcloth garments." (purācīravasanaṃ purātanacīravasanam. ato na pūrvapadena paunaruktyam.) We have broken the long sentence into smaller units for the sake of readability.

"with but one lone companion and a woman" strītṛtīyam: Literally, "having a woman for a third." The phrase is elliptical, since the second member of Rāma's party, Lakṣmaṇa, is not explicitly mentioned.

"you had been driven from the kingdom" cyutaṃ rājyāt: Literally, "fallen from the kingdom or the kingship." Cr glosses rājyāt, "from the kingdom," with abhiṣekāt, "from the consecration."

"to obey your father's instructions and intent on obeying those of Kaikeyī" pitur vacanakāriṇam . . . kaikeyīvacane yuktam: Literally, "carrying out father's words . . . intent on Kaikeyī's words."

"an immortal god" amaram: Literally, "an immortal or deathless one."

"I was deeply saddened" karuṇā . . . mamāsīt: Literally, "of me there was pity or compassion." We follow the suggestion of Ck, Ct, and Cg in taking the term karuṇā, "compassion," here to refer to "sorrow or grief (dainyam—Ck, Ct; duḥkham—Cg)" rather than in its normal sense.

8. "I feel unsurpassed delight" mama prītir anuttamā: Literally, "of me there is unsurpassed delight." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead mamābhūt prītir uttamā, "of me there was the highest delight."

9–14. And I know . . . There was . . . Then there was . . . I know about . . . I know, too, about how . . . Finally, I know . . . All of that is known to me" sarvaṃ ca . . . viditaṃ mama . . . yat . . . yathā ca . . . yathā ca . . . yathā . . . sarvaṃ mamaitad viditam: Literally, "all that is known to me . . . which . . . and how . . . and how . . . how all that is known to me." The six verses constitute a single idea, with the final five verses constituting a single elaborate sentence. We have broken up the syntax for the sake of readability.

"about all the many joys and sorrows you experienced" sarvaṃ ca sukhaduḥkhaṃ te . . . yat tvayā vipulaṃ prāptam: Literally, "and all the abundant joy and sorrow obtained by you." As the commentators explain, the joys refer to the pleasures of life in Pañcavaṭī, etc. (sukhaṃ pañcavaṭīvāsādikṛtam—so Cg), while the sorrows are those produced by the abduction of Sītā (duḥkhaṃ sītāharaṇajam—so Cg) or hardships such as the slaying of Khara (kharavadhādinā duḥkham—so Ct, Ck).

"starting with the slaughter in Janasthāna" janasthānavadhādikam: D10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cm read instead janasthānanivāsinā, "[by you] who were living in Janasthāna."

"the assault on Sītā" sītonmathanam eva: Literally, "the harm or injury to Sītā." Given the critical reading, one must assume that the reference is to Sītā's abduction. However, all manuscripts, both northern and southern, refer explicitly to Sītā's abduction. Most northern manuscripts substitute the phrase sītāyā haraṇaṃ [Gorresio v.l. sītāpaharaṇaṃ] tathā, "the abduction of Sītā." Southern manuscripts insert an additional passage. Following 10ab, D1–7,9–11,S insert a passage of one line [3442*]: "and this blameless wife [of yours] was abducted (hṛtā)." Southern commentators therefore read both unmathanam and hṛtā, and are thus confronted with the problem of distinguishing the two events, which would seem to be identical. Ct and Ck handle this by taking the term unmathanam, "harm, injury, or destruction," to refer to the torments inflicted on Sītā by the rākṣasa women in Laṅkā after her abduction (sītāyā rākṣasībhir laṅkāyāṃ kleśanam—so Ct). Cg, on the other hand, understands hṛtā, "abducted," as an inceptive participle modifying Sītā, "[the object] most desired to be abducted," which, he asserts, avoids redundancy with unmathanam. (hṛtā hartum īpsitā. āśaṃsāyāṃ ktaḥ. ato na sītonmathanam ity anena paunaruktyam.)

"the feats of the son of the wind god" karma vātātmajasya: Literally, "the action or deed of the son of the wind." As Ct points out, this term refers collectively to all of Hanumān's heroic deeds, starting with his leap over the ocean and ending with his burning of Laṅkā (samudralaṅghanādilaṅkādahanāntam). Ct thus distinguishes Hanumān's burning of Laṅkā from the second burning of the city by the monkey chiefs mentioned in verse 12, pādas cd.

"that thorn in the side of the gods" devakaṇṭakaḥ: D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead baladarpitaḥ (v.l. varadarpitaḥ), "proud of [his] strength (v.l. proud of his boon)."

"with the thirty gods" tridaśaiḥ: Literally, "with the thirty."

"and how they granted you a boon" yathā dattaś ca te varaḥ: Literally, "and how a boon was granted to you." As Cg points out, the reference is to Indra's boon through which the slain monkeys were brought back to life, restored to health, and blessed with perpetual forage (6.108.5ff.) (varo mṛtavānarajīvanādiḥ).

"through the power of my asceticism" tapasā: Literally, "through [my] asceticism." Cr glosses, "through the eye of [supernatural] knowledge (jñānacakṣuṣā)."

Following verse 13, D6,7,10,11,G2,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of one line [3443*, line 1]: "And how, when Rāvaṇa, that thorn in the side of the gods, had been slain . . ."

Following verse 14, D6,7,9–11,T2,3,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of one line [3445*]: "My disciples are hastening from here to the city to proclaim the news."

15. "guest-offering" arghyam: This is the traditional welcome offering to a respected or venerable visitor, consisting of various articles of food and drink. The full offering consists of water, milk, kuśa grass, curds, butter, rice, barley, and white mustard seeds (āpaḥ kṣīraṃ kuśāgraṃ ca dadhi sarpiḥ sataṇḍulam / yavaḥ siddhārthakaś caivāṣṭāṅgo 'rghaḥ prakīrtitaḥ // quoted by Apte s.v.).

16. "bowing his head" śirasā: Literally, "with his head."

17. "the road I take to Ayodhyā" mārge . . . ayodhyāṃ prati gacchataḥ: Literally, "on the road of [me] going to Ayodhyā."

"bear fruit out of season and drip with honey" akālaphalino vṛkṣāḥ . . . madhusravāḥ / bhavantu: Literally, "Let the trees be ones with untimely fruits [and] ones flowing with honey." Ck and Ct note that Rāma makes this request for the sake of the refreshment of the monkeys (vānarāṇāṃ viśrāmārtham). Compare Rāma's similar request at 6.108.8–12. See, too, 6.4.48 and note. Note that here, as before, Rāma requests boons only for the benefit of others, not for himself.

Following 17ab, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M1–3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3446*]: ". . . and many different kinds of fruits with the fragrance of nectar.[1]"

[1]"the fragrance of nectar" amṛtagandhīni: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read -kalpāni, "like," for -gandhīni, "fragrance." The resulting compound is rendered as "nectar-sweet" in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 355).

Following verse 17, D5–7,10,11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3448*]: "No sooner had he promised, 'So be it,' then—the moment he had finished speaking—the trees there became just like the trees of heaven."

18. "Then, suddenly": The words have been added to provide a transition, which is missing in the critical text (compare, however, 3448* above, which provides such a transition for the southern recension as does 3449* for the north).

"bare" śuṣkāḥ: Literally, "dried, withered."

Following verse 18, D5,6,7,9–11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of five lines [3450*]: "Then, as they went along, [the trees] became [filled with fruit, etc.] for a distance of three leagues on every side.[1] Then those delighted bulls among the leaping monkeys, in their thousands, devoured many heavenly fruits to their hearts' desire so that they were as filled with joy as if[1] they had gained heaven.[2][2–5]"

[1]"as . . . as if" yathaiva: D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead mudaiva, "as if with joy." This lends the last line the sense "filled with joy, as are those who gain heaven."

[2]Lines 2–5 are in the upajāti meter.

Sarga 113

1. "had caught sight of Ayodhyā" ayodhyām . . . samālokya: Literally, "having looked at Ayodhyā." The commentators are fully aware that it is not possible to see Ayodhyā, at least not from the ground, from Bharadvāja's ashram on the banks of the Ganges. Ck, Ct, and Cm, recalling that Rāma had pointed out the city in the distance to Sītā as they were landing in the ashram (6.111.29 = GPP 6.123.52), note that the sighting took place at the time of the descent of the Puṣpakavimāna (avataraṇasamaye—so Ct). Ct had already pointed out, at that earlier occasion, that Ayodhyā was visible from that location only because the high altitude of the Puṣpakavimāna (gaṅgātīravartibharadvājāśramapradeśage vimāne tasyātyunnatavyomapradeśavṛttitvād ayodhyādidarśanam—Ct on GPP 6.123.52). Cg, however, takes a different tack, understanding that the action described here is in the present rather than at the time of the landing. He proposes that we understand the gerund samālokya, "having seen," in the sense of samālocya, "having considered or having thought about," since, as he notes, someone situated in the ashram could not possibly see Ayodhyā (āśramasthasya tadavalokanāsaṃbhavāt). See notes to verse 2 below.

B2,3,D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr transpose 1cd and 2ab. See notes to verse 2 below.

G1,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg omit 1cd–2ab. See notes to verse 2 below.

2. "wishing to do a kindness" priyakāmaḥ: Given the sequence of the verses of the texts and printed editions of Ct discussed below, Ct understands the adjective here to mean that Rāma wishes to favor Sugrīva and the other monkeys by fulfilling all of their wishes once they reach Ayodhyā (sugrīvādīnāṃ priyakāmo 'yodhyāyāṃ sarvatatpriyapūraṇakāmaḥ). Cr, however, understands that Rāma wants to fulfill the wishes of the inhabitants of Ayodhyā (ayodhyāvāsīnāṃ priyam icchuḥ).

"spoke kindly" priyam . . . uvāca: Again, because of the differing verse order in their texts, Ct and Cr understand the adverb priyam, "kindly," to construe with the finite verb cintayāmāsa (1b), yielding "he thought kindly" (priyaṃ yathā bhavati cintayāmāsa—Ct). Ct then understands the phrase to refer elliptically to Rāma's kindly considering the various actions he should take next (kartavyajātam iti śeṣaḥ). Cr understands that Rāma is thinking ahead to prevent Bharata from fulfilling his earlier vow to immolate himself should Rāma not return by the final day of the fourteen-year period of exile (caturdaśavarṣasamāptidine yadi tvāṃ na paśyāmi tarhi hutāśanaṃ praveksyāmīti bharatoktiṃ sasmārety arthaḥ).

"swift-striding" tvaritavikramam: V3,B2,D1,4–7,9–12,T,G2,3,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Ck, and Cr read instead tvaritavikramaḥ, thus making the epithet apply to Rāma instead of Hanumān.

B2,3,D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr transpose 1cd and 2ab. Their texts yield the following sequence: "But when swift-striding Rāma Rāghava had caught sight of Ayodhyā, wishing to do a kindness, he entered into kindly thought. [=GPP 6.125.1] Then, after some reflection, that wise man of blazing energy cast his glance upon the monkeys and then spoke to the leaping monkey Hanumān. [=GPP 6.125.2]"

G1,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg omit 1cd ["Then after some reflection"]–2ab ["Then Rāma . . . wishing to do a kindness . . . kindly . . . of rapid strides"]. These same texts and manuscripts then read, for 2cd, cintayitvā hanūmantam uvāca plavagottamam. The resulting śloka [VSP and KK 6.128.1] would be translated as follows: "But when Rāghava had caught sight of Ayodhyā, he was plunged into thought. [And] having reflected, he addressed Hanumān, the foremost of leaping monkeys."

3. M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg omit 3ab, "Go quickly, best of leaping monkeys. Hastening to Ayodhyā . . ."

5. "my friend and equal" mamātmasamaḥ sakhā: Literally, "my friend equal to myself." The commentators differ as to how to interpret Rāma's socially progressive words. Ct does not believe that Rāma is equating the tribal Guha with himself but rather with the ātman, or "Supreme Spirit," because of Guha's knowledge of the ultimate truth. (ātmasamaḥ. tatsadṛśaḥ. tattvajñānitvāt.) Ck sees the term as a reference to Guha's physical prowess, glossing, "of immense strength (mahābala ity arthaḥ)." Cr takes the term to suggest that, [since Rāma and Guha are close and equal friends,] his, Guha's, happiness is Rāma's as well (tatprītir mamaiva prītir iti dhvanitam). Cg is the only commentator to address the critical issue of social hierarchy here, arguing that the term ātmasamaḥ, "equal to himself," shows that, in the excess of his affection, Rāma ignores Guha's low-caste status and thinks of him as a member of the House of Ikṣvāku (ātmasamo hīnajātim anavekṣya premātiśayena guham ikṣvākukulīnam amanyata). Several of the translators consulted understand that Rāma regards Guha as "a second self." See notes to verse 21 below.

"free from anxiety" vigatajvaram: Cg alone understands the compound adverbially and takes it to mean "in such a way that he [Guha] will be free from anxiety, that is, from worry caused by his separation from me (madviśleṣacintājvararahitaṃ yathā tatheti bhaviṣyatīti kriyāviśeṣaṇam)."

6. "will show you the way to Ayodhyā and will inform you of Bharata's activities" ayodhyāyāś ca te mārgaṃ pravṛttiṃ bharatasya ca / nivedayisyati: Literally, "he will inform [you] about your path to Ayodhyā and about Bharata's activities."

7. "I have accomplished my purpose" siddhārtham: Ct glosses, "that I have successfully completed my purpose in the form of carrying out my father's instructions (nirvyūḍhapitṛvacanaparipālanarūpaprayojanam)."

8–11. "Tell him about . . . And tell him about . . . Tell him about": Verses 8–11 consist of a list of actions or events either in the accusative case or belonging to adverbial clauses. The verses contain no finite verb. We understand, with Cv and Cg, that one should carry the imperative śaṃsa, "[you] tell, report," from 7c above through the entire sequence.

"the march to the sea" upayānaṃ samudrasya: Literally, "the approach of the sea."

"of the great god Śiva" mahādeva-: Literally, "the great god or Mahādeva." See 3395*, n. 1 (at note to 6.111.12). Cf., too, 6.107.1.

Following verse 11, D5–7,10,11,T,G,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3460*]: "And inform Bharata, gentle friend,[1] that I have come back,[2] together with the king of the rākṣasas and the lord of the tawny monkeys."

[1]"gentle friend" saumya: Literally, "O gentle one." Cg understands that, by using this epithet, Rāma is telling Hanumān that he must break the news to Bharata gently. Otherwise, he fears that, if Bharata were to learn of his return too suddenly, his joy might be overwhelming. (anena mandaṃ mandaṃ kathaya. anyathā haṭhān madāgamanaśravaṇe harṣo 'sya unmastako bhaved iti bhāvaḥ.) See note to verse 17 below.

[2]"that I have come back" upayātam . . . mām: Cg observes that, unless this is done, Bharata will carry out his vow to immolate himself on the fourth day of the half month, since the fourteen years of Rāma's exile would have been exceeded (anyathā caturthyām eva caturdaśavarṣātikramāt so 'gniṃ praviśed iti bhāvaḥ). This variant provides a finite verb and syntactical context for the preceding verses (8–11).

12. "Tell him": See notes to verses 8–11 above.

12cd = 35cd, reading the instrumental plural mahābalaiḥ for the nominative singular mahābalaḥ.

"immensely powerful" mahābalaḥ: V3,D5–7,10,11,T,G,M3,5, and texts of the southern commentators read instead the instrumental plural mahābalaiḥ for the critical edition's nominative singular, thus making the adjective apply to Rāma's allies.

D2,3,5,9,T2,3,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg transpose verses 12 and 13.

13. D2,3,5,9,T2,3,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg transpose verses 12 and 13.

14. "you should accurately determine everything about Bharata's state of mind" jñeyāḥ sarve ca vṛttāntā bharatasya . . . / tattvena: Literally, "all Bharata's conditions are to be known according to the truth."

15. "For whose head would not be turned by . . . an . . . kingdom" rājyaṃ kasya nāvartayen manaḥ: Literally, "whose mind would a kingdom not cause to turn around." Ct believes, as do we, that Rāma is informing the people that even one's brothers are not to be trusted (anena bhrātara evaṃ śaṅkyā iti lokān bodhayati). Cg sees a more benign view of Bharata, glossing "whose (kasya)" as "other than Bharata (bharatād anyasyaivety arthaḥ)."

"ancestral" pitṛpaitāmaham: Literally, "belonging to one's father and grandfather."

16. "being long accustomed to it" saṃgatyā: Literally, "by association." Our translation follows the commentaries of Ck, Cs, Ct (first alternative), and Cm, who gloss, "through long association (cirakālaparicayena)." Ck, Ct, and Cs offer an alternative: "or through association with Kaikeyī (kaikeyīsaṃgatyā vā)." Ck, Ct, and Cs continue, noting that, should it turn out that Bharata actually does desire to rule, Rāma will go off somewhere or other and pass his days in ascetic practice (vayaṃ yatra kvāpi tapasā kālaṃ neṣyāma iti śeṣaḥ—so Ck, Ct, Cs). In keeping with his position that there is no real likelihood or suspicion of Bharata's coveting the kingship, Cg interprets samgati here as "association with us, i.e., with Rāma (asmatsaṃgatyā)." He wonders if Bharata might be inclined to accept sovereignty at Rāma's insistence because of his joy at seeing Rāma after so long a separation. (yady api pūrvaṃ sarvātmanā na rājyapālanam aṅgīkaromīty uktam. tathāpi caturdaśavarṣaparyantaṃ madvirahāturatayā maddarśanajaharṣaprakarṣātirekeṇa tvam abhiṣikto bhaveti maduktim aṅgīkariṣyati kim iti bhāvaḥ.)

"that delight of the Raghus" raghunandanaḥ: Cg believes that use of this epithet, with its allusion to the glorious and powerful dynasty of the Raghus, capable of ruling the three worlds, is intended to dispel any doubts as to Bharata's ability to bear the burden of kingship. (katham asau bharaṇakṣama ity atrāha raghunandana iti. trailokyabharaṇakṣamakulodbhūta ity arthaḥ.)

"entire . . . without exception" sarvām akhilām: Literally, "entire . . . entire." The redundant collocation of these two terms is, however, idiomatic, as they often occur together. Only Cg attempts to distinguish them, glossing the second term as "without any gap or exception. The meaning is 'with all its abundant or prosperous population.' (akhilāṃ khilarahitām. samṛddhajanām ity arthaḥ.)"

17. "his state of mind and his intentions" buddhiṃ ca . . . vyavasāyaṃ ca: Literally, "[his] mind, idea, or intention, and [his] resolution." Cr understands buddhi in its sense of "resolution or determination (niścayam)" and vyavasāya in its sense of "undertaking, activity, or industry (udyogam)." Cg believes, however, that the two terms refer to the two possible thoughts on Bharata's part concerning the disposition of the kingdom. According to this interpretation, buddhi means the thought that Rāma will take back the kingdom, and vyavasāya, that, in the case of Rāma's refusal to do so, he, Bharata himself, will have to rule. (buddhiṃ matsannidhāne kathaṃcid rājyam aṅgīkarisyatīti buddhim. vyavasāyaṃ sarvātmanā nāṅgīkariṣyatīti vyavasāyaṃ ca.) Cg further understands that, in telling Hanumān to return quickly, Rāma is instructing him not to return if it turns out that Bharata wishes to rule. Cg concludes his discussion of this point by noting that some authorities believe that, although Rāma already knows Bharata's intentions (i.e., to defer to Rāma), he enters into this discussion in order to abide by the strictures of nītiśāstra, which require a king to investigate everything thoroughly (loke rājanītipravartanāyaivam atiśaṅkāvacanam uktavān). Cg understands, however, that, if Rāma himself were to arrive suddenly, the access of Bharata's joy would be overwhelming. Therefore, Cg argues, Rāma sends Hanumān for the sake of [Bharata's] well-being. (vastutaḥ svasya jhaṭiti gamane bharatasya harṣa unmastako bhaved iti. tasmāt sattvāya hanumantaṃ preṣitavān.) See 3460*, n. 1, following notes to verse 8 above.

18. "Instructed in this fashion" iti pratisamādiṣṭaḥ: Only Cg seeks to give the upasarga prati its meaning of "opposition, counter, etc.," here. His understanding is that (probably because of the sensitive nature of the mission) the instructions are not welcome to Hanumān. He glosses, "ordered in an unfavorable way. The meaning is 'instructed against his wishes (lit., his heart).' (pratikūlaṃ samādiṣṭaḥ. ahṛdayaṃ samādiṣṭa ity arthaḥ.)" This interpretation finds expression in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 356), who renders, "Thus ordered on an unpleasant errand . . ."

"took on a human form" mānuṣaṃ dhārayan rūpam: Literally, "taking on a human form." The text gives no indication as to why Hanumān feels it necessary to take on a human form. Perhaps the motive is similar to that which leads Sugrīva to instruct him to do so at the time of Hanumān's first meeting with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa at 4.2.23. See also 4.3.3, where Hanumān actually assumes a human form. There the reason was Hanumān's and Sugrīva's suspicion about who Rāma was and what his intentions might be. Here it may just be that, having left the enchanted demon world of Laṅkā and the monkey-haunted forests of Kiṣkindhā to enter the civilized world of men, Hanumān deems this disguise appropriate. See notes to verses 40–42 below. See 6.115.35, where the other monkeys also take on human form. See, too, notes to 6.114.3.

Following verse 18, D5–7,10,11,S insert, while Ś,D1–4,8,9,12 insert following 18ab, a passage of two lines [3465*]: "Then Hanumān, son of Māruta, flew up swiftly, just as might Garutmān[1] in his desire to seize a mighty serpent."

[1]"Garutmān" garutmān: Literally, "the winged one." This is a common variant of the name of Viṣṇu's mount, Garuḍa. Cf. notes to 6.91.6 and 6.116.47.

19–20. "the path of his father" pitṛpatham: As the commentators note, the compound refers to the path of the wind, Hanumān's divine father, in other words the atmosphere (antarikṣam).

"fearsome" bhīmam: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead madhyam, "[in] the middle."

"the . . . abode of the serpent lords" bhujagendrālayam: D6,7,10,11,T2,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck, Ct, and Cr read instead vihagendrālayam, "abode of the lord or lords of the birds." As different commentators indicate, the reference can be taken to refer either to the abode of the great birds or to the lord of the birds, i.e., Garuḍa himself. In either case, the epithet must apply to the pitṛpatham, "the path of the father," in pāda a, as opposed to saṃnipātam, "confluence," in pāda d.

21. "informs you that he is safe" tvāṃ kuśalam abravīt: We understand that Hanumān is carrying out the instructions that Rāma gave him at verse 5 above to report to Guha that he, Rāma, had returned safe and sound from his sojourn in the forest. See verses 5 and 6, and notes. The phrase can also be understood in its conventional sense of "he inquires after your welfare," as several translators render. The commentators are silent. See verse 33 below.

22. "On the instructions of Bharadvāja, Rāghava spent last night, the night of the fifth, with him. Now, since he has taken his leave of the sage, you shall see him this very day." pañcamīm adya rajanīm uṣitvā vacanān muneḥ / bharadvājābhyanujñātaṃ drakṣyasy adyaiva rāghavam: Literally, "This very day you shall see Rāghava, given leave by Bharadvāja, [Rāghava who,] having dwelt the fifth night, today because of the words of the sage . . ." See notes to 6.112.1 for the commentators' opinions on what the phrase "the fifth (pañcamīm)" refers to. D9–11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct read atraiva, "right here," for adyaiva, "this very day."

23. "swift Hanumān . . . swiftly" mahāvego vegavān: Literally, "that one of great speed, possessing speed." Our translation follows the distinction Cg proposes, according to which the first epithet refers to Hanumān's innate or natural swiftness, whereas the second describes his movement at this moment. (mahāvegaḥ svabhāvaḥ. vegavān tādātvikavegavān.)

"without further hesitation" avicārayan: Literally, "not reflecting." The commentators take the participle here to mean "paying no heed to (agaṇayan)," although they disagree as to the object to which Hanumān was oblivious. Ct, Ck, Cr, and Cm understand that he was heedless of the fatigue of the journey (adhvaśramam). Cg believes that he pays no attention to such things as the beauty of the forests, hills, and rivers along his path (mārgasthavanagirinadīsaundaryādikam).

"flew up once more" utpapāta: Literally, "he flew up."

"the hairs of his body bristling with excitement" saṃprahṛṣṭatanūruhaḥ: Literally, "his body hair excited." The commentators attribute Hanumān's excitement to his getting an opportunity to serve Rāma, who is the delight of the world (jagadānandarāmasevakatvalābhena—so Ct), or to his having the privilege of announcing the return of Rāma, who brings delight to all the world (sakalalokānandakārirāmapratyāgamanaṃ mayā śrāvayitavyaṃ labdham ity asmād dhetoḥ—Cg).

24. "the spot sacred to Rāma" rāmatīrtham: As several commentators point out, the reference here is to the Bhārgava warrior-sage, Rāma (Paraśurāma). See notes to 6.11.9 and 6.111.12, 3395*, n. 2.

"the river Vālukinī" nadīṃ vālukinīm: According to Cr, there is a river of this name (vālukinīṃ tadabhidhāṃ nadīm). Ct understands similarly. See, too, 6.115.22 and notes. The name appears to be unattested elsewhere.

"And he saw the Gomatī River" gomatīṃ tāṃ ca so 'paśyat: B3,D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead varūthīṃ gomatīṃ caiva, "and [he saw] the rivers Varūthī and Gomatī." See Bhattacharyya 1991 (s.v. gomatī). See, too, 2.43.9; 2.65.11; and notes.

Following verse 24, D5–7,10,11,T,G1,2,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert, while G3 and M2 insert after 24ab, a passage of one line [3468*]: "And [he saw] prosperous countries and many thousands of people."

25. Following verse 25, D5–7,10,11,T,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3470*]. D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct reverse the order of the lines: "Adorned with women and old men together with their sons, who were all enjoying themselves, they resembled the trees in Caitraratha, the park of Indra, lord of the gods.[1]"

[1]"Adorned with women and old men together with their sons, who were all enjoying themselves" strībhiḥ saputrair vṛddhaiś ca ramamāṇaiḥ svalaṃkṛtān: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead strībhiḥ saputrair pautraiś ca ramamāṇaiḥ svalaṃkṛtaiḥ, "with women along with their well-ornamented sons and their grandsons who were enjoying themselves."

26–30. Verses 26–30 consist largely of a series of adjectives and participial phrases modifying Bharata and governed by the finite verb, "he spied (dadarśa)," in verse 26c. We have broken up this long sentence for the sake of readability.

"A quarter of a league" krośamātre: Literally, "at the measure of a krośa." A krośa is a traditional Indian measure of distance reckoned to be a quarter of a yojana. The actual distance of a yojana, which we render as "league," is debatable. MW understands it to be either four to five miles, approximately nine miles, or two and a half miles. (An English league is approximately 5.556 km or 3.45 mi). Given that Hanumān is able to make out the details of Bharata's dress and bodily condition at this distance, it is possible that Vālmīki has the shorter measure of a krośa in mind. On the measurement of a yojana, see note to 1.5.7.

"he was clad in garments of barkcloth and black antelope skin . . . was clad in barkcloth and animal skins" cīrakṛṣṇājināmbaram . . . valkalājinavāsasam: Cg claims that the second term (valkalājinavāsasam) refers exclusively to Bharata's upper garments and that therefore there is no redundancy, since the first term presumably refers to the lower garments. (valkalājinavāsasam ity uttarīyoktiḥ. ataś cīrakṛṣṇājināmbaram ity anena na punaruktiḥ.) Cf. verse 31 below and 6.115.13–16. See Emeneau 1962.

"Wearing matted locks . . . He had a mass of matted hair piled high" jaṭilam . . . samunnatajaṭābhāram: Cg again attempts to show that two similar terms do not constitute a redundancy, arguing that the first term simply refers to Bharata's having the matted locks of an ascetic, while the second refers specifically to the height of his matted hair. (pūrvaṃ jaṭāvattvoktiḥ. atra tadbhārasya samunnatatvoktir iti vaiṣamyam.) See 6.112.4 and notes.

"his body was smeared with dirt" maladigdhāṅgam: See 6.112.4 and notes, where the commentators take up the issue of Bharata's dirt-smeared body.

"with focused mind" bhāvitātmānam: Cg glosses, "who has meditated on the Self (dhyātātmānam iti)." According to Cg, the epithet expresses Bharata's control of his mind (manoniyamoktiḥ).

"Having placed Rāma's sandals in a position of honor" pāduke te puraskṛtya: Literally, "having placed those two sandals forward." See 6.112.4 and note.

"all clad in ochre garments" kāṣāyāmbaradhāribhiḥ: Ochre garments are the typical attire of renunciants. Ck, Ct, and Cg note that the court functionaries would be dressed in this fashion according to the maxim, "As is the king, so are the subjects (yathā rājā tathā prajeti nyāyāt—so Ct)."

31. "never to abandon" na . . . parimoktum: D6,10,11,T2,3,G1,2,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead na . . . paribhoktum, "not . . . to enjoy." The commentators supply a gerund, parityajya, "having abandoned," or parivarjayitvā, "having avoided," and understand the verse to mean that the citizens were determined never to abandon Bharata and indulge in enjoyments such as fine clothes and ornaments (rājaputraṃ bharataṃ parivarjayitvā bhoktuṃ samīcīnavastrābharaṇādīny anubhavituṃ na vyavasyanti vyavasāyaṃ na kurvanti—so Cg). Cg also proposes a reading without supplying a gerund in which he takes the infinitive paribhoktum, "to enjoy," in the sense of "to see." According to this reading, the citizens essentially find the king's obsessive mourning for his brother too depressing and try to keep away. (pari parito vartamānā api paurā bharataṃ bhoktum anubhavitum. draṣṭum iti yāvat . . . taddarśane nirāśā bhavantīty arthaḥ . . . caturdaśe varṣe pūrṇe 'pi rāmāgamanādarśanāt prāṇatyāge vyavasitaṃ bharatam ālokayitāṃ paurāṇāṃ khedātiśayo 'nena ślokena sūcyate.) Translations that follow the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators render this variant and generally translate according to the first interpretation. However, Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 410), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 357) and Pagani (1999, p. 1202), understands that the subjects were resolved not to neglect Bharata's maintenance. Roussel translates, "Ses sujets . . . étaient résolus de ne point négliger son entretien."

32. "who was like a second Dharma, god of righteousness" dharmam iva . . . aparam: Literally, "like another Dharma."

33. "informs you that he is safe" sa tvā kuśalam abravīt: See verses 5 and 6 above; and verse 21 and notes above.

34. "I bring you wonderful news" priyam ākhyāmi te: Literally, "I tell you good news." Cg, alone among the commentators, expresses disquiet at the way in which Hanumān launches directly into his message without the expected courtesies and formalities of greeting. He offers a number of explanations for Hanumān's abruptness: 1) Hanumān does not praise Bharata because he has never been introduced to him; 2) the mention of his cupping his hands in reverence in verse 32 suggests that he has accompanied this gesture with the appropriate praise; 3) upon seeing Bharata's condition and fearing that he might die if there is even a moment's delay in reporting the good news, Hanumān reports the life-saving news directly. In this he reflects, based on the maxim of the wall [i.e., painting in the absence of a wall (kuḍyaṃ vinā citrakarmeva)], that there would be no use of praise if the object of that praise had already withered away; and 4) upon seeing Bharata's condition, Hanumān forgets his true nature (i.e., his manners). (atrāparicitatvād bharataṃ hanumān nāvandata. yadvā prāñjalir iti padaṃ vandanapūrvakāñjaliparam. athavā bharatadaśādarśanena priyākhyāne kṣaṇavilambe 'pi prāṇahāniśaṅkayā sati kuḍya iti nyāyena vandanoddeśavastuni śīrymāṇe kiṃ vandaneneti tadujjīvakaṃ priyākhyānam evākarot. yadvā taddaśādarśanena svarūpaṃ visasmāra.)

"you shall put aside your terrible sorrow" śokaṃ tyakṣyasi dāruṇam: B2,D10,11, M1,2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead śokaṃ tyaja sudāruṇam, "you must put aside your very terrible sorrow." This reading obliges the commentators that share it to supply the future form of the verb √bhū, "to be," bhaviṣyasi, "you will be," yielding the sense "[for] you will be reunited."

35. 35cd = 12cd, reading mahābalaiḥ for mahābalaḥ. See note to verse 12 above.

36. "who is united" samagrā: Literally, "whole, entire." The context leads us to agree with Cr, who glosses, "accompanied (sahitā)." Cg glosses, "her every wish fulfilled (saṃpūrṇamanorathā)." See 2.34.31 and note; and 3.55.18. Cf. MBh 7.50.15, where the term has the sense "safe and sound."

37. "Kaikeyī's son" kaikayīsutaḥ: Literally, "the son of Kaikayī." Note the variant of the name Kaikeyī. M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead bhrātṛvatsalaḥ, "who loved his brother."

"in a sudden access of delight" sahasā hṛṣṭaḥ: Literally, "suddenly delighted."

"and fainted dead away" moham jagāma ha: Literally, "he went straight into a swoon." The verse ends with the emphatic particle "ha" (here rendered as "[dead] away"), and Cg feels obliged to comment on its meaning here. He takes it as an expletive expressive of amazement and notes: "With respect to Bharata, who was put into such a condition at the mere hearing of the news, the seer [Vālmīki] expresses, through the particle 'ha,' his wonder at what would have been his condition had Rāma himself suddenly arrived (hety anena vārtāśravaṇamātreṇaitādṛśāvasthe bharate jhaṭiti rāmāgamane kāvasthā bhaved ity ṛṣir vismayate)."

39. "with . . . teardrops of joy and delight" aśokajaiḥ prītimayaiḥ . . . /. . . aśrubindubhiḥ: Literally, "with drops of tears born from non-sorrow and consisting of delight."

40–42. "Whether you be a god or a man" devo vā mānuṣo vā: Cg notes that, even though Hanumān has taken on a human form (at verse 18), the extraordinary degree of his blazing energy gives rise to this doubt (parigṛhītamanuṣyadehe 'pi hanumati tejo- viśeṣāt saṃśayaḥ). See 6.115.35 and notes, where the other monkeys take on human forms. See, too, notes to 6.114.3.

"My gentle friend" saumya: Literally, "O gentle one."

"I shall give you, the bearer of this good news who reported it to me" priyākhyānasya te . . . dadāmi bruvataḥ priyam: Literally, "I give to you, who are telling good news, [and] who are reporting good news." The commentators propose various interpretations intended, no doubt, to eliminate the apparent redundancy. Ct and Cr understand "good news (priyam)" in the sense of "gift, favor, reward." Ct supplies the interrogative pronoun kim, lending the passage the sense of a rhetorical question: "What reward shall I give you, who are speaking? I do not see anything to equal this good news (te kiṃ dadāmy etat priyākhyānasamaṃ na kiṃcit paśyāmīti bhāvaḥ)." Cr understands priyam similarly but takes the genitive participle bruvataḥ, "speaking," to refer to Bharata himself, who is asking Hanumān to choose his reward (te kiṃ dadāmīti bruvato mamāgre priyaṃ svepsitaṃ vadeti śeṣaḥ). Cr goes on to claim that, since Hanumān does not reply, Bharata lists, in the following verses, the gifts he will confer (tūṣṇīṃ sthitaṃ taṃ pratyāha gavām iti). Compare 6.101.17 and notes, where Sītā makes a similar comment to Hanumān.

"a hundred prosperous villages" grāmāṇāṃ ca śataṃ param: Literally, "and an excellent hundred [of] villages." Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 410) understands the word param in its sense of "more than," rendering, "une centaine de villages en plus." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, pp. 357–58) similarly renders, "more than a hundred villages."

"sixteen maidens . . . to be your wives" bhāryāḥ kanyāś ca ṣoḍaśa: Cr understands the term bhāryā, "wife," in its etymological sense as "one who is to be supported, i.e., a servant." He glosses, "female workers (karmakārīḥ)." Cg, somewhat similarly, glosses, "bhāryāḥ means 'worthy of support,' kaṇyāḥ means 'unmarried women.' (bhāryāḥ bharaṇārhāḥ. kaṇyā anūḍhastriyaḥ.)" Cf. notes to 6.116.57–58. See, too, Adhyātmarāmāyaṇa 6.14.62. The issue here, no doubt, is the commentators' discomfort with any hint of marriage or sexuality in the case of traditional India's celebrated paragon of celibacy, Hanumān. Of course, in the present context Bharata would have no way of knowing who his visitor really is and would probably not know anything about Hanumān even if he knew he were a monkey. On the celibacy of Hanumān, see the Introduction to the Sundarakāṇḍa, pp. 49–52; and Lutgendorf 2007, pp. 299–331 and passim.

43. "seemingly miraculous" adbhutopamam: Literally, "comparable to a miracle or a wonder." Cg glosses, "incomparable (nirupamam)."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 114

2. "Joy comes to a man even if he has to wait a hundred years" eti jīvantam ānando naraṃ varṣaśatād api: Literally, "Joy comes to a man who is living even after (lit., from) a hundred years." We agree with Cg, who suggests that we should supply the word param, "after, over," to the compound varṣaśatāt, "from one hundred years." The quarter verse eti jīvantam ānandaḥ is found twice in the Mahābhāṣya (Kielhorn 1962, vol. 1, 277:6; vol. 2, 59:8).

3. "How . . . did Rāghava come to be associated with the tawny monkeys" rāghavasya harīṇāṃ ca katham āsīt samāgamaḥ: Literally, "How was there a meeting of Rāghava and the tawny ones." Bharata's question poses a narrative problem. Hanumān has taken the form of a man (see 6.113.18 and note), and, as recently as 6.113.40, it is clear that Bharata thinks that Hanumān must either be a god or a human. Up until this point Hanumān has made no explicit reference to monkeys, at least none that the poet has recorded. The commentators are clearly disturbed by this unusual narrative lacuna and attempt to explain it in a number of ways. Ck and Ct refer back to Hanumān's announcement of Rāma's earlier declaration at 6.113.12 (cf. 6.113.35) to the effect that Rāma has come back with his [immensely powerful] friends. Ck and Ct reason that Bharata has somehow inferred from Hanumān's statement that the reference is to Sugrīva, etc. (sahamitrair ity asya sugrīvādimitrasahitair ity arthaḥ. tanmukhād avagatya pṛcchati.) Cg reasons that we have to understand that Bharata had earlier heard the general report of the mustering of a monkey army (atra vānarasamāgamapraśnena pūrvaṃ bharataḥ sāmānyato vānarasenāsannāhaṃ śrutavān iti gamyate). Crā and Cm argue that, when Bharata had expressed uncertainty as to whether Hanumān was a man or a god (6.113.40), the latter must have told him that he was the minister of the monkey king Sugrīva (devo vā mānuṣo veti praśnasyānantaraṃ vānarendrasya sugrīvasya sacivo 'ham iti prativacanaṃ hanumatā dattam ity avagantavyam).

"and for what reason" kim āśritya: Literally, "having depended on what." We agree with the commentators that one should supply the word prayojanam, "purpose, reason," here.

4. "Hanumān" saḥ: Literally, "he."

5–9. "Great-armed prince" mahābāho: Literally, "O great-armed one."

"you already know all about . . . And you know . . . You also know . . . And you know, of course" sarvam etat . . . yathāvad viditaṃ tava: Literally, "of [by] you all this is known, just how it was." The passage is made up of a single complex sentence, consisting of a long string of adverbial clauses governed by the adverb yathā, "how." We have broken it up into shorter units and repeated the governing verbal phrase for the sake of readability.

"how you . . . declined the kingship" tvayā . . . yathā rājyaṃ na cepsitam: Literally, "and how the kingdom was not desired by you."

"the tormentor of his foes" amitrakarśanaḥ: D1,G1,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read the vocative singular amitrakarśana, "O tormentor of your foes," for the nominative singular of the critical edition. This then modifies Bharata. Cg, the only commentator to remark on the vocative, argues that we are to understand by this epithet that, although Bharata himself is capable of exercising kingship, he begs his brother to return in keeping with the tradition of primogeniture (amitrakarśanety anena rājyakaraṇasāmarthye svasya saty api jyeṣṭhānuvṛttyarthaṃ nimantrita iti gamyate).

"begged him to accept it" rājyena . . . nimantritas tvayā: Literally, "[he was] invited by you with the kingship."

"remained faithful to the king's vow" sthitena rājño vacane: Literally, "[by him] who was fixed in the word of the king."

10. The exact construction of this verse as it is found in the critical edition is hard to determine with complete accuracy. It would appear that no existing manuscript has its sequence of lines. The southern and devanāgarī manuscripts (except for D13), as well Ś and the Lahore edition, separate the two lines of the verse with two additional lines (see 3489* below). The problem here is whether this verse, with or without the insert, is referring to one or two forests, since the narrative marks the moment of transition when Rāma and his party leave the woodlands of Citrakūṭa and plunge into the wilder interior of the Daṇḍaka Forest (Ayodhākāṇḍa 109). The verse in the critical edition appears to refer only to the latter, the wild Daṇḍaka Forest, as do the majority of northern manuscripts and the printed editions and texts unambiguously aligned with them. The problem with the critical reading is that it is difficult to say why, if only the Daṇḍaka Forest is meant, its wildlife is so terrified. Cg, the only commentator to attempt to address this question, suggests that it is because these animals had never before seen humans (apūrvapuruṣadarśanena). This seems doubtful, however, especially in light of the insert passage [3489*], where the forest is said to be in a pitiable or lamentable state and trampled by elephants. This would appear to be a reference to 2.109.3, where the forest of Citrakūṭa is said to have been trampled and fouled by Bharata's elephants and horses. It is this, among other things, that persuades Rāma to leave the pleasant groves of Citrakūṭa for the wild Daṇḍaka Forest. Cg, commenting on the adjective hastimṛditam, "trampled by elephants," of 3489*, line 2, again tries to shift the focus to the Daṇḍaka Forest, insisting that the elephants in question are wild ones (vanagajaiḥ) (rather than the tame elephants of Bharata's army). Cr interprets similarly.

The reconstructed version of the north (similar to Gorresio 6.110.12) substitutes a rather different and less ambiguous verse [3490*]: "Then, when you had departed, Rāghava, together with Lakṣmaṇa [10ab with variant], entered the deserted and dense [v.l. Daṇḍaka] forest infested with snakes" (apayāte tvayi tadā rāghavaḥ sahalakṣmaṇaḥ / nirjanaṃ vyālasampannaṃ prāviśad gahanaṃ [(v.l. Gorresio) daṇḍakaṃ] vanam //).

"Rāma entered" praviveśa: Literally, "he entered."

Following 10ab, Ś,D1–12,S, and the Lahore edition insert a passage of two lines [3489*]: "[When you had departed,] that forest was in an extremely lamentable state.[1] It had been trampled by elephants, and, filled as it was with lions, tigers, and other wild beasts, it was fearsome.[2]" 11. "Virādha" virādhaḥ: See Araṇyakāṇḍa 2.4ff.

12. "Seizing him" tam utkṣipya: Literally, "having lifted up, having seized." It would also be possible to understand utkṣipya in the sense "having emitted," governing mahānādam. This yields the sense "having emitted a loud roar." Compare 3.3.26, where the disposal of the dying Virādha is described in similar terms.

"they hurled" prakṣipanti sma: Ck and Ct understand, as is implied in the Araṇyakāṇḍa (3.3.26–27), that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa throw Virādha into a pit (garte… prakṣiptavantāv ity arthaḥ). However, Cg understands the plural to indicate that Sītā helped somewhat (bahuvacanena sītayāpi tatra kiṃcit sāhāyyaṃ kṛtam iti gamyate).

13. "Śarabhaṅga's lovely ashram" śarabhaṅgasya ramyam āśramam: See Araṇyakāṇḍa 4.

14. Following verse 14, D7,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read verses 16–17b. According to Crā, the proper sequence of the verses should be 16, 17ab, 15, as this follows the narrative. This order is reflected in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 359) and in the text and translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1884). The order of events as told here does not agree with that of the Araṇyakāṇḍa. There the Virādha episode (3.2–3) is followed by the mutilation of Śūrpaṇakhā (3.16–17), after which the battle takes place between Rāma and the fourteen thousand rākṣasas under the command of Khara and Dūṣaṇa (3.23–30).

15. For the sequence of verses, see notes to verse 14 above.

"rākṣasas of fearsome deeds" rakṣasāṃ bhīmakarmaṇām: Ś,Ñ,V,B,D1–4,6–12,T2, 3,G2,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, Cr, and Ck read instead janasthānanivāsinām, "of the inhabitants of Janasthāna."

Following verse 15, Ś,D5–8,10–13,S insert, in whole or in part, a passage of six lines [3497*]: "Meeting Rāma in battle on the battlefield,[1] those rākṣasas were completely wiped out by him, single-handedly in the fourth part of a day.[1–2] Those immensely powerful and valorous inhabitants of the Daṇḍaka Forest, obstructers of asceticism, were slain in battle by Rāghava.[3–4] The rākṣasas were crushed, and Khara was slain in battle. Then, after first killing Dūṣaṇa, he subsequently slew Triśiras.[2][5–6]"

[1]"Rāma in battle on the battlefield" raṇe rāmeṇa saṃyuge: Literally, "on the battlefield by Rāma in battle." D7,10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead rāmeṇa raṇamūrdhani, "by Rāma in the forefront of battle."

[2]"Then, after first killing Dūṣaṇa, he subsequently slew Triśiras" dūṣaṇaṃ cāgrato hatvā triśirās tadanantaram: Literally, "[by Rāma] having first slain Dūṣaṇa, following that Triśiras [was slain]."

16–17. For the sequence of verses, see notes to verse 14 above.

"Then, a little later, Śūrpaṇakhā" tataḥ paścāc chūrpaṇakhā: Literally, "then, afterward, Śūrpaṇakhā." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead paścāc chūrpaṇakhā nāma, "afterward, the one named Śūrpaṇakhā."

"that foolish creature" bālā: The term normally means "girl, young woman," but, given the context, we agree with Cm, Ct, and Cg, who gloss, "foolish or stupid [woman] (mūrkhā)." Cr similarly glosses, "ignorant [woman] (ajñā)."

18. "turned himself into a bejeweled deer" bhūtvā ratnamayo mṛgaḥ: Literally, "having become a deer made of jewels."

19. "When she caught sight of it, Vaidehī said to Rāma" sā rāmam abravīd dṛṣṭvā vaidehī: Literally, "having seen, she, Vaidehī, said to Rāma." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read instead athainam abravīd rāmaṃ vaidehī, "and Vaidehī said to Rāma.

"beautiful" kāntaḥ: Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 412) appears to read the adjective kāntaḥ as a vocative, kānta, "O beloved," rendering, "ô bien-aimé." In this he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 359) and Pagani (1999, p. 1205). Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 359) reads similarly. If one is to read the term in this way, one has to understand an irregular hiatus between kānta and āśrame.

"in our ashram" āśrame naḥ: D5–7,10,11,T2,M1,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Ct read instead āśramo naḥ, lending the sentence the meaning: "Our ashram would be charming and beautiful."

20. "as he fled and, as he fled" dhāvantam . . . dhāvantam: Literally, [him] running . . . [him] running." D7,10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read mṛgaṃ tam, "that deer," for the first dhāvantam.

"with a straight arrow" śareṇānataparvaṇā: Literally, "with an arrow whose joints were not depressed." See 6.59.71 and note.

21. "when . . . had gone after the deer" mṛgaṃ yāte tu: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead mṛgayāṃ yāti, "while [Rāghava] was going hunting."

"violently" tarasā: Literally, "suddenly." We follow the gloss of Cg, who understands, "by force (balātkāreṇa)."

"just as a baleful planet might seize the constellation Rohiṇī" jagrāha . . . grahaḥ . . . rohiṇīm iva: Literally, "just as a planet seized Rohiṇī." Cg glosses graha, "planet," with "Mars (aṅgāraka iti yāvat)." Cf. 6.19.34; 6.90.27; and notes.

22. "who tried to rescue her" trātukāmam: Literally, "whose wish was to rescue."

"Rāvaṇa" rāvaṇaḥ: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead rākṣasaḥ, "the rākṣasa."

23. "some monkeys . . . who were there on a mountaintop" parvatamūrdhani . . . vānarāḥ: As Ct points out, the reference is to Sugrīva, etc., and Mount Ṛśyamūka. See 3.52.1ff.

"who were there . . . were astonished to see" dadṛśur vismitās tatra: Literally, "there, astonished, they saw." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead dadṛśur vismitākārāḥ, "they, whose forms were astonishing, saw."

Following verse 23, D6,7,10,11,M2, KK (in brackets, unnumbered between 6.129.29 and 30), and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of two lines [3518*]: "Then, moving with the greatest speed, the immensely powerful rākṣasa mounted his flying palace Puṣpaka,[1] swift as thought, together with Vaidehī."

[1]"his flying palace Puṣpaka" tadvimānam . . . puṣpakam: The mention of the Puṣpaka-vimāna here suggests that this passage is a late interpolation. The epic contains no fewer than five direct or eyewitness accounts of Sītā's abduction, and in none of them is there any reference to Rāvaṇa's use of the Puṣpaka for this purpose. Indeed, the account of the abduction in the Araṇyakāṇḍa, given first by the poet and then in Jaṭāyus's report to Rāma, makes it clear that the flying chariot drawn by a team of asses or donkeys in which Rāvaṇa attempts to convey Sītā is utterly destroyed in the battle with Jaṭāyus, its draft animals and charioteer slain. After the destruction of this vehicle, no other is described, and it appears that Rāvaṇa simply flies through the air himself, clutching Sītā to his breast as described by Sugrīva and his companions in the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa and again, in the same kāṇḍa, in the accounts of Saṃpāti and Supārśva. Even Ct, who accepts the current passage as genuine, struggles to explain the sudden appearance of the Puṣpaka at this point. He says we are to understand that Rāvaṇa had either parked it in a hidden spot along the road or that it could arrive at his mental summons (anena mārge kvacit sthāpitaṃ gupte deśa āsīt smṛtimātreṇa vā tad-upasthānaṃ bodhyam). See 3.49.14; 3.50.8–12; 3.52; 3.63.16–18; 4.6.7; 4.57.11ff.; 4.58.15ff.; and notes.

24. "who made the world cry out" lokarāvaṇaḥ: D7,10,11,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead rākṣaseśvaraḥ, "lord of the rākṣasas." See note to 6.8.12.

25. "covered with gold" suvarṇaparikrānte: Literally, "circled or sheathed with gold." Cg glosses, "daubed or covered in gold (suvarṇānulipte)." D5,10,11,T1,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead suvarṇapariṣkāre, "ornamented with gold." Ct, Ck, and Cr, however, gloss, "having a rampart or outer wall made of gold (suvarṇamayapariṣkāraḥ prākāro yasya—so Cr)."

"with soothing words" vākyaiḥ: Literally, "with words or utterances."

Following verse 25, D5–7,10–11,S insert a passage of three lines [3521*]: "But, regarding his words to be as worthless as straw[1] and spurning that bull among the rākṣasas, sons of chaos, Vaidehī was placed in an aśoka grove. Meanwhile, Rāma returned after killing the deer in the deep forest.[2]"

[1]"But regarding his words to be as worthless as straw" tṛṇavad bhāṣitaṃ tasya: Literally, "his words like straw." We follow Cg, who supplies the gerund "having thought or regarded (matvā)." Ct and Cr understand that both Rāvaṇa and his speech are the objects of the participle acintayantī, "not heeding or regarding," in line 2. Compare 3.54.1; 5.19.2–3; and notes.

[2]"Meanwhile . . . deep forest" tataḥ . . . mahāvane: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead tadā . . . tadā vane, "then . . . then in the forest."

26. "Finding the vulture" dṛṣṭvā gṛdhram: Literally, "having seen the vulture." Cg and the printed editions of VSP (6.129.34) and KK (6.129.33) read [a]dṛṣṭvā, "not having seen." Cg understands that we should add the words sītāṃ ca, "and Sītā," to indicate that Rāma is distraught at finding neither Sītā nor Jaṭāyus. This interpretation is reflected in the translation of Gita Press (6.126.33; 1969, vol. 3, pp. 1885–86), which nevertheless reads dṛṣṭvā, "having seen," rendering, "Missing Sītā (in the hermitage) as well as the vulture (who was living on the outskirts of the hermitage)." See notes to verse 27 below.

27. "After cremating the . . . vulture" gṛdhram . . . dagdhvā: D6,7,10,11,G3,M2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read dṛṣṭvā, "having seen or found," for dagdhvā, "having burned or cremated." This reading makes the line redundant with 26b above, and this, no doubt, has led Gita Press to render the phrase as noted above.

"a dear friend of his father" priyasakhaṃ pituḥ: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead priyataraṃ pituḥ, lending the phrase the sense "who was most dear to his father."

*"Rāma wandered along" rāmaḥ . . . anucaran: Literally, "Rāma, wandering or following." The text of the critical edition is awkward with its singular present participle, anucaran, "wandering," which can only be resolved with the dual perfect āsedatuḥ, "the two encountered," in pāda e. We follow the lead of Cg whose text (as well as B3,D6,T2,3,M2,3) reads the imperfect singular anvacarat, "he wandered."

"all in blossom" puṣpitān: Literally, "in bloom, blossoming." Cg believes that the mention of blossoms is to suggest the thought: "Who would care for flowers now that Sītā has gone (puṣpitān ity anena puṣpalobhena kiṃ sītātra gateti matir vyajyate)?"

"the two princes encountered" āsedatuḥ: Literally, "the two encountered, met, or attacked." Cr glosses, "the two killed (jaghnatuḥ)."

Following 27ab, D5–7,10,11,S insert a passage of one line [3524*]: "Searching for Vaidehī, Rāghava, together with Lakṣmaṇa . . ."

29. "Even before they had met" pūrvam: We understand the adverb as do Ct, Cm, and Cg, who believe that the reference here is to the time before the two had actually met (parasparasānnidhyāt pūrvam—Ct). Ct explains that their mutual affection could arise prior to their meeting because Rāma had already heard about Sugrīva [from Hanumān], while Sugrīva had seen Rāma from a distance (rāmasya śravaṇena sugrīvasya dūrād darśanena).

"an emotional bond" samāgamaḥ . . . hārdaḥ: Literally, "a union of the heart." Ct and Ck gloss, "mental friendship or a friendship of the heart (mānasaṃ sakhyam—so Ck). Cm and Cg gloss, "mental or emotional bond (mānasaḥ saṃbandhaḥ)."

Following 29ab, D5–7,10,11,T,G1,3,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3529*]: "Sugrīva had earlier been banished by his enraged brother Vālin.[1]"

[1]"by his . . . brother Vālin" bhrātrā . . . vālinā: Printed editions of Ct (GPP 6.126.37 and NSP 6.126.37) read the nominative bhrātā, "a brother," for the critical edition's bhrātrā, "by [his] brother." This variant is not recorded in the critical edition, and Ct's commentary reads bhrātrā with the critical edition. However, the editors of GPP mark the form and, in a footnote, provide the reading bhrātrā, which they report as belonging to the texts of Cg and Cr. Still, the reading bhrātā may be the result of a scribal or printing error. No translation consulted renders the nominative form bhrātā.

30. "Once he had slain . . . Vālin . . . in battle" vālinaṃ samare hatvā: Note how Hanumān glosses over the rather controversial slaying of Vālin. See Lefeber 1994, pp. 45–50 (esp. p. 49); and 4.16.25ff. and notes.

"Rāma bestowed upon Sugrīva a kingship of his own" rāmaḥ . . . svarājyaṃ pratyapādayat: Literally, "Rāma [by means of the strength of his own arms] established or conferred his own kingship." The syntax here, with the repetition of the word sva-, "own" (first found in the compound svabāhuvīryeṇa, "through the strength of his own arms" in pāda a; and next in svarājyaṃ, "his own kingdom"), would normally suggest that Rāma is recovering his own kingship. Only two commentators attempt to deal with this reading. Cr, much as we and other translators have done, finesses the problem simply by glossing svarājyam, "his own kingship," with "Sugrīva's lordship (sugrīvādhipatyam)." Cs knows the critical reading as a variant. He confronts the problem of svarājyam by reading the compound to mean "his own [i.e., Sugrīva's] kingdom, i.e., his [Sugrīva's] kingdom, along with his wealth or possessions (svarājyaṃ svena dravyeṇa sahitaṃ ca tadrājyaṃ ca)." The idea is that Rāma gave Sugrīva back his kingdom and all his possessions. As an alternative, Cs proposes that we understand svarājyam to mean "which belonged rightfully to him [Sugrīva] now that the king [Vālin] had died in battle (rājñi mṛte samare svasvāmikam iti svarājyaṃ vā). D5,6,T1,G1,3,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg avoid the issue by reading rāmasya, "of Rāma," for rāmaḥ sva-. This permits Cg to understand Sugrīva to be the unexpressed subject of the gerund hatvā, "having slain," which Cg reads as a causative in which Rāma is the subject of the simplex. Cg explains as follows: "We must supply the name Sugrīva here. The construction thus is that Sugrīva, having caused Vālin to be killed by Rāma's strength of arms, regained his own kingship. (atra sugrīva iti śeṣaḥ. sugrīvo rāmasya bāhuvīryeṇa vālinaṃ hatvā svarājyaṃ pratyapādayat samapādayad iti sambandhaḥ.)"

31. "he would search for the princess" rājaputryās tu mārgaṇam: Literally, "[he promised] a search for the king's daughter."

33. "lost" vipranaṣṭānām: Literally, "destroyed." Ct and Cr explain that the term refers to the time when the monkeys had entered the cave [of Svayaṃprabhā] and did not know the way out (bilapraveśānantaraṃ nirgamamārgam ajānatām). The incident is narrated in the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa (4.49.5–4.52.10). D5,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cm, Ck, and Cg (Ct as a variant) read instead viprakṛṣṭānām, "drawn off or delayed." Ck and Ct gloss, "who had exceeded the time (atītakālānām)." Cg offers two alternate explanations, glossing, first, "having been delayed for a long time (bahukālavilambitānām)," and then "having gone far afield because of having entered the cave of Svayaṃprabhā (svayaṃprabhābile praviṣṭatayā dūraṃ gatānām)." Cm's gloss on this reading is the same as that of Ct and Cr on the critical reading.

34. "about Sītā's dwelling in the abode of Rāvaṇa" vasatiṃ sītāyā rāvaṇālaye: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead vasatīṃ sītāṃ rāvaṇamandire, "that Sītā was living in Rāvaṇa's palace."

35. "Then . . . of my kinsmen" taj jñātināṃ: The identity of the jñātis, or relatives, referred to here is difficult to determine if we read the sequence as a compound tajjñātināṃ, which would then have to mean "of his or her kinsmen," presumably referring to Sītā's kinsmen, but this is contextually implausible. The tat then must be read either as we have done, adverbially in the sense of tataḥ, "thus, then, therefore," or pronominally with the preceding noun, duḥkham, in the sense of "the or that sorrow." Like all translators consulted, we take the term jñātināṃ to be Hanumān's reference to his own kinfolk, that is, the monkeys of the southern search party. The form jñātināṃ has caused some discussion and some disagreement among the commentators. Ct and Cm understand it, as do we, as the genitive plural of the noun jñāti. They observe that the absence of the long ī that would be expected in this form is an irregularity of epic Sanskrit (atra dīrghābhāva ārṣaḥ). Cg, on the other hand, understands the term to have an irregular stem, jñātin, which would then account for the short -i- of jñātināṃ (nakārāntatvam ārṣam). Cr believes that the other commentators are wrong in understanding the term to refer to kinsmen at all. He takes it to be a regular genitive plural of a stem in -in, jñātin meaning "one possessed of jñātam, 'knowledge.'" He explains that Hanumān is dispelling the dejection caused by the knowledge on the part of the monkeys that they would be unable to find Sītā because they now know, from the words of Saṃpāti, that Sītā is in Laṅkā (taj jñātināṃ saṃpātivacanena sītāsthitijñānavatām).

36. Hanumān discovers Sītā in the aśokavana at Sundarakāṇḍa 13ff.

Following verse 36, D5,T1,G3,M1, insert, while D7,11,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct insert after verse 37ab, a passage of one line [3535*]: "And I gave her a splendid ring[1] as a token of recognition."

[1]"a splendid ring" aṅgulīyam anuttamam: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead rāmanāmāṅgulīyakam, "a ring with Rāma's name on it."

37. "having thoroughly questioned" pṛṣṭvā sarvam: Literally, "having questioned about everything."

"a jewel" maṇim: Here, as Ct mentions, the reference is to the cūḍāmaṇi, or hair ornament, that Hanumān takes from Sītā as proof that he has indeed found her. The incident is recounted in the Sundarakāṇḍa at 5.36.52ff.

Following verse 37, D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct insert, while D5,T1,G3,M1 insert following verse 36, a passage of one line [3535*]. See notes to verse 36 above.

39. "delighted" hṛṣṭaḥ: D7,10,11,T1,G2,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead rāmaḥ, "Rāma."

"he . . . regained his will to live" āśaśaṃse sa jīvitam: Literally, "he desired life."

"at the point of death" jīvitāntam anuprāptaḥ: Literally, "who has reached the end of life."

40. "Putting in motion a great undertaking" udyojayiṣyann udyogam: Literally, "beginning to undertake an undertaking." Our interpretation is similar to that of Cg, who glosses, "making an effort (udyogaṃ kurvan)," viewing the seemingly redundant phrase as similar to such phrases as "he cooks a cooking of rice (odanapākaṃ pacatītivat)." Cr understands similarly. Ct and Cm, on the other hand, understand udyogam to mean "setting in motion that by means of which victory is accomplished, that is, an army (udyujyate jayo 'nenety udyogaṃ balaṃ tad yojayiṣyan protsāhayiṣyan)." Translations that follow the text of Ct also appear to follow this interpretation. However, Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 413) seems to understand balam, "army," in its other sense of "strength or energy," rendering, "Faisant appel à son énergie . . ." In this he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 360) and Pagani (1999, p. 1206).

"to the destruction of Laṅkā" laṅkāvadhe: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read kāmam, "willingly," for laṅkā-.

"Agni, the shining god of fire" vibhāvasuḥ: Literally, "the one whose wealth is light or abounding in light." See note to 6.106.1.

"at the end of a cosmic age" lokānte: Literally, "at the end of the world[s]." Cr glosses, "at the time of the destruction of the worlds (bhuvanānāśasamaye)." See 6.62.20 and note.

42. "slew . . . killed . . . slew . . . killed" avadhīt: Literally, "he killed." We have repeated the verb several times for the sake of clarity.

"Rāvaṇa's son Indrajit" rāvaṇasutam: Literally, "Rāvaṇa's son."

43. "received boons" varāṃl lebhe: The reference is to the boons Rāma receives from Indra in sarga 108, whereby the slain monkeys are restored to life and provided with an unending supply of fruits, etc.

Following 43ab, D5–7,10,11,S, insert a passage of two lines [3542*]: ". . . and with Maheśvara, self-existent Brahmā,[1] and Daśaratha. Granted boons by them, the majestic hero[2] met with the seers.[3]"

[1]"with Maheśvara, self-existent Brahmā" maheśvarasvayaṃbhūbhyām: Literally, "with Maheśvara and the self-existent one."

[2]"the majestic hero" śrīmān: Literally, "the majestic one."

[3]"met with the seers" ṛṣibhiś ca samāgataḥ: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read samāgataiḥ for samāgataḥ. In this variant, it is the assembled seers who join the gods in granting boons.

44. "And when he had received those boons" sa tu dattavaraḥ: The context of the verse, with its reference to Rāma's being reunited with the monkeys, suggests that the boons referred to are those whereby Indra restored all the slaughtered monkeys to life and provided for their nourishment, etc. (6.108). Cr, however, the only commentator to remark on this verse, apparently wishing to avoid redundancy with the term dattavaraḥ in his previous verse (3542*), understands the reference to be to Rāma himself having distributed rewards to Vibhīṣaṇa, etc. (dattavaraḥ prāpitavibhīṣaṇādimanorathaḥ).

45. "Nothing can prevent you from seeing" avighnam . . . draṣṭum arhasi: Literally, "you ought to see without obstacle." We follow the commentators who understand avighnam, "without obstacle," adverbially. It is also possible to take it as an adjective modifying Rāma, in the sense of "he who has no further obstacles or challenges," and several translators have rendered accordingly.

"on the auspicious day of the moon's conjunction with the constellation Puṣya" puṣyayogena: Literally, "with the conjunction of Puṣya." This is the name of the eighth lunar asterism, and the moon's conjunction with it is considered an opportune time to undertake solemn events. See 2.2.10 and note; and 2.3.24. Note that Rāma's original consecration was also to have been held on this day. Cg observes that Rāma is remaining on the banks of the Ganges in order to take advantage of the conjunction (puṣyayogalābhārtham adya gaṅgātīre sthitaḥ). Cf. Cm's chronology at note to 6.112.1.

"he is staying there with the sage Bharadvāja" taṃ vasantaṃ munisaṃnidhau: Literally, "him who is dwelling in the presence of the sage." D7,10,11,G1,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read the feminine demonstrative pronoun tām for the critical editions masculine tam, "him." In this variant, the pronoun refers not to Rāma but to the Ganges River.

46. "Then, when Bharata had heard that great and truthful speech of Hanumān, he was delighted." tataḥ sa satyaṃ hanumadvaco mahan niśamya hṛṣṭo bharataḥ: Cg raises the issue of how Bharata could possibly know whether Hanumān's extraordinary narrative could be true. He explains: "He knew it to be true by the noncontradictory mode of expression (aviruddhabhaṅgyā satyatvena jñātam)."

D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead tataḥ sa vākyair madhurair hanūmato niśamya hṛṣṭo bharataḥ, "Then, having heard, Bharata was delighted by the sweet words of Hanumān." This variant lacks an object for the gerund niśamya, "having heard," and therefore Cr has provided one in the form of the compound rāmavṛttāntam, "the news or account of Rāma."

"Cupping his hands in reverence" kṛtāñjaliḥ: Literally, "making the añjali [gesture]." Since it would apparently be infra dig for Prince Bharata to display this sign of obeisance to a mere messenger like Hanumān, Ck and Ct believe we should add the phrase "having remembered Rāma (rāmaṃ smṛtveti śeṣaḥ)."

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 115

1. "those words that filled him with joy" paramānandam: Literally, "supreme joy or having supreme joy." The expression is elliptical and the commentators flesh it out by glossing, "causing the greatest joy," and adding the word "speech." (paramānandakaram. vaca iti śeṣaḥ—so Cg.)

"who was similarly delighted" hṛṣṭam: Literally, "delighted." Like the majority of translators consulted, we read the participle as an adjective modifying śatrughnam in pāda d. It could also be read adverbially with ājñāpayāmāsa, "he gave instructions," in pāda c, yielding the sense "he happily or delightedly ordered." This may be the interpretation of Dutt (1893, p. 1537), who renders, "delighted," and takes it to modify Bharata instead of Śatrughna. He may also be under the influence of Gorresio's text, which, with a few manuscripts, reads the nominative singular hṛṣṭaḥ. This would unambiguously modify Bharata.

2. "pious" śucayaḥ: The adjective could also be rendered as "purified, upright, etc."

"all the divinities and the shrines of the city" daivatāni ca sarvāṇi caityāni nagarasya ca: The commentators generally understand the term daivata to refer to household divinities (kuladevatā) and the city shrines to be the common or public places of worship (sādhāraṇadevatāyatanāni—so Ck, Cm, and Ct). Cg glosses, "temples or shrines at crossroads (catuṣpathamaṇḍapān)." Cf. 6.6.3; 6.7.13; and notes.

Following verse 2, D5–7,10,11,S, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert, while Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D8,9,12,13 continue after 3546*, a passage of two lines [3547*]: "Bards, learned in hymns of praise and the purāṇas, all the minstrels,[1] all the skilled musicians, and the courtesans in groups[2] [let them go forth]."

[1]"Bards . . . minstrels" sūtāḥ . . . vaitālikāḥ: Cg distinguishes these two groups as "those whose occupation is praising (stutiśīlāḥ)" and "panegyrists or heralds (bandinaḥ)." According to Cm, Ct and Ck, a sūta is a special type of bard, while a vaitālika is one who recites or praises the royal lineages. (sūtalakṣaṇarūpaṃ sūtaviśeṣaṇam. vaitālikā vaṃśāvalīkīrtakāḥ.) Cr agrees with Ct and Ck on the meaning of vaitālika but is silent on the term sūta. Sūtas are the offspring of vaiśya fathers by kshatriya wives (ManuSm 10.17). Cf. ManuSm 10.11, where a child from the daughter of a brahman by a kshatriya is also called sūta.

[2]"in groups" saṃghaśaḥ: Ś,Ñ,V1,B,D7,8,10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead sarvaśaḥ, "all."

All manuscripts, with the exception of V3 and D1–4, collated for the critical edition and all printed editions consulted read these lines with some slight variation. In light of this, it is difficult to say why the critical editors relegated them to the apparatus.

3. "the king's wives" rājadārāḥ: The commentators agree that the reference is to the wives of the late king Daśaratha.

"the soldiers" sainyāḥ: Ck and Ct gloss, "salaried domestic (lit., inside) guards from the royal palace (rājabhavanād bhṛtimanto 'bhyantarāḥ)."

"the army troops and their womenfolk" senāgaṇāṅganāḥ: Ck and Ct understand the compound to mean "groups of different types of soldiers, such as foresters, and so on, and groups of women (āṭavikāntasenābhedās tathāṅganāgaṇāḥ)."

"the hare-marked moon" śasi-: Literally, "the one possessing a hare or rabbit."

Following 3ab, D5–7,9–11,S insert a passage of one line [3548*]: "as well as the brahmans, together with the kshatriyas, the leaders of the caste guilds, and the general population.[1]"

[1]"the general population" gaṇāḥ: Literally, "hosts, groups, multitudes." It appears that this list is intended to reflect the four varṇas, or social classes, of brahmanical India.

M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read 3548* following 8cd. See note to verse 8 below.

4. "powerful" vīryavān: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead bhāgaśaḥ, "by divisions."

"conscripted laborers" viṣṭīḥ: According to Cg, Crā, and Ck, these are unpaid laborers (bhṛtiṃ vinā karmakarān—so Cg). Presumably the reference is to corvée, or conscripted labor, rather than slaves, strictly speaking. Cm, Cr, and Ct, however, gloss, "wage laborers (bhṛtikarān)." Cv understands, "an army of craftsmen (śilpasenā)." Compare Ayodhyākāṇḍa 74, where Bharata orders the construction of a royal highway along which he means to escort Rāma back from the forest.

5. "Level the road—depressions, rough places, as well as smooth areas" samīkuruta nimnāni viṣamāṇi samāni ca: Literally, "Make even the low ones, the uneven ones, and the even ones." Some commentators understand viṣamāṇi, "uneven [places]," to refer to elevations or bumps. The idea, in any case, is that all irregularities of the road are to be smoothed out.

"sparing only the roadside shrines" sthānāni ca nirasyantām: Literally, "let those places be rejected." The phrase is rather ambiguous, and we tentatively follow the gloss of Cr, who takes sthāna in its sense of "a holy spot or shrine," in which case, as Cr further suggests, one must take the verb nir √as in the sense of √tyaj, "to leave aside, spare." This interpretation has been followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1889), while the phrase appears to have been largely ignored by most of the other translators consulted. D12 has a minor variant, sthūlāni, "bulky, large," for sthānāni. This reading is noted as a variant by Cm, who glosses it as "significantly raised spots (atyunnata-pradeśān)." GPP (1969, vol. 3, p. 2706, n. 4) ascribes this variant to Cg, although it is not recorded in VSP (6.130.5), KK (6.130.5), or the apparatus of the latter. Cg makes no reference to this term or to any of its variants. It appears, however, that this reading has informed the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 361), who renders, "and break down the boulders."

"from Nandigrāma onward" nandigrāmād itaḥ param: Literally, "further on from Nandigrāma." Several of the commentaries and most of the translators consulted add the phrase, "up to Ayodhyā (yāvad ayodhyām)."

6. "some men . . . others" anye: Literally, "others."

7. "in our splendid city" puravarottame: Literally, "in the foremost of excellent cities." The reference is clearly to Ayodhyā. Cr takes this compound quite literally, glossing, "the city of Ayodhyā, which is superior even to such excellent cities as Vārāṇasī, etc. (puravarebhyo vārāṇasyādibhyo 'py uttamam ayodhyāpuram)."

"starting at daybreak" sūryasyodayanaṃ prati: Literally, "to the rising of the sun." We understand the expression as does Cg, who glosses, "starting at sunrise (sūrya-syodayanam ārabhya)." Cg offers, as an alternative gloss, "until sunrise or during sunrise (yāvat sūryasyodayanaṃ vā)." This second interpretation appears to be followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1889), which translates, "[decorate the dwellings] . . . till sunrise." We believe it more likely that the houses would be adorned during the daylight hours.

8. "Let hundreds of men strew the broad royal highway with garlands, festoons, and loose blossoms and with fragrant powders in five colors." sragdāmamuktapuṣpaiś ca sugandhaiḥ pañcavarṇakaiḥ / rājamārgam asaṃbādhaṃ kirantu śataśo narāḥ //: Our translation is based on the arrangement of verses in the critical edition and in the printed editions of Cg (VSP 6.130.8 and KK 6.130.8). Printed texts of Ct and Cr break up the verses differently so that our 7cd forms a single verse with 8ab (GPP, NSP 6.127.9).

Given that arrangement, Cr understands the flowers and pigments mentioned in 8ab to be the articles with which the houses mentioned in 7c are to be decorated rather than, as in our and Cg's reading, the roads. Since the reading of Ct and Cr leaves no articles of adornment with which to strew the roads, Cr takes the verb kirantu, "let them scatter or strew," of 8d in the sense of "let them stand (tiṣṭhantu)." He then understands our line 8cd to stand alone, with the meaning "let hundreds of men stand there so as to keep the royal highway uncrowded (śataśo narā rājamārgam asaṃbādhaṃ kartum iti śeṣaḥ kirantu tiṣṭhantv ardhaṃ pṛthak)." Cr clearly understands that Bharata is ordering security guards to line the road to keep it free for the royal procession. In this he has been followed by translations that render the text of Ct. We take the compound sragdāmamuktapuṣpaiḥ as a dvandva. Cg, although still understanding a dvandva, takes the compound slightly differently, understanding sragdāma- as a tatpuruṣa in the sense of "lines of garlands," and muktapuṣpaiḥ as "red and blue lotuses etc., not strung together (asūtrabaddhapadmakuvalayādibhiḥ)." Cg understands this compound to refer to part of the ornamentation of the houses rather than of the roads. We understand with Cg that the phrase sugandhaiḥ pañcavarṇakaiḥ, "with fragrant powders in five colors," refers to fragrant powdered substances with which the roads are to be spread (sugandhaiḥ pañcavarṇakaiḥ pañcavidhavarṇadravyacūrṇai rājamārgaṃ kirantu). D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read suvarṇaiḥ, "of lovely color or gold," for sugandhaiḥ, "fragrant."

Following verse 8, M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read 3ab followed by 3548*. See notes to verse 3 above. Following 3548*, M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read a passage of two lines [3556*]; see below. Among the translators consulted, Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 362) alone renders this sequence of lines and verses.

Following verse 8, D7,10,11,M1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of one line [3555*]: "Then, when they had heard the orders of Śatrughna, they were filled with delight."

Following 3555*, D7,10,11,M1 insert; Ś,D1,2,4,8,12,M2 insert after verse 3; B3,D3 continue after 3549*; D5,T,G insert after verse 8; D6,9,M5 insert after second occurrence of 3; and M3 continues after 3548* a passage of two lines [3556*]: "Dhṛṣṭi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Siddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla, and Sumantra went forth." For the sequence of these verses in Cg, see above. Compare 1.7.2, where an identical list of Daśaratha's ministers is given.

9. "Given their orders . . . swiftly" tvarayā yuktāḥ: Literally, "enjoined or employed, [they] swiftly." D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead turagākrāntāḥ, "riding horses," which would modify narāḥ, "men." D5,6,T,G2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm read instead turagākrāntaiḥ, "drawn by horses, which modifies rathaiḥ, "chariots."

"adorned with gold" śātakumbhavibhūṣitaiḥ: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead sadhvajaiḥ suvibhūṣitaiḥ, "well-adorned [and] with flags."

Following verse 9, Ś,Ñ,V,B,D7,8,10–13,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of three lines [3557*]: "That very illustrious[1] hero was then surrounded[2] with thousands of foot soldiers bearing flags and holding javelins, broadswords, and nooses[3] in their hands and with thousands of magnificent horses, including some that were truly superb.[4]" V3,D7,10,11,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators transpose lines 1 and 2. Both Cv and Crā spend considerable effort establishing that this is the correct sequence of verses, ascribing the variant order to scribal error.

[1]"very illustrious" mahāyaśāḥ: D1–3,7,10–12,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead patākinām, "[and those] bearing banners."

[2]"That . . . hero was then surrounded" vīraḥ parivṛtas tadā: D7,10,11,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead vīrāḥ parivṛtā yayuḥ, "Those heroes went [forth] surrounded." Presumably the heroes in question are the functionaries listed in 3556*. In the critical edition, the singular vīraḥ would presumably refer to Śatrughna or to Bharata himself.

[3]"nooses" -pāśa-: M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead -prāsa-, "darts."

[4]"including some that were truly superb" mukhyatarānvitaiḥ: Literally, "accompanied by even more outstanding ones." M2(3?) and the texts and printed editions of Cg read -nara-, "men," for -tara-, "more," lending the compound the sense "accompanied by excellent men."

10. Following verse 10, M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gita Press (6.127.16) insert a passage of one line [3559*]: "together with Kaikeyī, they all reached Nandigrāma." This line is rendered only in the translations of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 362) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1889). Cg clearly relegates Kaikeyī to a subordinate position, including her among the lesser consorts of the late king, who follow the principal queens. He claims that Kaikeyī goes forth later [than Kausalyā and Sumitrā], since, in his disdain for her, Bharata had not invited her. Therefore, he argues, she joins the party only when they have all arrived at Nandigrāma (atra bharatenopekṣayānāhūtatvāt paścān nirgatya kaikeyyā nandigrāmaprāptikāle sāhityam ucyate). Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 362) includes her in the position of honor accorded to Kausalyā and Sumitrā. He translates, "with Kausalyā, Sumitrā, and Kaikeyi at their head." Note that the critical text and the text of Ct make no mention of Kaikeyī at this point.

11. D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read verses 11–12 following verse 16, while M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read verse 12 before verse 11.

"The thundering of the horses' hooves" aśvānāṃ khuraśabdena: Literally, "by the hoof-sound of the horses."

"seemed to shake the very earth" saṃcacāleva medinī: Literally, "the earth shook, as it were."

Following verse 11, D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct insert a passage of one line [3560*]: "And with the trumpeting of the elephants and the din of conches and battle drums . . ."

13–16. "set forth to meet Rāma" pratyudyayau tadā rāmam: Literally, "he went forth to Rāma."

"together with his counselors . . . by his ministers" mantribhiḥ . . . sacivaiḥ saha: Cg attempts to distinguish these two nearly synonymous terms by defining the former as Vasiṣṭha, etc. (vasiṣṭhādibhiḥ), i.e., purohitas and other priests, and the latter as Sumantra, etc. (sumantrādibhiḥ), his charioteer and counselors. See note to 6.2.14.

"by panegyrists" bandibhiḥ: See note to 3547* above, following verse 2.

"his noble brother's sandals" āryapādau: Literally, "the feet of the noble one." The context makes it clear that Cg and Cr are correct in understanding that the reference is to the famous sandals of Rāma, which Bharata had installed on the throne as tokens of Rāma's sovereignty (rāmapāduke). See 6.112.4 and notes.

"a white umbrella . . . and a pair of white yak-tail fly whisks adorned with gold" pāṇḍuraṃ chatram . . . śukle ca vālavyajane . . . hemabhūṣite: The white umbrella and the yak-tail fly whisk are universal symbols of royalty in India and Indianized southern Asia. Cg notes that the compound hemabhūṣite, "adorned with gold," means that the whisks were embellished with golden handles (hemadaṇḍabhūṣite). See 6.47.13–14; 6.60.14; and notes. See, too, 6.116.25–26 and notes, where these insignia of royalty are held around Rāma.

17. "Looking about him" samīkṣya: We understand with Cg that the gerund indicates that Bharata is looking all around him to spot Rāma's arrival (samantād rāmāgamanaṃ nirīkṣya). Cr understands that Bharata is looking at Hanumān (pavanātmajaṃ samīkṣyovāca).

"I hope you have not fallen prey to the typical flightiness of monkeys" kaccin na khalu kāpeyī sevyate calacittatā: Literally, "Surely, it is not that the simian fickle-mindedness is being resorted to?" The fickle-mindedness of monkeys is a favorite theme of the poet. Compare 4.2.16; 5.8.50; 5.36.31; 5.53.8,12; and 6.45.9.

Following verse 17, D5–7,9–11,T,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3562*]: "Nor are any monkeys, who can take on any form at will, to be seen."

18. "informing him of the reason" arthaṃ vijñāpayann eva: We agree with Cg and Cm, who cite the lexicon of Vaijayantī in support of their taking the polysemic term artha in its sense of hetu, "reason." The idea is that Hanumān is explaining the reason for the delay [in Rāma's arrival] (vilambahetum). D10,11,T1, and the texts and printed editions of Ck and Ct read instead arthyam, "factual, truthful," which Ck, Ct, and Cr gloss as "not deviating from the [true] matter (arthānapetam)," i.e., the truth.

19. "They have reached" prāpya: Literally, "having reached." The verse is quite elliptical, lacking both a finite verb and a clear subject. It also appears to construe poorly with the following verse. The idea seems to be that the monkeys have delayed Rāma's arrival as they are reveling in the fruits and honey provided by the overlapping boons of Indra and Bharadvāja (Indra's at 6.108.12; Bharadvāja's at 6.112.15,17–18). Cg suggests that we add both a subject and a finite verb: "the monkeys are taking delight (vānarāḥ hṛṣyantīti śeṣaḥ)." Cf. verse 22 below. Ct, Ck, and Cr attempt to construe this verse with the two following verses (see notes below), although these efforts are not, in our opinion, successful.

20. "For such . . . was the boon granted to Rāma" tasya caiṣa varo dattaḥ: Literally, "the boon given of [to] him." The reference is to the boon Indra gave to Rāma on behalf of the monkeys that, wherever they went, the trees would always be in fruit and flower (6.108.12). Ck, Ct, and Cr understand that the pronoun tasya refers to Bharadvāja and that the boon was the one given to that sage by Indra, who was pleased with his austerities (Ck, Ct). (tasya ceti. bharadvājasya cety arthaḥ. vāsaveneti. tattapaḥprasāditenety arthaḥ.) Cr understands that Indra's boon is what gives Bharadvāja the power to produce all the desirable things needed to offer hospitality, etc. (vāsavenaiṣa sarvasāmagrīsampādakaśaktiviśeṣo dattaḥ). See 6.108.12.

"And this was the hospitality . . . that was offered" tad ātithyaṃ kṛtam: Cg understands that the fact that the trees are flowing with honey constitutes the hospitality provided by Bharadvāja. Cg sees this as distinct from the provision of unseasonal fruits, which he regards as the boon of Indra (sasainyasya rāmasya vāsavenaiṣa varo datto 'kālaphalitvavaro dattas tathā sarvaguṇānvitam ātithyaṃ madhusravatvarūpaṃ bharadvājena kṛtam). Ck and Ct understand that the hospitality is offered by Bharadvāja to both Rāma and Bharata along with their respective armies (sasainyasya tava rāmasya ca bharadvājena sarvaguṇānvitam ātithyaṃ kṛtam). Cr breaks up the sequence tadātithyam as tadā, "then," + ātithyam, "hospitality," and understands the reference to be to the elaborate hospitality afforded by Bharadvāja to Bharata and his host "then" [i.e., fourteen years earlier], when Bharata had passed that way [in his failed effort to bring Rāma back prematurely from exile] (tadā bhavadgamanasamaye sasainyasya tavātithyaṃ kṛtam). See Ayodhyākāṇḍa 85.

21. "of the . . . forest-dwelling monkeys" vanaukasām: Literally, "of those inhabitants of the forest."

"must be crossing" tarati: Literally, "it [the army] is crossing."

22. "over toward the Vālukinī River" vālukinīṃ prati: Literally, "toward the Vālukinī." See 6.113.24 and notes. D7,10,11,G2,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead sālavanam, yielding the sense "over toward the forest of sāla trees."

"the leaping monkeys must be crashing" lolayanti plavaṃgamāḥ: Literally, "the leaping ones shake or agitate."

23. "created by the mind of Brahmā" manasā brahmanirmitam: Literally, "fashioned by Brahmā with mind." This phrase has caused some concern among the commentators because it appears to contradict earlier statements (cf. 6.109.25) that the Puṣpaka had been built by Viśvakarman. Ct argues that the flying palace was made by Brahmā, that is, Viśvakarman, who is referred to in this way because of his being equal to Brahmā as a creator (brahmaṇā sraṣṭṛtvasāmyād viśvakarmaṇā nirmitam). This interpretation is represented in the translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1891). Cm, on the other hand, explains that the phrase means that the Puṣpaka was made through the mental effort of Viśvakarman on Brahmā's behalf (viśvakarmaṇā brahmārthaṃ nirmitam). Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 363) appears to be somewhat under the influence of Cm in rendering, "created by an act of will under Brahmā's inspiration."

No specific mention appears to be made of Viśvakarman fashioning the Puṣpakavimāna in the critical text of the Sundarakaṇḍa (although Sundarakāṇḍa App. I, No. 2, line 6, specifically identifies Viśvakarman as the creator of the vehicle). At 7.15.293*, line 4, we are told that it was fashioned by Brahmā. Cf. 5.7.10. See Jhala's critical note concerning this (1966, p. 479). See 5.6.4 and note; and 5.7.11. See verse 29 and notes below. See, too, 6.109.22–27 and notes, where Viśvakarman is explicitly said to have fashioned the Puṣpakavimāna. MBh 3.158.35 attributes the manufacture of the flying palace to Viśvakarman. See Wilson 1864–1877, vol. 3, p. 22. According to MatsyaP 160.12, Śiva was the architect of the Puṣpakavimāna.

24. Through the grace of Kubera, bestower of wealth" dhanadasya prasādena: Literally, "through the grace of Dhanada." The phrase is awkward here since at no point does the poem indicate any agency on the part of Kubera in the gift or loan of his flying palace to Rāma. Since, however, the Puṣpaka belongs by rights to Dhanada, perhaps we are simply being reminded here of its true legal ownership, even though the palace was handed over to Rāma by Vibhīṣaṇa (6.109.9–10). See notes to 6.109.9, 3333*; and notes to 6.109.21, where the commentators discuss the issue of the vehicle's ownership. The commentators struggle with the phrase here. According to Ct, the palace belongs to Dhanada through the grace of Brahmā (etat . . . vimānaṃ prasādena brahmaṇaḥ prasādena dhanadasya bhavatīti śeṣaḥ). Cg has the same idea, and both of these commentators support their interpretation by citing the Sundarakāṇḍa verse in which it is said that, as a result of his extreme austerity, Kubera obtained the Puṣpakavimāna from Grandfather Brahmā (5.7.11). This idea informs the translations of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1891), Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 363), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 363), Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 446), and Pagani (1999, p. 1208). Only Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 265) and Dutt (1893, pp. 1538–39) understand the phrase literally. On Kubera, see, too, 6.4.16; 6.7.3; 6.22.10; 6.69.26; 6.82.20; 6.92.15; 6.98.12–13; 6.110.23; 6.115.49; and notes. See notes to verses 49–50 below.

"great Rāma" mahātmanā: Literally, "by the great one."

Following 24ab, D6,7,10,11,T2,3,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3565*]: "Rāma's vehicle, the flying palace that resembles the newly risen sun . . ."

25. "the lord of the rākṣasas" rākṣasendraḥ: D6,7,9–11,T2,3,G1,2,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead rākṣasaś ca, "and the rākṣasa."

26. "reaching to the heavens" divam aspṛśat: Literally, "it touched the sky."

"as the women, children, youths, and elderly cried out, 'There's Rāma!'" strībālayuvavṛddhānāṃ rāmo 'yam iti kīrtite: Literally, "In the saying of the women, children, youths, and elderly, 'that is Rāma!'"

27. "Rāma . . . in his flying palace" taṃ vimānastham: Literally, "him, standing in the flying palace."

28. "with a fitting welcome" svāgatena yathārthena: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead yathārthenārghyapādyādyaiḥ, "in the correct fashion with a welcome offering, water to wash [his] feet, etc."

29. "which Brahmā created with his mind" manasā brahmaṇā sṛṣṭe: See verse 23 above and notes.

"the elder brother of Lakṣmaṇa" lakṣmaṇāgrajaḥ: D7,10,11,G2,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead bharatāgrajaḥ, "the elder brother of Bharata."

"as a second Indra, wielder of the vajra" vajrapāṇir ivāparaḥ: Literally, "like another one with a vajra in [his] hand." D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read ivāmaraḥ for ivāparaḥ, lending the phrase the sense "like the immortal wielder of the vajra."

30. "humbly" praṇataḥ: B3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead prayataḥ, "restrained, controlled."

"who stood atop his flying palace" vimānāgragatam: Literally, "gone to the top of the vimāna." The compound can also be taken to mean "standing in that foremost of vimānas." Our translation is influenced by the passage at 6.107.9, where Daśaratha's spirit is described as vimānaśikharasthasya, "of [him] standing at the peak or summit of a vimāna," as well as by the force of the simile. Cf. verse 48 below and note.

"like the sun, maker of day, on the summit of Mount Meru" merustham iva bhāskaram: Literally, "like the day maker located on Meru."

Following verse 30, D5–7,9–11,S insert, while Ś,Ñ,B4,D8,12 insert after verse 41, a passage of two lines. The first line = 50ab and the second is recorded as 3571* (= VSP 6.130.39 = KK 6.130.36; Gita Press 6.127.39; GPP 6.127.38; NSP 6.127.38; Gorresio 6.111.47; and Lahore 6.108.47): "Then, with the permission of Rāma, that unexcelled and enormously swift flying palace [50ab], yoked to haṃsas,[1] descended to the earth.[3571*]" According to Cv and Crā, this śloka (50ab–3571*) belongs here but has been placed elsewhere in some manuscripts through the negligence of scribes. (meghastham [v.l. for merustham] iva bhāskaram ity asyānantaraṃ tato rāmābhyanujñātam ityādi śloko draṣṭavyaḥ. anyatra tu lekhakadoṣād upanyastaḥ—so Cv.)

[1]"yoked to haṃsas" haṃsayuktam: See 6.110.23 and notes.

31. "Invited on board the flying palace" āropito vimānam: Literally, "made to ascend the flying palace." We agree with Cr, who glosses, "caused to mount by Rāma (rāmeṇārohitaḥ)."

32. "raising up Bharata . . . him . . . him" taṃ samutthāpya . . . bharatam: Literally, "having caused him to stand up . . . Bharata." Since, as part of his obeisance and respectful greeting, Bharata would have prostrated himself or at least stooped to touch Rāma's feet, Rāma bids him to rise.

"whom he had not seen in such a long time" cirasyākṣipathaṃ gatam: Literally, "[who was] gone to the range of his sight after a long time."

33. "After warmly greeting Lakṣmaṇa . . . respectfully saluted Vaidehī: tato lakṣmaṇam āsādya vaidehīṃ ca . . . / . . . abhyavādayata: Literally, "then having met Lakṣmaṇa and Vaidehī, he made respectful salutation." The syntax of the verse is somewhat ambiguous, as it permits, but does not require, us to take Lakṣmaṇa alone as the object of āsādya, "having reached or met," and Vaidehī alone as the object of abhyavādayata, "he saluted respectfully or paid obeisance to." The precise analysis of the syntax is of considerable importance to the commentators, because it brings into sharp focus the critical issues of hierarchy and deference that lie at the core of the social vision of the Rāmāyaṇa and the culture of which it forms so important an element. The issue, put most simply, is that the commentators and, we are forced to assume, the poet himself do not want to envisage a scenario in which Bharata would bow or make respectful salutation to his younger brother Lakṣmaṇa. Because the simplest way to read the verse, i.e., that Bharata approaches and respectfully salutes both Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā, would suggest just such an inversion, the commentators go to great lengths either to deny that this is what is happening or to find grounds for rationalizing it. The following are some of the interpretive strategies that they employ. Ck, Ct, and Cm, whom we more or less follow in our translation, take the two verbal forms separately, interpreting āsādya in the sense of "honoring Lakṣmaṇa, who was praising him, with an embrace, etc. (vandamānaṃ lakṣmaṇaṃ pariṣvañgādinā saṃbhāvya—so Ck, Ct)." In this reading, Vaidehī alone is the object of Bharata's obeisance, to which, as the wife of his elder brother Rāma, she is fully entitled. Ct and Cm justify this interpretation on the grounds of the evidence from the Rāmāyaṇa and the Padmapurāṇa proving that Bharata is older than Lakṣmana. As an alternative, Cm and Ct propose that one can regard Lakṣmaṇa in some sense as "older" than Bharata and therefore deserving of his obeisance. Two arguments are put forward here. The first, attributed to "others," is that, although Lakṣmaṇa is junior to Bharata in chronological age, he has gained greater stature through his obedience to his own elder [Rāma] and therefore is older, as it were, in virtue (pare tu yady api lakṣmaṇo bharatāt kaniṣṭho vayasā . . . tathāpi jyeṣṭhānuvartanena svāpekṣayādhikaguṇatvena svavyavahāreṇa jyeṣṭhānuvṛttir evaṃ kartavyeti). The second argument is that since Lakṣmaṇa is produced from a portion of the divine pāyasa that had first been given to Kausalyā, he can be considered Bharata's elder (kiṃca kausalyāyai prathamaṃ dattapāyasāṃśajatvāl lakṣmaṇasya jyeṣṭhatvam). On the division of the pāyasa, see 1.15.24–27 and notes.

Cv states the case very simply, noting that, although Bharata meets or greets both Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa equally, his gesture of homage (abhivādanam) is reserved for Sītā alone. Otherwise, he argues, this passage would represent a contradiction to those in which it was earlier stated that Bharata is the elder of the two. (āsādanaṃ lakṣmaṇavaidehyoḥ samānam. abhivādanaṃ tu vaidehyā eva veditavyam. anyathā pūrvāparoktaṃ bharatasya jyaiṣṭhyavacanaṃ viruddhaṃ syāt.)

Cg's understanding is similar to the first interpretation of Ct and Cm. He glosses lakṣmaṇam āsādya as "honoring with an embrace Lakṣmaṇa, who had made obeisance [to him] (lakṣmaṇam āsādya kṛtaṃ namaskāraṃ lakṣmaṇam āliṅganena saṃbhāvya)." This, he notes, is because Lakṣmaṇa is his junior (idaṃ ca lakṣmaṇasya kaniṣṭhatvāt). Cg observes, however, that some authorities believe that, in the presence of Rāma, Bharata would have prohibited Lakṣmaṇa's expected gesture of obeisance (lakṣmaṇena cikīrṣito namaskāro rāmasannidhau bharatena pratiṣedhita iti cāhuḥ). Cg makes an additional observation in this connection, noting that the conjunction ca, "and," after the name Vaidehī indicates that Bharata's homage to Rāma is included in that which he shows toward Sītā (cakāro rāmanamaskāraṃ samuccinoti). Cg offers a strictly chronological order of the births of Bharata and Lakṣmaṇa, dismissing all discussion of the distribution of pāyasa, the order of marriage, and so on. Finally, Cg indicates that by the sequential nature of Bharata's greetings, first to Lakṣmaṇa and then to Sītā [against the expected order of precedence], we are to understand that, although Sītā is in Rāma's presence, she is standing somewhat apart from him with Tārā and the other women from Kiṣkindhā (sītā tārādibhiḥ saha rāmasamīpa eva kiṃcid anyatra sthitety avagamyate).

Cr offers an ingenious interpretation that is based on his reading of the verb abhyavādayat (v.l. for abhyavādayata) as both a causative and a simplex, the first taking for its object Lakṣmaṇa and the second Vaidehī. The idea here is that Bharata causes Lakṣmaṇa to honor him, while Bharata himself offers obeisance to Sītā. (bharato lakṣmaṇam āsādyābhyavādayal lakṣmaṇena praṇāmam akārayat. hetumati ṇic. atha vaidehīm āsādyābhyavādayad avandat. atra svarthe ṇic.)

Cs also addresses this issue at some length. Contributing a novel solution to the problem, he argues that one can take the verb abhyavādayat in its sense of formally declaring one's identity. Thus, according to him, Bharata simply meets or greets Lakṣmaṇa and, upon meeting Sītā, he formally announces his name. (lakṣmaṇam āsādya prāpya. sītāṃ cāsādya nāma ca bharato 'haṃ bho abhivādayāmīti nāmābravīt.) Cs then enters into a discussion of the various other commentarial theories mentioned above. He more or less accepts the first argument of Ct and Cm, while noting and rejecting, as overly clever manipulations, those arguments that attempt to prove Lakṣmaṇa's seniority with respect to Bharata. See 6.61.24 and note.

34. Following verse 34, D5–7,10,11,T1,2,G1–3,M, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3575*]: "And Bharata[1] also embraced Suṣeṇa, Nala, Gavākṣa, Gandhamādana, Śarabha, and Panasa."

[1]"Bharata" bharataḥ: D6,7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead paritaḥ, "[who were] all around him."

35. "took on human forms" kṛtvā mānuṣaṃ rūpam: Literally, "having made a human form." Why the monkeys change their form is not made clear, unless it is to put them on the same footing as Hanumān, who had taken on human form earlier at 6.113.18 (see note ad loc.). See, too, 6.113.40–42 and 6.114.3 and notes. Perhaps, as in Hanumān's case, the monkeys feel that a human form is more appropriate for the sophisticated, urbane Kosalan capital. This may be what Cr has in mind when he observes that the monkeys effect this transformation in Ayodhyā with its immortal or divine appearance (amṛtarūpāyodhyāyām). Compare 6.116.29, where the monkeys are said to take on human form once again.

Following verse 35, D5–7,10,11,T,G,M1,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert; Ś,Ñ,V,B1,3,4,D2,3,8,12,13 continue after 3590*; B2 inserts after 32cd (second occurrence); D1,4,9 further continue after 32cd; and M2 continues after 3591* a passage of four lines [3576*]: "Then Bharata, that prince of immense blazing energy and foremost among those who adhere to righteousness, embraced that bull among monkeys Sugrīva and said, 'Sugrīva, you are a fifth brother to the four of us. A true friend is made by affection, while injury is the hallmark of an enemy.[1]' "

[1]"A true friend is made by affection, while injury is the hallmark of an enemy." sauhṛdāj jāyate mitram apakāro 'rilakṣaṇam: Literally, "a friend is produced out of affection, injury is a characteristic of an enemy." For sauhṛdāt, "from affection," Ck and Ct gloss, " 'from affection' means 'from assistance preceded by that [affection]' (sauhṛdāt tatpūrvakopakārāt)." Cr glosses sauhṛdāt as "from assistance free from any deceit (kāpaṭyarahitopakarāt)" and glosses mitram as "one who is the same as a brother (bhrātur na bhinnam iti tātparyam)." Cr defines "the hallmark of an enemy (arilakṣaṇam)" as "that which gives rise to enmity (riputvasaṃpādakam ity arthaḥ)."

As this passage is known to all manuscripts and printed editions consulted, its omission from the critical text is highly questionable.

36. "graciously spoke these words" sāntvayan vākyam abravīt: Literally, "consoling or ingratiating, he spoke [this] speech." D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead sāntvavākyam athābravīt, "[he] now spoke consoling or ingratiating words."

"Thank heavens" diṣṭyā: Literally, "By fate or good fortune." Cr glosses, "through a rise of good fortune (bhāgyodayena)."

"through your assistance" tvayā sahāyena: Literally, "by you an ally or helper."

"has been accomplished" kṛtam: Cr hastens to remind us that the credit belongs to Rāma [not Vibhīṣaṇa]. He observes, "We must supply, 'by Rāma' (rāmeṇeti śeṣaḥ)."

37. "afterward, humbly worshiped" paścād vavande vinayānvitaḥ: Literally, "afterward, filled with humility, he worshiped." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead vīro vinayād abhyavādayat, "the hero respectfully saluted out of humility." In addition, Ś,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read vinayād abhyavādayat for vavande vinayānvitaḥ, "humbly worshiped." This lends the phrase the meaning: "afterward, he respectfully saluted out of humility."

38. "so disconsolate" viṣaṇṇām: Ś2, Ñ,V,B,D1–3,7,9–13,M1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead vivarṇām, "without color or pale."

"soothing her heart" mano mātuḥ prasādayan: Literally, "propitiating or reconciling [his] mother's heart or mind." Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, understands that Rāma is begging forgiveness for not having obeyed her instructions [not to go into exile—2.18.18–25] and is urging her now to give up her mental suffering (mano mātuḥ prasādayann iti pūrvaṃ tvadvākyaṃ nāśrauṣam iti tvayā manastāpo na kārya ity evam prasannām akarod ity arthaḥ)." Ś,Ñ,V,B1,2,4,D7,8,11–13,T2,M1,2,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read praharṣayan, "gladdening," for prasādayan, "soothing."

39. "and illustrious Kaikeyī" kaikeyīṃ ca yaśasvinīm: Ck, Cm, and Ct believe that Kaikeyī is accorded the epithet "illustrious" here because it was through her obduracy or hardheartedness [in insisting on Rāma's exile] that the king [Daśaratha] obtained salvation from hell, while the gods and the brahman-seers attained supreme felicity and Rāma himself attained glory. (asyā manodārḍhyena rājā narakāt tāritaḥ. devā brahmarṣayaś ca paramaṃ sukhaṃ prāptāḥ. rāmasya ca yaśo jātam ata eṣa yaśasviny eva—so Ct.) Cg similarly ascribes her illustriousness, that is, the fact that she is to be universally praised, to her having been the root cause of the conquest of Rāvaṇa (yaśasvinīm. rāvaṇajayasya tanmūlatvāt sarvaiḥ praśasyamānām ity arthaḥ). Crā similarly notes that the seer [Vālmīki] uses the adjective yaśasvinī of Kaikeyī because she was the cause of the accomplishment of the mission of the gods (kaikeyyā yaśasvinīm iti viśeṣaṇaṃ devakāryahetubhūtatvād ṛṣiḥ prāyuṅkta). See, too, 6.107.40; 6.109.17–19; and notes. Cf. notes to 6.107.4–6.

"he approached" upāgamat: Cr and Cg remind us that not only did Rāma approach his mothers and household priest but he paid them respectful homage (gatvābhyavādayat). Cg reminds us that we must construe the gerund abhivādya, "having respectfully saluted," of 39a here as well.

"all his other mothers" mātṝḥ . . . sarvāḥ: Literally, "all mothers." In addition to his three named queens, Daśaratha elsewhere in the poem is said to have had "a host of wives (patnīgaṇa)" (see 1.17.2 and note) or "350 wives" (see 2.31.10 and 2.34.32).

"the household priest" purohitam: The reference here would be to Vasiṣṭha (so Cg). Cv understands the term generically to stand for all the family priests, starting with Vasiṣṭha (vasiṣṭhādayaḥ).

41. "full-blown" ākośāni: The word is not attested in the available dictionaries, but the context makes it clear that it must be synonymous with the variant reading of the southern commentators, which we have followed. Compare v.l. akośāni, "not closed or in bud," the reading of Ñ2,B1,D7, and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.111.46) and Lahore (6.108.47). D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead vyākośāni, which Ct and Cr gloss as vikasitāni, "matured, full-blown."

43. "Here, your majesty, is your well-guarded kingdom, which I have now given back" etat te rakṣitaṃ rājan rājyaṃ niryātitaṃ mayā: D7,10,11,G2,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead etat te sakalaṃ rājyaṃ nyāsaṃ niryātitaṃ mayā, lending the line the following meaning: "Here is your entire kingdom, which I held in trust and have given back."

45. "the granary" koṣṭhāgāram: Literally, "the granary chambers." The term can also be taken generically to mean "storehouse."

"the city" puram: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead gṛham, "the house, household."

46. "they shed tears" mumucuḥ . . . bāṣpam: Why are they crying? Cg, evidently keeping in mind that both Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa have been responsible for the deaths of their own respective brothers at Rāma's hands, observes: "They wept because they had never seen such brotherly conduct among their own kinsmen (svakulīneṣv etādṛsabhrātṛvṛttyadarśanād iti bhāvaḥ)." Cm concentrates on the tears of Vibhīṣaṇa, which he sees as arising both from the rākṣasa's joy at discovering that there are such brothers as these and from grief at the perversity of his own brother (vibhīṣaṇaś ca bāṣpaṃ mumocedṛśā api bhrātaraḥ santīty ānandena svasya tadvaiparītyajaśokena ca).

48. "from atop the flying palace" vimānāgrāt: Literally, "from the top of the vimāna." Compare verse 30 and note.

49. "the god Kubera Vaiśravaṇa" vaiśravaṇaṃ devam: Literally, "the god Vaiśravaṇa." See verse 24 and notes above.

50. "the abode of Kubera, bestower of wealth" dhanadālayam: Literally, "the abode of the giver of wealth." Kubera is said to reside in the Himalayan city of Alakā (cf. Meghadūta 7). See verse 24 and notes above.

Following verse 50, Ś,Ñ1,V,B,D6–8,10–12,T2,3,G2, KK (in brackets = 6.130.59), and the texts and printed editions of Ct insert a passage of two lines [3588*]: "And thus the unsurpassed and heavenly flying palace Puṣpaka, a car for all seasons,[1] swiftly returned to Kubera, bestower of wealth, who was delighted by Rāma's words.[2]"

[1]"unsurpassed . . . a car for all seasons" sarvartukam anuttamam: Literally, "unsurpassed . . . belonging to all seasons." The connotation of the term sarvartukam is not entirely clear to us in the present context, nor do the commentators or translators offer any help as none of them shares this reading. Perhaps the adjective is somehow related to the vimāna's name, Puṣpaka, "Flower." See 6.30.8; 6.108.12; 6.115.20; and notes. D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead saṃgṛhītaṃ tu rakṣasā, "which was taken by [that] rākṣasa."

[2]"swiftly returned to Kubera, bestower of wealth, who was delighted by Rāma's words" rāmavākyapramuditaṃ javena dhanadaṃ yayau: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read agamad dhanadaṃ vegād rāmavākyapracoditam, "it returned swiftly to the bestower of wealth, urged by Rāma's words," for line 2.

Following 3588* or verse 50, many northern manuscripts, including the printed texts of Gorresio (6.111.48–49 = lines 1–4) and Lahore (6.108.61–63), include a passage [3589*] in which Kubera actually sends the Puṣpakavimāna back to Rāma to serve him, and Rāma receives it with reverence.

51. "Just as Śakra, lord of the immortal gods, might grasp the feet of Bṛhaspati" bṛhaspateḥ śakra ivāmarādhipaḥ: Literally, "like Śakra, lord of the immortals, of Bṛhaspati." See 6.7.9–10; 6.11.42; 6.40.28; and notes.

"mighty Rāghava" rāghavaḥ . . . vīryavān: B1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read the name rāghavaḥ twice, yielding an awkward repetition.

"his household priest, who was his equal" purohitasyātmasamasya: We concur with Cm and Cr, who identify the purohita as Vasiṣṭha, the ancestral purohita of the House of Ikṣvāku. Ct, who notes the critical reading as a variant and cites Cm for his interpretation of the alternative reading, explains that the reference is to Vasiṣṭha, who is equal to Lord Rāma because of his knowledge of the supreme truth. (ātmasamasyeti pāṭhāntaram. brahmajñatvād iti bhāvaḥ vasiṣṭhasyety artha iti tīrthaḥ.) D10,11,T2,3,M1,5, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read -sakhasya, "friend," for -samasya, "equal," yielding the sense "his household priest [and] friend." Ck and Ct, who prefer this variant, are loath to see the venerable seer Vasiṣṭha described as the friend of his junior, Rāma. They understand the reference to be to Vasiṣṭha's son, Suyajña, who would be more of a contemporary to Rāma (vasiṣṭhaputrasya suyajñasyety arthaḥ).

"they sat down together, each on a separate, splendid seat" pṛthag āsane śubhe sahaiva tenopaviveśa: Literally, "[he] sat together [with him] separately on a splendid seat." We follow Cv, who understands that the two men sit together in the sense of being seated at the same time but on separate seats. (ekasmin kāla upaveśaḥ. svasmin svasminn āsana ekadaivopaviviśuḥ.) This idea of separate seats is represented only in the translations of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1894) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 365).

The meter is vaṃśasthavila.

Sarga 116

1. "Cupping his hands to his forehead in reverence" śirasy añjalim ādhāya: Literally, "placing folded hands on the head." Dutt (1893, p. 1541) for some reason understands that Bharata is placing Kaikeyī's palms on his head. He translates, "having placed her palms on his head, Bharata, the enhancer of Kaikeyī's joy . . ."

"increaser of Kaikeyī's joy" kaikeyīnandivardhanaḥ: Cg takes his variant of this epithet, kaikeyyānandavardhanaḥ, to indicate that Kaikeyī is now reconciled to Rāma's ascension to the throne. We are to infer this, he continues, from the pleased expression on Kaikeyī's face, etc., when she hears Bharata's words (kaikeyyānandavardhana ity anena bharatavacane kaikeyīsantoṣo mukhaprasādādināvagamyata iti dyotyate).

"his elder brother" jyeṣṭham: Literally, "the elder one."

2. "You showed my mother respect" pūjitā māmikā mātā: Literally, "my mother was honored." As the commentators point out, Kaikeyī was gratified or respected by Rāma's acquiescing to her demands that he abandon the kingship and accept exile to the forest (taduktavanavāsānuṣṭhānāt—so Ct).

3. "this . . . burden" bhāram: As Ct points out, the burden Bharata is referring to is that of the kingship (rājyasya bhāram).

"set down" nyastām: Literally, "deposited." The word has been carefully chosen because of its resonance with the idea that Bharata accepted the kingship of Kosala only as a nyāsa, "a deposit or a trust." See 2.107.14; 6.115.43; and notes.

"solitary" ekākinā: As Ct and Cr indicate, the term refers to a bullock who lacks an equal partner to share the burden of the yoke (svasamānadhūrvahabalīvardāntararahitena). The figure derives from the fact that draft bullocks in India are generally yoked in pairs and suggests, perhaps, that Bharata would serve as a partner in governance with Rāma.

4. "I think that any threat facing the kingdom, if unaddressed, would be as difficult to remedy as it would be to repair a dike that, breached by a tremendous flood of water, has sprung a leak." vārivegena mahatā bhinnaḥ setur iva kṣaran / durbandhanam idaṃ manye rājyacchidram asaṃvṛtam //: The metaphor underlying this verse is a complex one and does not lend itself readily to a translation that is both literal and intelligible. A more or less literal rendering would be as follows: "I regard this uncovered or unplugged gap that is the kingdom to be difficult to bind up, just like a leaking dike breached by great water pressure." The idea is that Bharata is once again indicating his incapacity to manage the kingdom. Ct and Cr understand the term rājyacchidram as a tatpuruṣa in the sense of "the defects or liabilities of the kingdom, such as theft (rājyacchidraṃ corādyupadravaḥ)." This interpretation finds expression in the translation of Dutt (1893, p. 1541), who renders, "this kingdom infested with thieves." Cg explains the verse as follows: "Just as it is impossible to repair a leaking dike that has been breached by a tremendous force of water without a plug in the form of a mass of branches and clumps of straw to check the flow of water, so is it impossible to govern a kingdom that has many different threats to its integrity in the absence of preventive measures in the form of kingly virtues, such as the king's ability to keep his counsel secret, etc. (yathā mahatā vārivegena bhinnaḥ kṣaran setur vārivegāhatinirodhakatṛṇapūlaśākhāpuñjādisaṃvaraṇaṃ vinā na baddhuṃ śakyate. evaṃ bahuvidhacchidraṃ rājyam api mantragopanādirājaguṇāvaraṇaṃ vinā pālayituṃ [v.l. pālituṃ—so VSP, KK] na śakyam iti bhāvaḥ.)" According to this interpretation, Bharata is pleading that he lacks the qualities to be an effective monarch. The translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1894) appears to read the compound rājyachidram as a samastarūpaka, or compound metaphor based on an appositional karmadhāraya, rendering, "I believe this vulnerable point in the form of administration is difficult to protect, (particularly) when exposed, (even) as a dam that is leaking when breached by a strong onrush of water."

5. "the path you have blazed" tava mārgam: Literally, "your path, road." Ct glosses, "skill in protecting that which needs to be protected (rakṣaṇīyarakṣaṇacāturyam)."

6–7. As Bharata makes clear in verse 8, the two verses constitute a kind of extended metaphor or parable for Rāma. The commentators attempt to clarify its meaning. The general idea, according to them, is that Rāma, having been sired by Daśaratha for the purpose of ruling the ancestral kingdom and possessing all the qualifications for doing so, would be, should he fail to ascend the throne, like the magnificent but sterile tree described in the parable. Cg goes into some detail in an effort to show how each element in the tree metaphor applies to Rāma. He says that both the tree and Rāma were planted by Daśaratha and stand in the relationship of the subject and object of comparison, respectively. The planting of the tree's seed is comparable to Daśaratha's performance of the putreṣṭi sacrifice (Bālakāṇḍa 14), and the tree's mighty trunk is analogous to the collectivity of Rāma's brothers. Its many branches stand for the host of Rāma's allies, such as Sugrīva; its blossoms, his auspicious virtues; and its failure to bear fruit, his failure to rule. (atra vṛkṣarāmayor āropayitṛdaśarathayoś copamānopameyabhāvaḥ. bījāvāpasya putreṣṭyādeś ca mahāskandhasya sabhrātṛkatvasya ca praśākha- vattvasya sugrīvādimitragaṇasya ca puṣpāṇāṃ kalyāṇaguṇānāṃ ca rājyākaraṇasya phalābhāvasya ca sāmyaṃ dyotyate.)

8. "devoted" bhaktān: Ñ1,V,B2–4,D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead bhartā, "lord, master."

9. "the whole world" jagat . . . sarvataḥ: Literally, "the world from all sides." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read the vocative rāghava, "O Rāghava," for sarvataḥ, "from all sides."

10. "You should fall asleep and" śeṣva ca: B4,T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead the vocative rāghava, "O Rāghava." Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 365) alone renders this variant.

"the sounds of musical ensembles" tūryasaṃghātanirghoṣaiḥ: Literally, "with the sounds of groups of musical instruments." Cf. 6.24.25; 6.90.27–28; and notes. See note to verse 34 below.

11. "As long as the wheel of heavenly bodies shall turn and as long as the earth, bearer of wealth, shall endure" yāvad āvartate cakraṃ yāvatī ca vasuṃdharā: Literally, "as long as the wheel turns, so long as [is] the bearer of wealth." The commentators generally agree that the term cakram, "wheel," refers to the wheel or orb of the celestial bodies (jyotiścakram). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 419), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 366), understands the elliptical phrase to refer to the disc of the sun. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 268) similarly renders, "la ruota del carro del sole." See notes to 6.3.16; 6.93.13; and 6.98.2.

The commentators differ, however, in how they interpret the two occurrences of the lexeme yāvat (adverb) / yāvatī (adjective), taking it variously in its temporal and/or spatial senses, "as long as or as far as." Our translation follows the interpretation of Cv, Cg, and Cm, who take both terms in a temporal sense, glossing, for yāvatī, "as long as there is stability or endurance (yāvatkālasthitiḥ—so Cg)." Ct and Cm take the adverb yāvat to express the limit or the end of time (anena kālāvadhir ucyate—so Ct). Ct and Cr take the adjective yāvatī in a spatial sense as indicating the limits of the land or the earth (deśāvadhir ucyate—so Ct). Cr alone takes the adverb yāvat in a spatial sense, understanding it to mean "to the extent of the territory over which the circle of heavenly bodies revolves (jyotiścakraṃ yāvad āvartate yāvad deśaṃ bhramati)." Translations render variously.

"may you exercise lordship over all in this world" iha sarvasya svāmitvam abhivartaya: Literally, "may you carry out or set in motion lordship of all here." D6,7,10,11,G1,2,M1, and the texts of Cr and Ct read lokasya, "of the world," for sarvasya, "of all."

12. "as he sat on his splendid seat" niṣasādāsane śubhe: Literally, "he sat or sat down on a splendid seat." We agree with Cr that the subject of the verb "he sat (niṣasāda)" is Rāma. However, since Rāma was depicted as sitting down on a splendid seat in the final verse of the preceding sarga (6.115.51) and has not had occasion to leave that seat until this point, we have rendered in such a way as to indicate that he remains seated. This issue seems to have troubled Cv and Cg as well. They attempt to solve the problem by arguing that it is Bharata who now takes his seat. Cv and Cg may also be influenced by the fact that it is Bharata and Lakṣmaṇa upon whom the barbers wait first in the following verses. Cv argues that Bharata is the subject of the verb on the grounds that it was already stated that Rāma took his seat earlier (1.115.51) (atra bharataḥ kartā rāmopaveśasya pūrvam evoktatvāt). Cg concurs, suggesting that we add the name Bharata.

13. "barbers" śmaśruvardhakāḥ: Literally, "beard-cutters."

"with a gentle touch" sukhahastāḥ: Literally, "having pleasant hands. "Cr glosses, "those whose hand gives pleasure (sukhaḥ sukhapradaḥ hasto yeṣām)."

"quick at their work" suśīghrāḥ: Literally, "very fast." Cr glosses, "getting their work done quickly (śīghraṃ kriyānispādakāḥ)." Cg takes the adjective to mean that the barbers are capable of working quickly enough so that they finish before the auspicious moment for the consecration (abhiṣekamuhūrtātilaṅghanaṃ vinā śīghraṃ kartuṃ samarthāḥ).

"attended upon Rāghava" rāghavaṃ paryupāsata: Cg, the only commentator to remark on this reading, understands the verb to mean that the barbers cut or shaved the beards (śmaśrūṇy avardhanta). It is not entirely clear exactly which figure or figures are indicated by the epithet rāghavam, "Rāghava." Ct, Ck, Cv, Cs, and Cm are silent on the subject, while Cr merely repeats the term from the text. Cg, however, understands that the singular term here designates both Bharata and Lakṣmaṇa (rāghavam iti bharatalakṣmaṇayoḥ pradarśanātham). Among the translators consulted, most, like us, use the nonspecific term "Rāghava." Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1895) and Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 268), however, both render "Rāma." This seems improbable, however, since it appears that Rāma permits himself to be bathed and groomed only after his brothers and allies have been served (see verses 14–15 below). D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read paryavārayan, "they surrounded or encircled," for paryupāsata, "they attended upon."

14–15. "Bharata . . . Lakṣmaṇa . . . Sugrīva . . . Vibhīṣaṇa had all bathed before him" pūrvam . . . bharate snāte lakṣmaṇe ca . . . / sugrīve . . . ca . . . vibhīṣaṇe: Cg explains why each of the figures named must bathe before Rāma. Bharata, he notes, must do so because of Rāma's vow at 6.109.6 that he will not bathe until Bharata does. In the cases of Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa, Cg notes that they have not bathed since they first left their respective cities. Cg gives no explanation for Lakṣmaṇa's priority in bathing. Ct and Cg call our attention to the omission of Śatrughna's name from the list. Ct offers two possible explanations for this. The first is that Śatrughna is too preoccupied with arranging everybody else's bath (to bathe himself). The second is that we are to understand that Śatrughna is included among the group of bathers by upalakṣaṇa, or metonymy. (atra bharatalakṣmaṇayoḥ snānādyabhidhānakāle śatrughnasya tadanabhidhānaṃ tu snānakārayitṛtvāt. upalakṣaṇaṃ vā.) Cg also offers two explanations, the first of which is similar to Ct's first explanation. His second is somewhat more interesting. He argues, in his characteristically logical way, that [unlike Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and Bharata] Śatrughna has nowhere been stated to have taken any sort of ascetic vow [and so would not be in any urgent need of a bath] (pūrvaṃ vratagrahaṇānuktes ca). On the other hand, Cg is mindful that other authorities cite the Saṃkṣiptarāmāyaṇa verse (1.1.70), which states that, at the end of his period of banishment, Rāma put off the matted locks of an ascetic, together with his brothers, among whom, presumably, Śatrughna would be included.

"Rāma gave up his matted locks and bathed" viśodhitajaṭaḥ snātaḥ: Literally, "he whose matted locks were cleansed or purified, bathed." Although, as Cg notes, the phrase literally refers to washing of the hair (jaṭāśodhanaṃ śuddhakeśīkaraṇam), we must understand that, as indicated at 1.1.70, he is completely removing his matted locks and resuming the groomed hair of an aristocrat. See 1.1.70; 6.109.6; 6.112.4; and notes. All northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.112.19) and Lahore (6.109.20) add or substitute a passage of two lines [3602*], which glosses or clarifies the southern reading by making it clear that Rāma actually cuts off his matted locks.

"he stood there, blazing with splendor" tasthau tatra śriyā jvalan: Cg notes that the splendor in question is that of Rāma's ornaments (alaṃkāraśriyā). He glosses the adverb tatra, "there," as siṃhāsane, "on a throne (lit., lion's seat)."

16. "mighty and splendid Śatrughna, increaser of the House of Ikṣvāku" vīryavān / . . . lakṣmīvān ikṣvākukulavardhanaḥ: Literally, "the one possessed of valor, the one possessed of Lakṣmī or splendor, the increaser of the House of Ikṣvāku." Like all the commentators consulted, except Cr, we take all three adjectives to refer to Śatrughna, since it was he who was put in charge of the bathing and grooming (see verse 13 above). Cr, however, understands the reference to be to Bharata, under whose authority Śatrughna is acting. Most of the translations consulted that actually specify a proper name here agree with us. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 420) understands the adjective vīryavān, "mighty, heroic," to refer to Bharata, whom he sees as supervising the toilet of Rāma, while taking the remaining adjectives to refer to Śatrughna, whom he understands to be responsible for Lakṣmaṇa's grooming. In this interesting interpretation, he is followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 366).

17. "themselves" ātmanā: Literally, "by one's self." As the commentators indicate, the term suggests that the women themselves dressed and ornamented Sītā rather than having it done by maidservants (ātmanaiva na sairandhrīhastenety arthaḥ—so Ct, Cm).

18. "all the wives of the Rāghavas" rāghavapatnīnāṃ sarvāsām: The precise reference is not clear. It could be either to the wives of Daśaratha, who are mentioned in the previous verse, in which case the translation would be "all the wives of Rāghava (i.e., Daśaratha)." Since these women are widows, however, it would seem inappropriate for them to be adorned and dressed in finery. See ManuSm 9.200 and S. Goldman 2000b. We therefore believe that the reference is to the wives of Rāma's three younger brothers, that is, Māṇḍavī, Ūrmilā, and Śrutakīrtī, to whom the brothers are wedded in the Bālakāṇḍa (1.70.20; 1.71.5–6; and 1.72.18–20). This understanding is shared by Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 269), the only translator consulted to have this reading. He renders, "tutte le donne dei Raghuidi." B1,D1–4,6,7,9–11,S, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read vānara-, "monkeys," for "rāghava-," giving the phrase the sense "all the wives of the monkeys." The reference is to the female monkeys who serve as Sītā's traveling companions from Kiṣkindhā to Ayodhyā (see note to 6.111.14, App. I, No. 72).

19. "richly adorned throughout" sarvāṅgaśobhanam: Literally, "having adornment in every part."

"and brought it up" abhicakrāma: Literally, "he came near or approached."

20. "that . . . chariot standing before him" rathaṃ sthitam: Literally, "the chariot [which] stood or was located [there]." Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B2,3,D8,12,13,T1,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gorresio (6.112.23) and Lahore (6.108.25) read instead rathottamam, "that best of chariots or that splendid chariot." This reading is rendered in the translations of Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 269) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 366).

"blazing like the orb of the sun" arkamaṇḍalasaṃkāśam: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead agnyarkāmalasaṃkāśam: "having a bright or spotless appearance like the sun or fire."

"truly valorous" satyaparākramaḥ: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead parapuraṃjayaḥ, "the conqueror of enemy citadels."

Following verse 20, Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D6–8,10–12,S, and all printed editions of the southern recension insert a passage of four lines [3605*]: "Shining with a splendor like that of great Indra,[1] Sugrīva and Hanumān accompanied him,[2] after having bathed and put on garments that were like those worn in heaven[3] and splendid earrings.[1–2] And Sugrīva's wives and Sītā, eager to see the city, went along as well,[4] covered with splendid ornaments[5] and wearing splendid earrings.[3–4]"

[1]"Shining with a splendor like that of great Indra" mahendrasadṛśadyutī: Literally, "having a splendor like that of great Indra (Mahendra)."

[2]"accompanied him" jagmatuḥ: Literally, "those two went."

[3]"put on garments that were like those worn in heaven" divyanibhair vastraiḥ: Literally, "with garments that were like heavenly ones."

[4]"went along as well" yayuḥ: Literally, "they went."

[5]"covered with splendid ornaments" varābharaṇasampannāḥ: Literally, "endowed with excellent ornaments." D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead sarvābharaṇajuṣṭāś ca, "furnished with every ornament."

21. "Meanwhile . . . who had remained in Ayodhyā" ayodhyāyāṃ tu . . . ye: Literally, "but [those] who [were] in Ayodhyā." There appears to be a slight discontinuity in the narrative here, since, when last we heard of the ministers, they had gone from Nandigrāma to meet Rāma (6.115.13–16). The commentators try to address this gap in various ways. Ct adds the words "at this juncture (tasminn antara ityādi), while Cg supplies the gerund "having gone or returned (gatveti śeṣaḥ)."

D7,10,11, and the texts of Cr and Ct read ca . . . ca, "and . . . and," for tu . . . ye, "but . . . [those] who." These variants lend the line a slightly different sense: "And in Ayodhyā the ministers of King Daśaratha . . ."

"placing the household priest at their head" purohitaṃ puraskṛtya: The commentators identify the household priest here as Vasiṣṭha, whom we last heard of at the end of sarga 115 (see 6.115.51 and notes) seated on a splendid throne next to Rāma in Nandigrāma. Presumably, like the other ministers, he has since returned to the city to plan the consecration.

"purposefully took counsel together" mantrayāmāsur arthavat: We understand with Cr that the term arthavat, "purposefully," is to be read adverbially (arthavat yathā bhavati tathā). Ct amplifies somewhat, glossing, "in such a way that it has an excellent purpose. The meaning is 'they conducted a full deliberation appropriate to the consecration of Rāma.' (arthavat prayojanottamavat. rāmābhiṣekopayuktam aśeṣavicāraṃ cakrur ity arthaḥ.)" Cg is most specific, understanding that they conferred with regard to what was necessary for the purpose of putting together the auspicious articles to be used in the consecration (abhiṣekopayogimaṅgaladravyasaṃpādanārtham evaṃ kartavyam iti mantrayāmāsuḥ).

Following verse 21, Ś,D6–8,10–13,S insert a passage of one line [3607*]: "And Aśoka, Vijaya, and Sumantra,[1] [who had] met, [took counsel]."

[1]"and Sumantra, [who had] met" sumantraś caiva saṃgātāḥ: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read instead siddhārthaś ca samāhitāḥ, "and Siddhārtha, [all who were] focused or assembled." The substitution of Siddhārtha for Sumantra in this minor variant is explained, perhaps, by the fact that Sumantra, as royal charioteer, has brought the chariot out to Rāma in Nandigrāma. It should be noted, however, that verse 25 below shows Bharata actually taking the reins on the journey back to Ayodhyā. See verses 19 and 26, and notes.

22–23. "with regard to the prosperity of Rāma and the maintenance of the city" rāmavṛddhyarthaṃ vṛttyarthaṃ nagarasya ca: Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 420), apparently taking the term vṛtti in its less common sense of "respectful treatment," somehow construes the two phrases to mean "sur les honneurs que la ville devait rendre á Rāma." In this odd reading he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 366) and Pagani (1999, p. 1211). G3,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Cm and Gita Press read ṛddhyartham, "for the sake of prosperity," for vṛttyartham, "for the sake of maintenance." This variant is rendered in the translation of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1896) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 366).

"Preceding all your actions with auspicious rites" mañgalapūrvakam: Literally, "preceded or accompanied by auspicious rites or benedictions."

"you must do everything necessary" sarvam . . . kartum arhatha . . . yad yat: Literally, "you must do everything whatever." Since, in the critical edition and the texts and printed editions of Cv, Cg, and Cm, the ministers address their instructions to the purohita Vasiṣṭha, Cv, Cg, and Cm are obliged to note that the second person plural arhatha is a plural of respect (pūjāyāṃ bahuvacanam).

"Having thus instructed the household priest, all the ministers" iti te mantriṇaḥ sarve saṃdiśya tu purohitam: B2,D10–12, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read the nominative singular ca (tu—D12) purohitaḥ, "and the purohita," for the accusative singular tu purohitam. This adds the purohita Vasiṣṭha to the group of ministers who are giving instructions. In this variant, there is no expressed object for the gerund saṃdiśya, "having instructed." Ct therefore indicates that the instructions are issued to servants (kartum arhatheti bhṛtyān pratyuktiḥ). Translations that follow the texts and printed editions of Ct render this variant, while Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1896) and Dutt (1893, p. 1542) incorporate Ct's suggestion.

24. "blameless . . . Indra" indra ivānaghaḥ: The syntax and the prosody of the verse seem to favor construing the adjective anagha, "without sin or blame," with Indra, even though this is not an epithet commonly found in connection with, or even particularly appropriate for, Indra. Nonetheless, it can be read grammatically to refer to Rāma, and some translators have done so.

"mounting . . . mounted" āsthāya: Literally, "having mounted."

"yoked to tawny steeds" hariyuktam: The immensely polysemic term hari must refer here to the characteristic tawny steeds that draw Indra's chariot and lend him his epithet harivāhana, "he whose mounts are tawny steeds." Cg glosses, "yoked to horses characterized by a tawny color (haritavarṇayuktāśvayuktam)." See 6.78.27; 6.90.5–7; and 6.95.15 and notes.

25. "the umbrella" chatram: This is the white umbrella, the insignia of royalty that Bharata has brought with him. See 6.115.13–16.

"a fan" vyajanam: This is merely an article of practical use, used to cool Rāma, and is not to be confused with the ceremonial yak-tail fans mentioned in the following verse. Cg glosses, "made of a palm frond (tālavṛndamayam)."

26. "Sugrīva, the lord of the monkeys, held . . . Vibhīṣaṇa . . . held" sugrīvo vānareśvaraḥ . . . vibhīṣaṇaḥ: Literally, "Sugrīva, lord of the monkeys . . . Vibhīṣaṇa." The verse in the critical edition has no verbs whatsoever and, to construe it, one must borrow, as it were, either the verb jagrāha, "he held" (from 25a), or ādade, "he took up" (from 25b). D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read jagṛhe paritaḥ sthitaḥ, "[he] who stood held toward [Rāma a yak-tail fly whisk]," for sugrīvo vānareśvaraḥ, "Sugrīva, the lord of the monkeys." D6,G2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Cg read jagrāha puratas, "he, [who stood] before, held [a yak-tail fly whisk]," for sugrīvo vānareśvaraḥ, "Sugrīva, the lord of the monkeys." In the absence of the mention of Sugrīva, the texts of the southern commentators assign to Lakṣmaṇa the dual task of fanning Rāma with the vyajana (fan) at the same time that he holds the yak-tail fly whisk. Cg explains this by claiming that, in keeping with his earlier vow to do everything for Rāma (GPP 2.30.27 [CE 2.28.10]), Lakṣmaṇa has quickly taken up both objects (ahaṃ sarvaṃ kariṣyāmīti tvaryobhayagrahaṇam).

6.116.26 = 6.116.59cd, ef.

28. "the lord of the monkeys" vānareśvaraḥ: D7,10,11,13,T1,G,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead plavagarṣabhaḥ, "the bull among leaping monkeys."

29. "who had taken on human form" mānuṣaṃ vigrahaṃ kṛtvā: Literally, "having made a human body." See 6.115.35 and note, where all the monkeys are said to have taken on human form.

30. "cheers" -praṇādaiḥ: Literally, "sounds." We agree with the commentators who take this term to refer to "the sound made by the people (manuṣyaśabdaḥ—so Cr)" and "the people's shouts of joy (janaharṣapraṇādaiḥ—so Cg)." Ct, in addition, cites a passage from the Padmapurāṇa in which it is said that, as Rāma rode along, a confused uproar (kālahadhvaniḥ), consisting of admiring epithets, was heaped upon Rāma by the admiring populace. Cv glosses, "shrill sounds (tāradhvaniḥ)."

"the thundering of war drums" dundubhīnāṃ ca nisvanaiḥ: Literally, "with the sounds of the dundubhīs."

31. "the people" te: Literally, "they." Ct and Cr gloss, "the people of the city (nāgarāḥ)."

32. "Congratulating Rāma Kākutstha and . . . by him" vardhayitvā kākutsthaṃ rāmeṇa: Literally, "having congratulated Kākutstha . . . by Rāma." Cf. 2.17.5, where the term vardhayitvā is also used in the sense of congratulation.

33. "his subjects" prakṛtibhiḥ: In the context, we agree with Cg, who takes the term in its sense of "subjects, citizens, general public (paurajanaiḥ)" rather than in its technical sense of "the elements of state."

34. "by musicians" tūryaiḥ: Literally, "by musical instruments." Given the context, we are inclined to agree with Ct and Cg, who gloss, "players of musical instruments (tūryavādakaiḥ)." This is probably an instance of the type of upalakṣaṇa (metonymy) illustrated by the example śaktayaḥ praviśanti, that is, "the spears [i.e., spearmen] enter." See note to verse 10 above.

"holding cymbals and svastikas in their hands" tālasvastikapāṇibhiḥ: Literally, "with cymbals and svastikas in their hands." Given the context, we are forced to agree with Ct and Cg in taking the term svastika here as a reference to some type of musical instrument, even though there appears to be no lexical support for this interpretation. Ct glosses, "something like a cymbal that can be held in the palm of the hand (tālavad eva karataladhāryaḥ)." Cg glosses, simply, "a type of musical instrument (vādyaviśeṣaḥ)."

This interpretation is followed in the translations of Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1897), Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 367), and, apparently, Dutt (1893, p. 1543). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 421) simply renders, "de gens qui portaient des Svastikas sur la paume des leurs mains." In this he has been followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 367) and Pagani (1999, p. 1212). Pagani (p. 1677) has a note to this passage in which she makes it clear that she understands the term svastika in its sense of an auspicious sign or symbol. This reading of the compound, however, is forced. Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 270), whose edition reads tathā svastikapāṇibhiḥ (6.112.37), understands svastika in its sense of "auspicious object," translating, "oggeti benaugurosi."

"by delighted people" muditaiḥ: Literally, "by delighted ones."

35. "bearing unhusked, golden rice" akṣataṃ jātarūpaṃ ca: Following the commentators, we understand that this auspicious substance is being carried by the people. Akṣata, or unhusked rice, is a requisite article of worship in many Hindu ceremonies. We follow Ct and Cg, who take the term jātarūpa, which normally means "gold," adjectivally here in the sense of "golden." They suggest that the grain has been colored with turmeric and other coloring agents (saṃpāditaharidrādivarṇaviśeṣa ity arthaḥ—so Ct). This interpretation has also been followed by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1897) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 367). The other translators understand that gold itself is being carried as well as grain. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 421), however, believes that the road was covered with roasted grains, gold, and cows. See 6.100.16 and note.

36. "of Hanumān, the son of Anila" anilātmaje: Literally, "in reference to the son of Anila."

"the people of Ayodhyā" ayodhyāpuravāsinaḥ: Literally, "the inhabitants of the city of Ayodhyā."

Following 36c, T1,G3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of one line [3617*]: "[the deeds of the monkeys,] the strength of the rākṣasas, and the alliance with Vibhīṣaṇa." This line is rendered only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 367).

Following verse 36, Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D6–11,13,T2,3,G1,2,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert a passage of one line [3618*]: "the work of the monkeys and the strength of the rākṣasas . . ."

Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1897) reads an additional line (6.128.40), unnoted by the critical apparatus, which appears to be a repetition of 36d followed by 3617* and 3618*.

37. "all of this" etat: Literally, "this."

38. "the ancestral home of the Ikṣvākus" aikṣvākādhyuṣitam: Literally, "inhabited by Aikṣvākas."

39. D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators transpose verses 39 and 40.

"of his great father, he entered it and respectfully saluted" pituḥ . . . praviśya ca mahātmanaḥ . . . abhyavādayat: Literally, "having entered . . . of his great father . . . he respectfully saluted." D6,7,10,11,G1,2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct, as well as the commentaries of Ct, Cr and Cv, read the causative gerund praveśya, "having had or having made enter," for praviśya, "having entered."

T2,3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cm and Cg read for abhyavādayat, the gerund cābhivādya ca, "and having respectfully saluted," while D11 and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read the second person singular imperative abhivādaya, "you must respectfully salute," for the critical reading.

The commentators who share the causative variant praveśya explain it variously in the absence of any explicit subject of the simplex. Ct understands that we must take the word mahātmanaḥ, "great," which in the critical reading must be read as a genitive singular agreeing with pituḥ, "father," as an accusative plural referring to Sugrīva, etc., and serving as the object of the causative gerund praveśya, yielding the meaning "having caused those great ones [i.e., Sugrīva, etc.] to enter." For Ct, the second person singular imperative abhivādaya takes Bharata as its subject. He further understands that we must supply as the object of the causative and the subject of the simplex "the monkeys (vānarair iti śeṣaḥ)." In other words, Ct's understanding of the situation is that Rāma instructs Bharata that, once he reaches the palace, he should instruct the important figures, such as Sugrīva, etc., to enter the palace. Bharata should then have the monkeys pay homage to the queens. Ct supports this reading by quoting a Padmapurāṇa passage in which Rāma is said to cause Hanumān, Vibhīṣaṇa, and Sugrīva to enter his house in order to purify it, as it were, with the pollen of the lotus feet of his devotees. This interpretation raises the question of why Rāma apparently fails to immediately do homage to his mothers before getting the monkeys to do so. Ct goes on to argue that Rāma had, in fact, done this earlier but in private and not [as in the case of the monkeys] publicly. (pitur bhavanam āsādya tatra mahātmanaḥ sugrīvādīn mukhyān praveśya kausalyādyā abhivādaya. vānarair iti śeṣaḥ. iti bharatam abravīd iti saṃbandhaḥ. tatra pūrvaṃ sugrīvādipraveśyabījam uktaṃ pādme svaṃ śrīmadbhavanaṃ rāmo bhaktapādābjareṇubhiḥ / śuddhikartumanā rājā hanūmantam akalmaṣam // vibhīṣaṇaṃ ca sugrīvaṃ gṛhaṃ prāveśayat tadā / ity āpātatas tu kausalyādipraṇāmakaraṇaṃ phalam iti bhāti. āntaraṃ mukhyaṃ tu pādmoktaṃ bodhyam. pūrvaṃ tu rāmeṇaikānta eva tadvandanaṃ kṛtam. na tu sarvasamakṣam iti gamyate.) This reading and interpretation are rendered only in the translations of Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 421) and Pagani (1999, p. 1212). Cr's understanding is similar to Ct's. Cv, who reads only praveśya in common with Ct, understands that the subject of the simplex and object of the causative is "the queens," while the subject of the causative must be Rāma himself. The idea here is that Rāma makes the queens enter the palace and there respectfully salutes them (kausalyāṃ ca sumitrāṃ ca kaikeyīṃ ca praveśyābhivādayann uvāceti pūrveṇa saṃbandhaḥ).

40. D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators transpose verses 39 and 40.

"with these significant words" arthopahitayā vācā: Literally, "with speech that was possessed of meaning."

41. "Place at . . . disposal" nivedaya: Literally, "offer, present, entrust to the care of." The idea is that Rāma is making this specific palace available as a guesthouse for Sugrīva.

"the one adjacent to the aśoka grove" sāśokavanikam: Literally, "the one with the aśoka grove." Perhaps Rāma specifies this particular palace in order to appeal to his guest's arboreal proclivities. Cg glosses, "the one that has a park attached to the inner apartments (antaḥpurodyānasahitam)." This interpretation is represented in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 367), who renders, "with its inner garden of aśoka trees." It is interesting to note here that Rāvaṇa's palace in Laṅkā also had an aśoka grove attached to its inner apartments. No doubt Cg has this in mind, but such a grove may, indeed, have been a standard amenity of the women's quarters.

"lapis" -vaidūrya-: Literally, "lapis lazuli or cat's-eye beryl." See note to 6.67.13.

43. "servants entered . . . holding" gṛhītvā viviśuḥ: Literally, "having taken, they entered." We agree with the commentators in supplying a subject, "servants (bhṛtyāḥ paricārikāḥ—so Cr, Cg)" or "guards of the king's palace (rājabhavanarakṣakāḥ—so Ct)," for the verb viviśuḥ, "they entered."

44. "Rāghava's younger brother" rāghavānujaḥ: Although it was Śatrughna who was most recently mentioned (in verse 43), we agree with Cr and Ct that the reference here must be to Bharata, who is in charge of the entire proceedings.

"you must dispatch emissaries in connection with . . . consecration" abhiṣekāya . . . dūtān ājñāpaya: Literally, "you must order messengers for the consecration."

46. "you are waiting for me" pratīkṣadhvam: Literally, "you must wait." We agree with Cm, Cg, and Ct, who take the present imperative in a future sense, "you will be waiting for (pratīkṣiṣyadhvam)," and add the word asmān, "us."

"these four vessels filled, respectively, with water from each of the four oceans" caturṇāṃ sāgarāmbhasām / pūrṇair ghaṭaiḥ: Literally, "with vessels full of the four ocean-waters." The geography suggested here is that in which the Indian subcontinent is understood to be an island surrounded by four oceans that are located, respectively, in the four cardinal directions. This model is different from the classical purāṇic one in which the central continent of Jambudvīpa is surrounded by seven other continents separated from one another by seven oceans, each containing a different fluid. The four oceans are those described by Sugrīva to the monkey search parties in the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa (4.39–42) as lying at the periphery of the known and knowable world. The eastern ocean is mentioned at 4.39.30, the southern ocean at 4.40.21–22, the western ocean at 4.41.8, and the northern ocean at 4.42.53. It should be noted, however, that the description given there of the eastern ocean is a complex one, which mentions several of the purāṇic and other oceans. These are the blood-red Lohita ocean (4.39.33–35), the ocean of milk (4.39.38), and the ocean of fresh water where the submarine mare is located (4.39.42). For a discussion of the Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa's description of the four directions (digvarṇana), see Lefeber (1994, pp. 29–35). See also Pagani's note to verse 52 (1999, p. 1677), where she argues that the invention of a northern ocean serves to place India in the center of the world and thus adds legitimacy to Rāma's consecration with water from all four cardinal directions. Cg understands that Sugrīva's instructions for the bringing of the waters of the four oceans includes, by upalakṣaṇa (here, metonymy), the waters of the five hundred rivers mentioned in verse 48 below (sāgarajalānayananiyogo nadījalānayananiyogasyāpy upalakṣakaḥ).

47. "as huge as elephants" vāraṇopamāḥ: Literally, "who were like elephants or the equal of elephants."

"like so many Garuḍas, swift in flight" garuḍā iva śīghragāḥ: Literally, "like swift-going Garuḍas." Since the term garuḍa refers almost exclusively to the great mythical bird-lord who serves as Viṣṇu's mount, we take the figure to be a kind of abhūtopamā, a simile in which the object of comparison [in this case multiple Garuḍas] does not exist. This idea appears to be followed by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 368), who renders, "who could vie with Garuda in speed," and Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 422), who translates, "on eût dit autant de Garudas au prompt vol." Other translators who share this reading understand the term to refer either to birds in general or to one or another species of bird. Cf. note to 6.91.5–6.

48. Verses 48–52 offer a number of problems, owing to apparent inconsistencies and ambiguities in their account of which monkeys bring which water from which sources. The commentators struggle in various ways to rationalize the passage and rid it of its apparent redundancies and contradictions. In the first instance, it would appear from the flow of the narrative that the four monkeys referred to in 48a–c, that is, Jāmbavān, Hanumān, Vegadarśin, and Ṛṣabha, should be the four monkeys instructed by Sugrīva in verses 45–46 above to fetch water, respectively, from each of the four oceans. These would then appear to be the monkeys who, without being further named or numbered, embark on this mission in verse 47. However, some of the monkeys who are stated in verses 49–52 to have carried out Sugrīva's order have different names from those given in verse 48. Moreover, the exact identity of the monkeys who fetch the river water in verse 48ef is not made clear.

"Vegadarśin" vegadarśī: This appears to be the name of a monkey. Cr, however, in an effort to harmonize the list of four monkeys in this verse with those specified in the following verses as going to the various oceans, argues that we should take the term here as an epithet of Gavaya, who is said to bring water from the western ocean at verse 51. According to Cr, the epithet means "he whose habit or nature is to show off his speed." (atra vegadarśiśabdena gavayo gṛhyate. vegaṃ darśayati tacchīla iti vyutpatteḥ. ata eva gavayaḥ paścimād iti vakṣyamāṇena na virodhaḥ.) Among the translators consulted, only Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, pp. 1898–99) follows Cr's interpretation. See 6.4.17; 6.21.23; 6.60.37–40; 6.63.26; and notes.

"fetched . . . they brought" ānayan . . . upāharan: In keeping with his argument at verse 46 above, Cg understands that the four monkeys named in this verse bring only river water, leaving to the four monkeys (Suṣeṇa, Ṛṣabha, Gavaya, and Nala [or Anala]) mentioned in verses 49–52 the task of bringing seawater. Cg deals with the repetition of the name Ṛṣabha in 48c and 50a by arguing that there are two different monkeys of the same name. (evaṃ jāmbavaddhanumadvegadarśyṛṣabhair nadījalānayanam uktvā suṣeṇarṣabhagavaya[ā]nalaiḥ sāgarajalānayanaṃ darśayati . . . ayaṃ carṣabhaḥ pūrvasmād anyaḥ.) Only Dutt (1893, p. 1544) understands as does Cg. Ct takes the multiple use of the conjunction ca, "and," in verse 48 to refer to five hundred additional monkeys, starting with Suṣeṇa, Gavaya, etc. (from verses 49–52), who bring the river water. He claims, however, that this does not suggest a contradiction with the later verses where Suṣeṇa and Gavaya also bring ocean water. (atra cakāraiḥ suṣeṇagavayādipañcaśatavānaraparigrahaḥ. tad vakṣyati nadīśatānāṃ pañcānām iti. ata eva suṣeṇagavayoḥ samudrajalāhartṛtvena vakṣyamāṇena na virodhaḥ.) This interpretation is followed in a number of translations, including Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 422), Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 368), Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1898), and Pagani (1999, p. 1213).

49. "Suṣeṇa" suṣeṇaḥ: Cr, in his effort to harmonize the sets of four monkeys as discussed in the preceding note, argues that the term suṣeṇaḥ here is not the proper name of the monkey hero mentioned frequently throughout the kāṇḍa but, instead, should be understood as an epithet of Jāmbavān, having the sense of "he who has a splendid army" (suṣeṇaḥ śobhanasenāvāñ jāmbavān ity arthaḥ).

Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,3,B,D1,6,8,12,13,T2,3,M1,2,G3 omit this verse and, given the principles adopted by the critical editors, it should not have been admitted to the critical text. See Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv.

50. "Ṛṣabha" ṛṣabhaḥ: It is at this point that Cg makes the comment about the two different Ṛṣabhas noted above. See notes to verse 48 above.

The printed editions of Gorresio (6.112.65), VSP (6.131.56), and KK (6.131.56) all read 50 with 51ab, while GPP (6.128.55), NSP (6.128.55), and Gita Press (6.128.55) read 49cd with 50 (6.128.55). However, the majority of translations of the southern recension consulted render according to the verse alignment of the critical edition in which the golden pot is carried by Gavaya. Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1899), Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 272), and Lahore (6.109.69) have Ṛṣabha carrying the golden pot. In this they are aligned with the commentary of Cr, who explicitly associates the golden pot with Ṛṣabha, arguing that we should insert the gerund gṛhītvā, "having taken" (of which the subject would be Ṛṣabha), after the word ghaṭam, "vessel," of 51b.

51. For the sequence and alignment of verses, see note to verse 50 above and notes to 3648* below.

"a golden vessel covered . . . In it was water" saṃvṛtaṃ kāñcanaṃ ghaṭam / . . . toyam: Literally, "a golden vessel covered . . . water." The syntax of the verse is awkward as there is no grammatical relationship, not even a conjunction, between the pot and the water. One must assume, of course, that the latter is in the former. Most northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.112.65) and Lahore (6.109.69) offer a facilior reading, substituting the locative saṃvṛte kāñcane ghaṭe, "in a golden vessel," for the critical edition's accusative saṃvṛtaṃ kāñcanaṃ ghaṭam.

"covered with camphor and red sandalwood paste" raktacandanakarpūraiḥ saṃvṛtam: Ś2,Ñ,V,B1–3,D2–4,8,9,12,13,G1,2,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gorresio (6.112.65) read -śākhābhiḥ for -karpūraiḥ, "camphor," lending the phrase the sense "covered with branches of red sandalwood." Only Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 272) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 368) render this variant.

52. On the verse alignment in the various editions, see notes to verse 50 above and notes to 3648* below.

"He whose power was that of Māruta . . . and whose pace that of Garuḍa or the wind" mārutavikramaḥ . . . garuḍānilavikramaḥ: Literally, "he whose power is that of Māruta . . . he whose power or pace is that of Garuḍa and/or the wind." The context of the two epithets leads us to render the word vikrama in two of its senses, "power" and "pace." The reference is obviously to Hanumān, one of Sugrīva's emissaries named at verse 48 above.

"He . . . brought": The verse as constituted in the critical edition lacks any verbal element. Given this reading, one is simply forced to supply a verb with the sense of "brought."

"from the northern ocean" uttarāt: Literally, "from the northern one."

Following verse 52, D5,7,10,11,T1,G1,2,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of two lines [3648*]. In the reading of the critical edition, which is shared also by the texts of Cg and Cm, the monkey Nala replaces Hanumān as the emissary who fetches water from the northern ocean. Line 1 of the insert should construe with verse 52, and line 2 with verse 53: "And righteous Nala,[1] endowed with every virtue, [swiftly] brought [frigid water from the northern ocean in a great jeweled urn].[1] Then when he saw that water[2] that had been brought by the foremost of the monkeys, [Śatrughna . . .].[2]"

[1]"righteous Nala" dharmātmā nalaḥ: As noted above, only Raghunathan among the translators consulted follows this reading. D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead dharmātmānilaḥ, "righteous Ānila [son of Anila]." Both Ct and Cr read ānilaḥ and understand the reference to be to Hanumān. The critical apparatus, mistakenly, it appears, breaks up the sequence as dharmātmā [a]nilaḥ, which presumably would introduce yet another monkey, Anila.

[2]"that water" taj jalam: As both Ct and Cg point out, the reference is to the same water brought from the oceans and rivers mentioned earlier. (tat prasiddham. taj jalaṃ teṣāṃ nadīsāgarāṇāṃ jalam—so Cg.) Cv understands that it is only the seawater (teṣāṃ sāgarāṇāṃ jalam).

Note that the adjectives and epithets, which must refer to Hanumān in the critical edition, are applied to Nala or are divided between him and Gavaya. The only translation to follow this interpretation is that of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 368). It should be noted, however, that Raghunathan appears to ignore the epithet mārutavikramaḥ, "whose power was that of Māruta." Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1899) is alone among the translations consulted in construing 52ab with 51cd, and 52cd with 3648* line 1. In this configuration, Gavaya brings frigid water from the western ocean in a jeweled urn. This makes little sense to us, however, as the frigid water should properly come from the northern ocean.

53. "presented that water . . . for the purpose of . . . consecration" abhiṣekāya . . . nyavedayat: Literally, "he gave or informed for the consecration." The reading of the critical edition is elliptical and perhaps defective, as it lacks an explicit object for the verb nyavedayat. If one takes the verb nyavedayat in its sense of "he informed," one must then understand that Śatrughna informed the purohita, etc., about the consecration, but this is awkward both contextually, since Vasiṣṭha and the other ministers, etc., have already begun the preparations for the consecration (see verse 21), and syntactically, since it is difficult to construe the dative abhiṣekāya here. Manuscript traditions of the various recensions present more lucid readings. Several southern manuscripts, as well as the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators, as noted above (see notes to verse 52), include 3648*, whose second line provides a logical object in the form of taj jalam, "that water," for the verb. All translations that follow the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators translate accordingly, and, for lack of a better resolution, we have followed suit by adding the words "that water." Many northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Gorresio (6.112.69) and Lahore (6.109.73) provide a direct object, substituting the accusative singular abhiṣecanikam, "the materials or paraphernalia for consecration," or some similar expression, for the dative singular abhiṣekāya, "for the consecration." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 272) translates, "annunziò . . . esser pronta ogni cosa per la sacra."

"his assistants" suhṛdbhyaś ca: Literally, "and to [his] friends." We understand that the reference is to the other officiants who will assist Vasiṣṭha in the consecration ritual. See verse 54 below.

54. "devout" prayataḥ: The term normally means "self-controlled, pious, restrained, etc." Ct and Cm gloss prayatnavān, "effortful, diligent."

55–56. "Suyajña . . . Vijaya" suyajñaḥ . . . vijayaḥ: The list of names in the critical edition and in the texts and printed editions of Ct are similar, except that the order of names is somewhat different and Ct's text omits the name Suyajña. The commentators identify Suyajña as the son of Vasiṣṭha. See note to 6.115.51. It is not clear whether Vijaya, who is named as a minister at 3556* (following notes to 6.115.8), is the same figure as the Vijaya mentioned here.

"just as the Vasus consecrated thousand-eyed Indra Vāsava" sahasrākṣaṃ vasavo vāsavam yathā: Literally, "just as the Vasus, [did] thousand-eyed Vāsava."

57–58. Commentators propose two ways of reading the verses with their long lists of instrumentals. Cg, whom we have followed, understands the instrumentals to be those of accompaniment so that the sense is that Vasiṣṭha and the other priest performed the consecration together with the officiating priests, and so forth (te vasiṣṭhādaya ṛtvigādibhiḥ sahābhyaṣiñcann iti yojanā) (Cv similarly). Ct and Cr, on the other hand, propose that we take the verb abhyaṣiñcan, "they consecrated," as an unmarked causative in the sense "they caused to consecrate," in which case Vasiṣṭha and the other priests are to be understood as the managers of the ceremony in which they cause the other groups to do the actual consecration by sprinkling (atra vasiṣṭhādayaḥ prayojakakartāraḥ . . . abhyaṣiñcann abhyaṣecayan—so Ct).

"in great delight . . . they . . . with . . . merchants" te saṃprahṛṣṭāḥ sanaigamaiḥ: The reference here is to Vasiṣṭha, etc., mentioned in verses 55–57 above. D7,10,11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read the instrumental plural saṃprahṛṣṭaiḥ, which can be taken to modify either the general groups who are joining in the consecration or, more specifically, the merchants with whom the adjective is closely juxtaposed.

"with that water and with the extracts of all the different herbs" sarvauṣadhirasaiś cāpi: Literally, "and with the juice of every plant or herb." Since we understand that the priest and the populace are all sprinkling Rāma more or less simultaneously, we tend to agree with Cg's suggestion that the conjunction ca, "and," suggests that we are to include the water mentioned in verse 56 above (cakārāt salilena ca).

"with maidens" kanyābhiḥ: Ct understands that the maidens are sixteen in number (kanyābhiḥ śoḍaśasaṃkhyābhiḥ). Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 422) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1899) both incorporate this number into their respective translations. Compare verse 35 above.

Following verse 58, D5,7,10,11,T1,G,M3,5, GPP and NSP (6.128.64–67), KK (in brackets, 6.131.65–67) and VSP (unnumbered between 6.131.64 and 65, in brackets), and the texts of the southern commentators insert a passage of eight lines [3662*]: "Then, in a great assembly hall, covered with gold, adorned with precious objects, and beautified by exquisite gems of every kind, great Vasiṣṭha seated Rāma[1] in proper fashion on a throne made of various gems. After that, Vasiṣṭha, together with the officiating priests and seers, consecrated him[2] with the very same bejeweled crown with which, in ancient times, Manu was consecrated and, after him, all the kings in his lineage in succession. It had been fashioned long ago by Brahmā and was dazzling in its splendor.[3]"

[1]"seated Rāma" kalpayitvā: Literally, "having settled or arranged." We follow Ct, who glosses, "having caused to sit (upaveśya)." We understand with Ct and Cr that one must add the name Rāma as an object of the gerund.

[2]"together with the officiating priests and seers, consecrated him" ṛtvigbhir ṛṣibhiś caiva sahitenābhiṣecitaḥ: D7,10,11,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cg read instead ṛtvigbhir bhūṣaṇaiś caiva samayoksyata rāghavaḥ, "Rāghava was adorned with jewels [by Vasiṣṭha,] together with the officiating priests."

[3]"dazzling in its splendor" dīptatejasam: Ct and Cr suggest that we read this adjective with Rāma, who has to be supplied as the object of kalpayitvā (see above). Only Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1900) among the translators consulted follows this suggestion. Others, like us, take it as a reference to the dazzling splendor of the crown. Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 369), however, for some reason, omits the entire passage.

59. 6.116.59cd, ef = 6.116.26.

Following 59e, Ś2,Ñ,V1,2,B,D1–4,8,9,12,13,M2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of one line [3663*], which expands the description to include Vibhīṣaṇa: "Delighted [Vibhīṣaṇa] held Rāma's magnificent yak-tail fly whisk." Cf. verse 26 above.

60. "on the orders of Vāsava" vāsavena pracoditaḥ: Literally, "urged by Vāsava."

"with a hundred lotuses" śatapuṣkarām: Presumably, the lotuses are also wrought of gold.

61. "on the orders of Śakra" śakrapracoditaḥ: Literally, "urged by Śakra."

"he also gave" dadau: Literally, "he gave." No explicit subject is identified. We follow the suggestion of the commentators that one must understand the unidentified subject to be Vāyu, who was the subject of the previous verse.

"a pearl necklace" muktāhāram: Since the necklace is said to be interspersed with many other gemstones, Cg glosses, "a necklace mostly of pearl (muktāpracurahāram)."

"strung with every sort of jewel" sarvaratnasamāyuktam: Literally, "connected or provided with all jewels." According to Cg, the reference is to the famous navaratnas, or "nine types of gems," classified in the traditional literature (sarvaratnair navaratnaiḥ). The list is as follows: pearl, ruby, lapis, gomeda (s.v. Apte: a precious or semiprecious stone from the Himalayas that is said to come in four colors), diamond, coral, ruby, emerald, and sapphire (muktāmāṇikyavaidūryagomedā vajravidrumau / padmarāgo marakataṃ nīlaś ceti yathākramam // quoted in Apte s.v.).

"an immense gem" maṇiratna-: Literally, "a jewel of a gem." We understand with Cg that the reference is to the principal gem (maṇiśreṣṭhena nāyakena madhye).

62. "who so richly deserved it" tadarhasya: We agree with Ct and the other translators consulted in understanding that what Rāma deserves are the performances of the divine singers and dancers (tadarhasya devagītanṛttādyarhasya). One could, perhaps, also understand the phrase to refer to the consecration itself.

63. Crā and Cg remind us that, as Sumantra reports to Daśaratha in the aftermath of Rāma's exile, even the trees, flowers, and animals are drooping and despondent at their separation from the prince (2.53.4–7). Now that he has returned, the land and its living things have revived and blossomed.

"on the festive occasion of Rāghava's consecration" rāghavotsave: Literally, "on Rāghava's festival."

64. "First" pūrvam: Ct and Cg understand the adverb to refer to the priority of the gifts of livestock to those of precious metals, etc., that will follow (hiraṇyadānādeḥ pūrvam—Cg). Cg adds, as an alternative, that it refers to the priority of the brahmans over Sugrīva, etc., as recipients of Rāma's largess (sugrīvādibhyaḥ pūrvaṃ vā).

"cows that had newly calved" dhenūnām . . . gavām: We follow the commentators who quote the Amarakośa (2.9.71), where dhenu refers to a cow that has newly calved (dhenuḥ syān navasūtikā). We take the term dhenūnām with these commentators as a modifier of gavām. The idea is that Rāma is giving away demonstrably fertile cows and bulls, which the brahmans can then profitably breed. Roussel (1903, vol. 3, p. 423), followed by Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 369) and Pagani (1999, p. 1214), understands the two terms to refer to separate types of cattle, i.e., cows and heifers.

66. "a . . . diadem" srajam: Literally, "garland, chaplet, wreath." Translators are divided in their understanding of exactly what this article is in this context.

"encrusted with gems" maṇivigrahām: Literally, "having a body or expanse of jewels." We follow Cg, who glosses, "consisting mainly of or abundant with jewels (maṇipracuram)."

67. "greatly pleased" dhṛtimān: We are persuaded that, in this context in which Rāma is rewarding his friends and allies with whom he is pleased, Cg is correct in taking the term dhṛti in its sense of "pleasure, satisfaction" rather than in its more common meaning, "firmness, fortitude, retention." Thus, he glosses prītimān, "pleased." Cg is followed in this interpretation by Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1901) and Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 369).

"Rāma gave" dadau: Literally, "he gave."

"Aṅgada . . . a pair of armlets" aṅgadāyāṅgade: The choice of gift here is clearly governed by the play on Aṅgada's name. See note to 6.14.3.

"adorned with diamonds and gems" vajraratnavibhūṣite: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read candraraśmi-, "rays of the moon," for vajraratna-, "diamonds and gems," yielding the rather awkward compound "adorned with the rays of the moon." Translators who follow the text of Ct force the compound to mean "whose luster equals or rivals that of the moon."

"variegated with lapis and jewels" vaidūryamaṇicitre: D5,10,11,T2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead vaid[ḍ—D5,10,11,T2,3]ūryamayacitre, another awkward and difficult compound. Cr breaks it up as an appositional karmadhāraya compound, yielding the sense "made of lapis, and therefore beautiful (vaidūryamaye eva citre)."

68. "presented . . . with" pradadau: Since Sītā will give this priceless necklace to Hanumān in verse 72, Cg, perhaps disturbed at the idea that Sītā would so quickly give away her gift, remarks that Rāma gave it to her with the specific intention that she should give it to Hanumān (sītāyai pradadau hanumate dātavyam ity āśayena dadau).

69. "keeping her eyes on her husband, Vaidehī" avekṣamāṇā vaidehī: Literally, "Vaidehī, looking." Cr understands that Sītā is watching Rāma to determine his intention. Cg addresses this theme more elaborately, saying that we must add the term bhartāram, "[her] husband," and noting that the meaning here is that, since women lack independence, Sītā is looking expectantly to get her husband's permission [to present the gifts to Hanumān]. (avekṣamāṇā bhartāram iti śeṣaḥ. strīyāḥ svātantryābhāvād bhartranujñāṃ kāṅkṣitavatīti bhāvaḥ.) Given the context and what will follow, we believe that Cr and Cg are correct. Ct, however, understands the participle to mean that Sītā is considering or reflecting upon the assistance that he [Hanumān] had rendered her, and so presents him with the gifts. The meaning, he argues, is that she is eager to offer the gifts. (avekṣamāṇā tatkṛtam upakāraṃ cintayantī pradadau. pradātum iyeṣety arthaḥ.)

A variant noted by Crā reads instead avekṣamāṇo [avekṣyamāṇo—D1,2,5,T2,3,G2,3,M5] vaidehīm, which makes Rāma the subject and Sītā the object of the verb ava √īkṣ, "to look or gaze upon." For some reason, Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 369) has chosen to render this weak and minor variant. According to this reading, Rāma himself gives the garments and ornaments to Hanumān.

"two spotless and divine garments as well as splendid ornaments" araje vāsasī divye śubhāny ābhāraṇāni ca: Because of the differing alignment of verses, some translators understand that these articles are part of Rāma's gift to Sītā, mentioned in the previous verse, rather than Sītā's to Hanumān.

70. "looked back and forth repeatedly" avaikṣata . . . muhur muhuḥ: Ct understands that, having taken off her necklace out a of desire to give it away, Sītā looks to her husband for his permission (ātmanaḥ kaṇṭhād dhāram avamucya ditsayā bhartranumataye bhartāram avaikṣata). Cg understands that, once she has determined that her husband gave the necklace to her in the assembly in order to have her give it away as a reward to someone, Sītā is looking around with the intention of determining to which of the monkeys she should give it. (sadasi mahyaṃ hārapradānaṃ kasmaicit pāritoṣikatayā dāpayitum iti niścityāyaṃ hāra eṣu kasmai deya ity āśayenāvaikṣatety arthaḥ.)

71–72. Our reading of the two verses follows that proposed by Cg in which Rāma, in alluding to the specific virtues of Hanumān, is, in fact, instructing Sītā to give him the necklace. In Cg's reading, each of the named virtues relates to one of the specific feats accomplished by Hanumān in his effort to find Sītā. Thus, his might (pauruṣa) is evidenced in his leaping the ocean, his valor (vikrama) in his burning of Laṅkā, and his wisdom (buddhi) in his penetration of the aśoka grove. Cg notes that, if Rāma had not alluded to these specific accomplishments, his words would have constituted an implicit denigration of the other monkeys. (yasya yasmin. pauruṣaṃ balaṃ samudralaṅghanena. vikramo laṅkādahanena. buddhir aśokavanikāpraveśena. sarvaśaḥ sarvāṇi yasmin santīti yasya saṃtuṣṭāsi tasmai dehīti yojanā. anyathānyeṣāṃ nindoktir eva syāt.) Cg's reading of the passage is followed by Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 369). Gorresio's (1858, vol. 10, p. 274) interpretation is similar to Cg's and ours. Cr and the remaining translators of the southern recension understand the passage rather differently. They do not take 72ab to be part of Rāma's instructions to Sītā but see the two verses, 71 and 72, as syntactically independent from each other. According to this reading, Rāma simply tells Sītā to give the necklace to whomever she pleases, and she then, on her own initiative, confers it upon Hanumān, who possesses the virtues enumerated by Rāma.

Following 72cd, D7 (following verse 71),10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read a passage of one line [3677*], extending the list of Hanumān's virtues: "blazing energy, fortitude, glory, skill, capability, humility, and political wisdom."

73. "Wearing that necklace . . . wreathed with a white cloud" tena hāreṇa . . . / . . . śvetābhreṇa: Literally, "with the necklace . . . with a cloud."

74. "after some thought" vīkṣya: The gerund can mean either "having thought" or "having looked." Ct understands that Rāma turns his gaze to Mainda and the other recipients (vīkṣya maindadvividanīlān dṛṣṭvā). Cr believes he is examining the articles that will be given away (padārthān vīkṣya).

"every desirable thing" sarvān kāmaguṇān: Literally, "all things of desirable qualities." Ct understands this to mean "extremely excellent jewels, etc. (uttamaratnādīn)." Cr glosses, "things characterized by desirable qualities (yathepsitaguṇaviśiṣṭān)." Cg understands kāmaguṇān as a bahuvrīhi compound, meaning "having qualities that are to be desired, that is, to be sought after, that is, types of things such as ornaments (kāmyanta iti kāmāḥ prārthanīyā guṇā yeṣāṃ te tān ābharaṇādivastuviśeṣān)."

D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read verse 74 following verse 76.

75. "the . . . monkey lords" vānareśvarāḥ: Ś2,D7–12, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead vānarottamāḥ, "the foremost among the monkeys."

Ñ2,V,B1,3 continue after 3680*, while Ś2,B2,D5–8,10–12,T2,3,G,M2,3,5 insert after verse 75, and B4 inserts after verse 74, a passage of two lines [3681*]: "Vibhīṣaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanumān, Jāmbavān, and all the principal monkeys [were honored] by Rāma, tireless in action."

Cr, the only commentator to remark on this passage, understands that it should be construed with verse 76. As the passage is known to all recensions and the vast majority of manuscripts, it is questionable why it has been relegated to the critical apparatus. See Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv.

76. "each one of them . . . they all" sarve . . . sarve: Literally, "they all . . . they all."

"returned as they had come" jagmur eva yathāgatam: Cr suggests that we add the words "to their respective homes (svasvaniveśasthānam iti śeṣaḥ)."

D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Cr and Ct read verse 74 following verse 76.

Following verse 76, D1–5,9 (after 75),G2,3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert, while D6,7,10,11,T2,3,G1, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr insert following verse 74, a passage of two lines [3686*, lines 2–3]: "Then, after witnessing [the consecration], those great[1] bulls among monkeys, dismissed by the lord of kings, returned to Kiṣkindhā."

[1]"after witnessing [the consecration], those great" dṛṣṭvā . . . mahātmānaḥ: Literally, "having seen . . . those great [monkeys]." The line is elliptical, lacking as it does any object for the gerund dṛṣṭvā, "having seen." Cr, the only commentator to remark upon the passage, glosses, "having seen the consecration (abhiṣekam avalokya)." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead natvā . . . mahātmānam, "having prostrated themselves to the great one [Rāma]." This variant is rendered only in the translation of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 370).

Following 3686*, line 3, D5–7,9–11,T2,3,G,M3,5, insert a passage of four lines [3688*]: "When mighty[1] Sugrīva, foremost of monkeys, had witnessed Rāma's consecration and had been honored by Rāma, he entered Kiṣkindhā.[1–2] And righteous Vibhīṣaṇa as well, together with those bulls among the rākṣasas, sons of chaos,[2][3] having obtained his ancestral inheritance,[3] returned to Laṅkā as King Vibhīṣaṇa.[4][4]"

[1]"mighty" balī: D7,10,11,M3, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read instead purīm, "the city [of Kiṣkindhā]."

[2]"those bulls among the rākṣasas, sons of chaos" tair nairṛtarṣabhaiḥ: Literally, "those bulls among the sons of chaos."

[3]"his ancestral inheritance" kuladhanam: Literally, "the wealth of the family." The commentators engage in a lengthy discussion of the exact meaning of this term. Ct, Cr, and Cm argue that the ancestral wealth is that of the rākṣasa race, i.e., the kingdom of Laṅkā. Cv rejects this argument on the grounds that Vibhīṣaṇa had already received the kingdom at the time of his consecration and that the reference here is to the treasure of the Ikṣvāku family in the form of its presiding divinity, Jagannātha, identified by the commentators as Śrīraṅganātha, who is given to Vibhīṣaṇa in the form of a flying palace or a palanquin (vimāna). This argument is based on references in the Uttarakāṇḍa (GPP 7.108.25–28) and the Padmapurāṇa, stating that Rāma presents an image of this divinity to Vibhīṣaṇa at the end of his incarnation. Crā cites both positions but seems to favor the latter one. This interpretation is also questioned, however, precisely on the grounds that this gift will not take place until the end of the Rāmāvatāra. Cs makes the further suggestion that the treasure of the Ikṣvāku lineage is none other than Rāma himself, whom Vibhīṣaṇa had acquired as a friend and ally. Cs goes on to reject the argument that the kuladhana is Śrīraṅganātha on the basis of citations from the Padma- and Skandapurāṇas. Cs uniquely raises the objection that, since the Skandapurāṇa explicitly states that the worship of Śrīraṅga was part of Rāma's daily obligatory religious practice, he could not possibly have given the idol away as this would have prevented him from carrying out his religious obligations for eleven thousand years.

[4]"Vibhīṣaṇa . . . as King Vibhīṣaṇa" vibhīṣaṇaḥ . . . rājā . . . vibhīṣaṇaḥ: Literally, "Vibhīṣaṇa, the king Vibhīṣaṇa." To minimize the redundancy, we render the verse as if the rākṣaṣa now returns to his new kingdom, assuming his formal title as King Vibhīṣaṇa. D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr avoid the repetition by reading mahāyaśāḥ, "of great luster or glory," in place of the second occurrence of the name.

Printed editions of the text of Cg do not include lines 2 and 3 as part of their numbered texts. VSP knows the lines but relegates them to a footnote, commenting that this reading is found only in some manuscripts. KK, noting that line 2 is found in only two of the manuscripts on which its edition is based and that its variant of line 3 occurs only in late manuscripts, includes the lines in brackets at 6.131.87cd and 88ab. Both editions read a variant for line 3 (M3's and Cg's variant: rāmeṇa sarvakāmaiś ca yathārhaṃ pratipūjitaḥ, "[Vibhīṣaṇa], honored by Rāma with every desirable thing in keeping with his merit . . .").

Following 3688*, D5–7,10,11,T2,3,G,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3694*] following verse 80 in the critical edition. See notes following verse 80 below.

78. "please govern" ātiṣṭha: Literally, "you must assume."

"this land of which those kings who came before us took possession with their forces" gāṃ pūrvarājādhyuṣitāṃ balena: Literally, "the cow [i.e., earth] settled by or inhabited by previous kings with the army." One could also understand the instrumental balena, "with the army or forces," to mean "by force." As several of the commentators note, the kings of old in question are Manu and his descendants, i.e., the forebears of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

"as my equal" tulyaṃ mayā tvam: Literally, "you equally with me." Cg, the only commentator to remark upon this reading, reminds us that, on the eve of Rāma's earlier, aborted consecration, he had already offered to share power with Lakṣmaṇa. Cg quotes the Ayodhyākāṇḍa, where the offer is made (see 2.4.43 and note), and argues that Rāma urges this now because earlier he had done so in the absence of Bharata. Cg perhaps is cognizant here of the irony inherent in the fact that Rāma, who is the tradition's most celebrated victim of the violation of the normative order of succession, should propose that Lakṣmaṇa should take precedence over Bharata, who is, after all, senior to Lakṣmaṇa. Cg bases his argument on Rāma's statement in the Ayodhyākāṇḍa (2.16.19) that Rāma never reneges on a promise. In other words, Rāma has essentially no choice but to offer the position of yuvarāja to Lakṣmaṇa once again. See 2.16.19 and notes. (lakṣmaṇemāṃ mayā sārdhaṃ praśādhi tvaṃ vasundharām iti pūrvābhiṣekārambhe bharatāsannidhāne pratijñānāt. rāmo dvir nābhibhāṣata iti niyamāl lakṣmaṇam eva yauvarājye niyuṅkte.) See note to 6.51.10. D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and the commentaries of Cm and Cr read yathā, "just as," for mayā, "with me."

"which was borne" dhṛtā yā tām: D10,11, the texts and printed editions of Ct, and the commentaries of Cm and Cr read instead purastāt taiḥ, "by those [forefathers] of old." Together with yathā, "like," the variant reading noted above, this gives the line the sense "equally, just as was done by those forefathers of old."

The meter is indravajrā.

79. "was being offered the position of prince regent of the land" niyujyamāno bhuvi yauvarājye: Literally, "[he] being appointed in the prince regency in the land." Cr understands that it is Bharata who is trying to appoint Lakṣmaṇa. G2,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg read [a]pi ca, "even though," for bhuvi, "in the land." See note to 6.51.10.

"was . . . entreated to accept" paryanunīyamānaḥ: Literally, "was being entreated." Cr understands that Rāma was doing the entreating while Bharata was offering the position to Lakṣmaṇa. Ct understands that it was Bharata who was urging Lakṣmaṇa to accept the appointment, even though that position should by rights be his own (nyāyaprāptasvīyayauvarājyena bharatenānunīyamānaḥ).

"would not do so" na . . . upaiti yogam: Literally, "he does not approach or go to the occupation, employment, or yoke." Unlike the commentators, we take yoga in the sense of niyoga, "appointment, assignment." Ct and Cr understand the phrase to mean that Lakṣmaṇa did not desire (Ct) or accept (Cr) contact (Ct) or connection (Cr) with the prince regency (yogaṃ yauvarājyasaṃsargaṃ nopaiti necchati sma—Ct; yogaṃ yuvarājatvasaṃbandham . . . nopaity aṅgīcakāra—Cr). Cg takes yoga here to mean "acceptance or agreement (saṃmatim)." Cg offers two reasons for Lakṣmaṇa's refusal of the prince regency. First, Lakṣmaṇa recognizes the contradiction between his inherent nature as Śeṣanāga and the post of prince regent, and, second, he is aware of the impropriety of his appointment while his elder brother Bharata is present (svaśeṣatvaviruddhatvajñānāj jyeṣṭhe bharate vidyamāne svasya tadanucitatvajñānāc ceti bhāvaḥ). Cf. notes to 6.107.4–6.

The meter is upajāti.

80. D2–7,9–11,T2,3,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern recension read verse 80 following verse 83.

"his friends" -suhṛd-: D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead -suta-, "sons." This reading raises an interesting chronological question since Rāma will not have sons or become aware of them for many years. On the other hand, in light of the valedictory nature of the passage, which seems to refer generally to the remainder of Rāma's lengthy reign, the reading, although extremely poorly attested, is not utterly absurd.

Following verse 80, Ś,Ñ,V,B1,2,4,D8,12 substitute for 80ab, while B3 continues after 3692* and D2 continues after 3693*, and D5–7,10,11,T2,3,G,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators insert following 3688* (see notes to verse 76 above) a passage of one line [3694*]: "When that immensely glorious [hero], having slain his foe, and having obtained his entire kingdom . . ."

All subrecensions, editions, as well as the vast majority of both northern and southern manuscripts collated for the critical edition read this line. Its omission from the critical text is questionable. All translations consulted render this verse. See Bhatt 1960, p. xxxiv.

81. "Pauṇḍarīka, Aśvamedha . . . sacrifices" pauṇḍarīkāśvamedhābhyām: The Pauṇḍarīka sacrifice is an eleven-day soma sacrifice. See PW s.v. See, too, Pagani's note (1999, p. 1677), where she provides a detailed description of the rite. On the aśvamedha sacrifice, see 1.8.2; 1.11–13; and notes. See, too, 6.107.4–6.

All northern manuscripts and the printed editions of Lahore (6.110.11) and Gorresio (6.113.10) read the minor variant puṇḍarīka-. Noteworthy here, however, is the printed text of Gorresio (6.113.10), which reads a further variant, unattested in the critical apparatus or in the apparatus of the Lahore edition, puṇḍarīkākṣamedhābhyām, "two sacrifices to Puṇḍarīkākṣa (Viṣṇu)." Gorresio (1858, vol. 10, p. 276) translates, "due sacrifizi a Pundarīkāksa." Gorresio understands puṇḍarīkākṣa in its common usage as an epithet of Viṣṇu and notes (p. 317) that Rāma was celebrating two sacrifices to Viṣṇu as Puṇḍarīkākṣa, a name which signifies "lotus-eyed one." In the absence of any other textual support for this reading, we suspect that Gorresio's reading of akṣa is for some reason a mistaken transcription of the northern reading.

"Vājapeya" vājapeyena: B2,4,D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead vājimedhena, "with the Horse Sacrifice." Clearly this reading is redundant in light of the preceding mention of the synonymous aśvamedha. Ct rationalizes the repetition by stating that the prior reference is a general statement, whereas the latter is specific (pauṇḍarīkāśvamedhābhyām iti sāmānyata uktvā tatraiva viśeṣam āha vājimedhena). Translations that follow the texts and printed editions of Ct render this variant but attempt to avoid the redundancy by leaving the terms untranslated. On the vājapeya (lit., drink of strength) sacrifice, see 2.40.20 and note; Kane 1941–1975, vol. 2.ii, p. 1210 and note; Barth 1906, pp. 54–56; and Oldenberg 1894, pp. 44, 57, 192, 225, 250, 264, and 280. Pagani (1999, p. 1215) uses the critical edition's reading of vājapeya here and provides a note on the sacrifice (p. 1677).

82. "for ten thousand years" daśa sahasrāṇi . . . varṣāṇi: Cr and Cs are disturbed by the apparent contradiction between this verse and the well-known verse in the Bālakāṇḍa (1.1.76), where Rāma is said to have ascended to the Brahmaloka after having ruled for eleven thousand years. They each engage in some mathematical manipulation in an effort to show that there is, in fact, no contradiction. Cr, whose reading (see verse 90 below) has Rāma perform ten rather than a hundred Horse Sacrifices, appears to understand that Rāma rules for three periods of ten thousand years, pausing after each to reconsecrate his sovereignty by the performance of aśvamedhas. These ritual performances, it seems, may consume three periods of a thousand years each, so that Rāma reigns, in fact, for thirty-three thousand years. Cr's idea, it seems, is that Rāma technically rules for three periods of eleven thousand years each, and thus, he argues, there is no contradiction between this passage and the one at 1.1.76. rāghavo daśasahasrāṇi daśaguṇitāni sahasrāṇi trisahasrāṇi yeṣu trayastriṃśatsahasravarṣāṇīty arthaḥ. rājyaṃ prāpya daśāśvamedhān ājahve tanmadhya eva yathākālam akarot. kiṃca daśa- sahasrāṇi triṃśadvarṣasahasraparyantaṃ rājyaṃ prāpya kṛtvāśvamedhān ājahre trisahasravarṣaparyantaṃ cakāra. ata eva daśavarṣasahasrāṇi daśavarṣaśatāni ceti bālakāṇḍoktena na virodhaḥ. See note to verse 90 below.

"one hundred" śata-: Ś,Ñ,V1,2,B,D2–4,7,8,10–12,G1,M2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead daśa-, "ten," thus reducing the number of Rāma's Horse Sacrifices by 90 percent. Compare 1.1.74.

83. "With broad shoulders and his arms extending to his knees" ājānulambibāhuś ca mahāskandhaḥ: Rāma is described in similar terms at 1.1.9–10. Compare 2.3.11 and 5.33.15. The peculiar anatomical feature of the arms extending to the knees is a stereotypical characteristic of great personages in the literature.

"ruled the land" pṛthivīm anvapālayat: D7,10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read the slight variant śaśāsa pṛthivīm imām, "he ruled this earth or land."

"with Lakṣmaṇa at his side" lakṣmaṇānucaraḥ: Literally, "having Lakṣmaṇa as his attendant or companion."

D2–7,9–11,T2,3,G,M2,3,5, and the texts and printed editions of the southern commentators read verse 80 following verse 83.

84. For a similar description of the Rāmarājya, see Bālakāṇḍa (1.1.71–73).

"no widows mourned" na paryadevan vidhavāḥ: Literally, "widows did not cry or lament." As Cr points out, the meaning is that there were no widows (vidhavā nābhāvann ity arthaḥ). Compare 1.1.72, where a similar idea is expressed.

85. "misfortune afflicted no one" nānarthaḥ kaṃcid aspṛśat: Literally, "calamity did not touch anyone." Ñ2,V1,2,B2,3,D7,9–11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead nānarthaṃ kaścid aspṛśat, "no one touched (i.e., experienced) misfortune."

86. "Everyone . . . Everyone" sarvam . . . sarvaḥ: Literally, "all . . . all." Cr glosses "the collectivity of all people (sarvajanajātam)" for the neuter sarvam.

"people did not harm" nābhyahiṃsan: Literally, "they did not harm or cause injury."

87. "people lived for thousands of years and had thousands of sons" āsan varṣasahasrāṇi tathā putrasahasriṇaḥ: Literally," they possessed thousands of sons and [of them] there were thousands of years." Like Ct, we understand the implied subject to be "people (janāḥ)." Dutt (1893, p. 1547) mistakenly understands that these references are to Rāma rather than to the people in general.

Following verse 87, M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gita Press (6.128.102ab) insert a passage of two lines [3698*]: "While Rāma ruled the kingdom, all the people could talk about was 'Rāma, Rāma, Rāma.' For, indeed, Rāma was their whole world.[1]"

[1]"For, indeed, Rāma was their whole world." rāmabhūtaṃ jagad abhūt: Literally, "The world had become Rāma."

This verse is rendered only in the translations of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 371) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1903).

88. "The trees with their spreading boughs were always in flower and filled with fruit." nityapuṣpā nityaphalās taravaḥ skandhavistṛtāḥ: Literally, "the trees, broad with their branches, had constant flowers and constant fruit." D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead nityamūlā nityaphalās taravas tatra puṣpitāḥ, "the blossoming trees there were permanently rooted and permanently fruiting." Translations that follow the text of Ct render this reading, although Dutt (1893, p. 1547) and Shastri (1959, vol. 3, p. 371) omit mention of the roots.

"Parjanya brought the rains at the proper time" kālavarṣī parjanyaḥ: Literally, "Parjanya possessed timely showers." See 6.18.9–10; 6.67.20; and notes. D10,11, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read kāma-, "desire," for kāla-, "time," yielding the sense "Parjanya rained according to desire." Cf. 6.94.15 and note.

"the breeze" mārutaḥ: Literally, "Māruta." The name of the wind god here refers to the natural phenomenon rather than the deity.

Following verse 88, G3,M3, and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of one line [3700*]: "The brahmans, the kshatriyas, the vaiśyas, and the śūdras were all free from grief."

89. "adhered to their own proper occupations and were satisfied with their own duties" svakarmasu pravartante tuṣṭāḥ svair eva karmabhiḥ: Literally, "they were occupied in their own activities [and] were satisfied with their own activities." The reference here is to the cultural imperatives inherent in the socioreligious concepts of varṇāśramadharma and svadharma. Compare 1.1.75 and BhagGī 3.35. See R. Goldman 2004.

"they adhered always to the truth" nānṛtāḥ: Literally, "[they were] not untruthful."

90. "for ten thousand years" daśa varṣasahasrāṇi: As noted at verse 82 above, Cr appears to understand the number of years of Rāma's rule to be thirty-three thousand, although, perhaps as a result of a kind of shorthand or some dropped characters in the GPP, the text of his commentary available to us reads trayastriṃśadvarṣāni, or "thirty-three years."

D5,G3,M3,5, and the texts and printed editions of Cg and Gita Press (6.128.106bc) insert a passage of two half pādas following 90c [3702* with Cg's variant]: "[And so, for ten thousand years] and ten centuries more, majestic [Rāma ruled his kingdom] together with his brothers."

The majority of northern manuscripts read 3702*, line 1, which, with Cg's variant, is in harmony with 1.1.76, where the length of Rāma's reign is stated in exactly the same words. These pādas are rendered in the translations of Raghunathan (1982, vol. 3, p. 371) and Gita Press (1969, vol. 3, p. 1903).

Following verse 90, the final verse of the Yuddhakāṇḍa in the critical edition, the vast majority of manuscripts insert one passage or another of similar intent ranging from ten to twenty-five or more lines. Although the evidence shows that most scribes felt the need to include some concluding verses, the textual evidence is disparate and confused as shown by the fact that it has taken the critical editors nearly eight full pages simply to represent the variations. Therefore, even though such additional passages are found in so many manuscripts, we believe that the critical editors were correct in relegating all of them to the apparatus. All of these passages are of the type known in the purāṇic and related literature as phalaśruti, that is, passages that set forth the material, moral, and spiritual rewards of those people who hear, read, recite, or copy the holy text to which they are appended. Since such passages normally occur only at the end of texts, their presence here has led some scholars of the epic to argue that the original Rāmāyaṇa ended with the Yuddhakāṇḍa. This, however, is a dubious proposition as is suggested not only by the universal presence of an Uttarakāṇḍa in all known recensions of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa but also by the confused nature of these passages themselves. See Introduction, pp. 96–97. What follows is our translation of the phalaśruti passage as it appears in the printed text of Ct as represented in the printed editions of NSP and GPP with the additions and variations found in the printed editions of Cg represented in VSP and KK and any relevant or important variations noted in the critical apparatus. This phalaśruti is basically represented (in full or in part) in the critical apparatus's passages 3703* [including 3703 F, F3, F7, G, and G5] and 3709*, lines 1–6 [NSP, GPP 6.128.105–122; Gita Press 6.128.107–125; VSP 6.131.103–120; KK 6.131.106–124]: "This, the first poem, was composed long ago[1] by Vālmīki. It is the work of a seer.[2] It leads to good fortune,[3] glory, and long life, and it brings victory to kings.[4] [3703*, lines 1, 2; GPP 6.128.105; VSP 6.131.103] A man who constantly listens to it[5] in this world is freed from sin. A man who desires sons will get them and a man who desires wealth acquires it, if, in this world, they hear about Rāma's consecration. [3703*, lines 3, 4, 5; GPP 6.128.106–107ab; VSP 6.131.103ef–104] A king overpowers his enemies and conquers the earth. Women acquire living sons, just as did his mother in Rāghava, Sumitrā in Lakṣmaṇa, and Kaikeyī in Bharata.[6] [3703 (F)*, lines 8, 3, 4; GPP 6.128.107cd–108; VSP 6.131.105–106ab] He who listens to this Rāmāyaṇa, which is the entire tale of the victory of Rāma, tireless in action, obtains a long life. [3703 (F), lines 9, 10; GPP 6.128.109; VSP 6.131.107] Whoever listens to this poem, composed by Vālmīki, the work of a seer,[7] faithfully and after subduing his anger, triumphs over all adversities.[8] [3703 (F), line 12; 3703 (F7); GPP 6.128.110; VSP 6.131.108] And one attains reunion with one's kinsmen at the end of a journey.[9] And they obtain[10] in this world all the boons that they request from Rāghava. [3703, lines 6, 7; GPP 6.128.111ab, 112ab; VSP 6.131.109] All the gods are pleased with attentive listening on the part of those who hear it. In the house of him who keeps this text malicious spirits are pacified.[11] [3703 (G), lines 1, 2; GPP 6.128.112cd–113ab; VSP 6.131.110] A king will conquer the earth; a person journeying far from home will be safe, while marriageable women[12] who hear it will give birth to unsurpassed sons. [3703 (G), lines 3, 4; GPP 6.128.113cd–114ab; VSP 6.131.111] Whoever worships and recites this ancient history will be freed from every sin and will live a long life. [3703 (G), lines 5, 6; GPP 6.128.114cd–115ab; VSP 6.131.112] Kshatriyas should always listen to it from a brahman with their heads bowed. Then, without a doubt, they will gain lordship and sons. [3703 (G), lines 7, 8; GPP 6.128.115cd–116ab; VSP 6.131.113] For Rāma, who is the eternal Viṣṇu, the primal divinity, and the great-armed lord Hari Nārāyaṇa, is always pleased with one who constantly listens to and recites this entire Rāmāyaṇa.[13] [3703 (G), lines 9–11; GPP 6.128.116cd–117; VSP 6.131.114–115ab] Such is this account of what took place long ago. May you all be blessed. Recite it with confidence, and so may the power of Viṣṇu increase. [3709, lines 1, 2; GPP 6.128.118; VSP 6.131.118] All the gods are gratified with the hearing and retention[14] of the Rāmāyaṇa, and the ancestors are gratified as well on hearing it. [3709*, lines 3, 4; GPP 6.128.119; VSP 6.131.119] Those men who, in this world, copy with devotion this epic[15] of Rāma composed by the seer will gain a place in heaven.[16] [3709*, lines 5, 6; GPP 6.128.120; VSP 6.131.120] After hearing this auspicious and profoundly meaningful poem, a man obtains prosperity for his family, increase of wealth and grain, the finest women, supreme felicity, and the complete accomplishment of his goals on earth.[17] [3703*, lines 8–11; GPP 6.128.121; VSP 6.131.116] Those virtuous people who desire prosperity should religiously listen to this auspicious tale. For it leads to long life, health, glory, brotherly love, wisdom, and vitality.[18] [3703*, lines 12–15; GPP 6.128.122; VSP 6.131.117]"

[1]"long ago" purā: Several of the commentators take the term adjectivally in the sense of "old or ancient (purātanam)," which would then modify "the first poem (ādikāvyam)." The term in either sense presents something of a chronological problem, since the text itself, as Cg points out, was supposed to have been composed by Vālmīki only after Rāma's consecration. In what sense then can the text be said to be ancient? One explanation that no commentator mentions is that the term is, in fact, an indication of the late addition of the phalaśruti, whose author[s] would have looked back upon the Rāmāyaṇa as an ancient text. Cg proposes a number of interpretations, including that the poem was composed prior to Rāma's incarnation, composed prior to Rāma's sufferings outlined in the Uttarakāṇḍa, or, in keeping with the tradition of Vālmīki as the first poet, composed before [the works of] all [other] poets.

[2]"the work of a seer" ārṣam: Literally, "belonging to a ṛṣi." Ct, Cg, and Cr take ṛṣi, "seer," here to mean the veda and understand the adjective to mean that the Rāmāyaṇa is a supplement to the vedas (vedopabṛṃhaṇam iti yāvat—so Cg).

[3]"It leads to good fortune" dhanyam: Literally, "It is productive of wealth or good fortune. G2,3, and the texts and printed editions of Ct read instead dharmyam, "It is in keeping with righteousness."

[4]"to kings" rājñām: Literally, "of kings." The genitive can construe with either "victory" alone or with all the virtues listed in the verse.

[5]"who constantly listens to it" yaḥ śṛṇoti sadā: Literally, "who constantly listens." M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg read instead yaḥ paṭhec chṛṇuyāt, "whoever should recite [or] hear."

[6]Following line 4 (VSP 6.131.106ab), M3 and the texts and printed editions of Cg insert a passage of one line 3703 (F3)*: "And possessed of sons and grandsons, they will be perpetually happy."

[7]"the work of a seer" ārṣam: D7,10,11,G2, and the texts and printed editions of Ct and Cr read instead purā, "long ago." See notes 2 above and 9 below.

[8]"triumphs over all adversities" durgāṇy atitarati: Literally, "he crosses over difficulties."

[9]"And one attains reunion with one's kinsmen at the end of a journey." samāgamaṃ pravāsānte labhate cāpi bāndhavaiḥ: Ct and GPP read instead samāgamya pravāsānte ramante sahabāndhavaiḥ, "having been reunited at the end of a journey, they rejoice with their kinsmen." Following this line, Ct and the text of GPP repeat 3703 (F)*, line 12, substituting the plural verb śṛṇvanti, "they listen," for the singular śṛṇoti, and purā, "long ago," for ārṣam (see note 7 above). This yields the sense: "Those who listen to this poem that was composed long ago by Vālmīki [having been reunited]..."

[10]"they obtain" prāpnuvanti: Cg and the printed editions of VSP and GPP read instead the optative singular prāpnuyāt, "he would obtain."

[11]"In the house of him who keeps this text malicious spirits are pacified." vināyakāś ca śāmyanti gṛhe tiṣṭhati yasya vai: Literally, "In the house of whom it stands, the malicious spirits are pacified." We follow the interpretation of Cr, who takes the subject of tiṣṭhati, "it stands or exists," to be either the text [of the Rāmāyaṇa] itself or one who recites it (pustakaṃ pāṭhakartā vā). The printed editions of Cg read the plural tiṣṭhanti, "they stand," for the critical edition's and Ct's singular tiṣṭhati. In this case, the vināyakas, or evil spirits, themselves must be taken as the subject of the verb, lending the line the sense "[Whatever] evil spirits exist in the house of anyone, are pacified."

[12]"marriageable women" rajasvalāḥ: The term normally refers to women during their menstrual periods, but, given the context, it probably refers more generally here to women during their reproductive years. Ct, however, takes it in its principal sense, adding that a woman must first take a purifying bath and then [conceive] on the sixteenth day [from her period] (śuddhasnātānantaraṃ ṣoḍaśadināvadhi).

[13]Following line 9 in GPP (in brackets, unnumbered, between 116 and 117) and following line 11 in VSP (in brackets = 115cd) and KK (in brackets = 118cd), the texts of the southern commentators insert a passage of one line [3703 (G5)*]: "For Rāma, the foremost of the Raghus, is himself [the primal divinity, etc.], while Lakṣmaṇa is said to be Śeṣa." See notes to 6.5.9; 6.105.20; and 6.107.6.

[14]"with the . . . retention" grahaṇāt: Literally, "because of retention." Cr glosses paṭhanāt, "with (lit., from) the recitation."

[15]"this epic" saṃhitām: The term denotes a sustained composition in verse, such as the text of the vedas, etc. Here we take it to refer to the epic poem itself.

[16]"will gain a place in heaven" teṣāṃ vāsas triviṣṭape: Literally, "of them [there will be] a residence in Triviṣṭapa." Ct, citing a verse in which it is said that a person who hears any portion of the Rāmāyaṇa with devotion goes to Brahmā's world, where he is honored perpetually by Brahmā, glosses "in the world of Brahmā (brahmaloke)" for triviṣṭape. (triviṣṭape brahmaloke. śṛṇvan rāmāyaṇaṃ bhaktyā yaḥ pādaṃ padam eva vā / sa yāti brahmaṇaḥ sthānaṃ brahmaṇā pūjyate sadā // iti vacanāt.) Cr understands the reference to be to Sāketa, the eternal heavenly realm of Ayodhyā, which is the desired destination of all Rāmabhaktas, or devotees of Lord Rāma.

[17]The meter of these fours lines is upajāti.

[18]The meter of these fours lines is indravajrā.

Glossary of Important Sanskrit Words, Proper Nouns, and Epithets

Agni: god of fire
Airāvata: an elephant; Indra's mount Akampana: rākṣasa warrior slain by Hanumān
Amarāvatī: Indra's heavenly city
Anala; epithet of Agni; god of fire; name of one of Vibhīṣaṇa's advisers
Aṅgada: son of Vālin and Tārā; monkey general; heir apparent to the throne of Kiṣkindhā Anila: epithet of Vāyu, the wind god apsarases: celestial maidens or nymphs; known for their beauty aśoka grove: site of Sītā's confinement in the city of Laṅkā asuras: class of demons; half brothers of the gods
Aśvins: twin deities of the vedic pantheon; renowned for their beauty
Atikāya: Rāvaṇa's son; rākṣasa warrior slain by Lakṣmaṇa
Ayodhyā: capital city of the Ikṣvākus
Bharadvāja: an ascetic sage Bharata: Daśaratha's second son; son of Kaikeyī
Brahmā: creator divinity of the Hindu "trinity"; "Grandfather" of all living creatures
Brahman: name for the Indian religio-philosophical concept of the impersonal and attributeless absolute principle underlying existence.
Brahmarāśi: name of an asterism
Bṛhaspati: preceptor of the gods
Candra: mountain situated in the midst of the ocean of milk Candra: the moon god daityas: class of demons descended from Diti dānavas: class of demons descended from Danu Daṇḍaka: forest where Rāma, Sītā, and Lakṣmaṇa spend part of their exile
Daśaratha: Rāma's father; king of Ayodhyā
Dāśarathi: "son of Daśaratha"; epithet of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa Devāntaka: rākṣasa warrior slain by Hanumān dharma: righteousness, law; Dharma: god of righteousness
Dhruva: the pole star
Dhūmrākṣa: rākṣasa warrior slain by Hanumān
Droṇa: mountain situated in the midst of the ocean of milk Dūṣaṇa: a general in Khara's army in Janasthāna; slain by Rāṃa gandharvas: class of semi-divine beings known for their musical abilities; gandharva women are noted for their beauty
Ganges: a famous and sacred river; river goddess
Garuḍa: king of birds; Viṣṇu's mount; son of Kaśyapa and Vinatā
Hanumān: Rāma's monkey companion; son of the wind god; counselor to Sugrīva; aids in the finding of Sītā and the destruction of the demon king Rāvaṇa

Himalaya[s]: name of a mountain range; king of the mountains
Ikṣvākus: family name of the royal House of Ayodhyā Indra: king of the gods; leads their hosts into battle against the asuras
Indrajit: epithet of Rāvaṇa's son Meghanāda; slain by Lakṣmaṇa
Jāmbavān: king of the ṛkṣas; monkey general; sends Hanumān to bring the mountain of herbs
Janaka: lord of Mithilā; father of Sītā
Jānakī: patronymic of Sītā
Janasthāna: part of the Daṇḍaka Forest; residence of Śūrpaṇakhā and Khara
Kabandha: name of a rākṣasa slain by Rāma
Kailāsa: mountain peak in the Himalayas where Śiva and Pārvatī are traditionally said to reside; Kubera, the lord of wealth, is also said to reside there
Kākutstha: "descendant of Kakutstha"; a common patronymic of Rāma and his brothers
Kāla: time incarnate; name of the god of death
Kāma: god of love
Kandarpa: epithet of Kāma, god of love
Kesarin: name of a monkey; father of Hanumān Khara: brother of Rāvaṇa; slain by Rāma in the Daṇḍaka Forest kinnaras: mythical creatures with the heads of horses and human bodies; kinnara women are famed for their beauty
Kiṣkindhā: capital city of the monkeys
Kubera: god of wealth; son of Viśravas; half brother of Rāvana; king of the yakṣas and the kinnaras
Kumbha: rākṣasa warrior; son of Kumbhakarṇa; slain by Sugrīva
Kumbhakarṇa: gargantuan brother of Rāvaṇa; slain by Rāma Lakṣmaṇa: son of Daśaratha by Sumitrā; Rāma's constant companion
Lakṣmī: goddess of fortune
Laṅkā: Rāvaṇa's capital city; location of Sītā's confinement
Mandara: mountain used as the churning rod in the churning of the ocean
Mahāpārśva: rākṣasa warrior slain by Aṅgada
Maheśvara: epithet of Lord Śiva
Mahodara: rākṣasa warrior; Rāvaṇa's brother; slain by Nīla
Maithilī: "woman of Mithilā"; epithet of Sītā
Makarākṣa: rākṣasa warrior slain by Rāma
Mālyavān: great-uncle and adviser to Rāvaṇa
Mandodarī: chief queen of Rāvaṇa
Mārīca: a rākṣasa; turns himself into a magical deer; slain by Rāma
Māruta: epithet of Vāyu, god of wind; divine father of Hanumān Māruti: "son of Māruta"; epithet of Hanumān
Maruts: storm gods
Mātali: charioteer of Indra
Maya: architect of the asuras; father-in-law of Rāvaṇa
Meru: mythical mountain; the axis mundi
Mṛtyu: god of death
Mūla: an asterism
Nala: monkey son of Viśvakarman; designs bridge over the ocean

Nandigrāma: village where Bharata lives during Rāma's exile
Narāntaka: rākṣasa warrior slain by Aṅgada
Nikumbha: son of Kumbhakarṇa; adviser to Rāvaṇa; slain by Hanumān Nikumbhilā: sacred grove where Indrajit sacrifices
Nīla: monkey warrior
Nirṛti: goddess of chaos
Parjanya: god of rain
Pātāla: name of a hell
Pāvaka: "purifier"; epithet of Agni, god of fire Pavana: epithet of Vāyu, god of wind piśācas: class of demons
Prahasta: counselor to Rāvaṇa; father of Jambumālin; slain by Nīla Puṣpa or Puṣpaka: flying palace of Rāvaṇa
Rāghava: "descendant of Raghu"; common patronymic of Rāma and his brothers Raghu: son of Kakutstha; ancestor of Rāma
Rasātala: name of a hell
Rāvaṇa: main antagonist of the Rāmāyaṇa; ten-headed overlord of the rākṣasas
Ṛkṣavant: name of a mountain
Rohiṇī: daughter of Dakṣa; favorite consort of the moon
Rudra: epithet of Śiva
Śacī: consort of Indra
Sāgara: god of the ocean
Śakra: "mighty one"; epithet of Indra
Samudra: god of the ocean
Saramā: rākṣasa woman; comforts Sītā during her captivity
Sāraṇa: rākṣasa spy
Śārdūla: rākṣasa spy
Śatrughna: youngest son of Daśaratha by Sumitrā; Bharata's friend and constant companion
Saumitri: "son of Sumitrā"; matronymic of Lakṣmaṇa
Savitṛ: "the impeller"; epithet of Sūrya in his role as the impeller of all creatures
Śiva: one of the three main gods (the "trinity") of the Hindu pantheon along with Brahmā and Viṣṇu
Soma: epithet of Candra, god of the moon
Śrī: goddess of fortune
Sugrīva: king of the monkeys; younger brother of Vālin; friend and ally of Rāma
Śuka: rākṣasa spy
Supārśva: rākṣasa adviser of Rāvaṇa
Sūrya: sun god; father of Sugrīva
Suṣeṇa: monkey physician; father-in-law of Sugrīva
Suvela: mountain climbed by Rāma and his forces
Trijaṭā: rākṣasa woman; comforts Sītā during her captivity Trikūṭa: mountain on which the city of Laṅkā is located Tripura: name of the city of the demons; destroyed by Śiva
Triśaṅku: Ikṣvāku king; ancestor of Rāma
Triśiras: rākṣasa warrior; slain by Hanumān
Vaidehī: "woman of Videha"; epithet of Sītā

Vajradaṃṣṭra: rākṣasa adviser of Rāvaṇa; slain by Aṅgada
Vajrahanu: rākṣasa adviser of Rāvaṇa
Vālin: king of the monkeys; husband of Tārā; son of Indra; elder brother of Sugrīva
Varuṇa: god of the ocean
Vāsava: epithet of Indra
Vasiṣṭha: family preceptor of the Ikṣvākus
Vāsuki: name of a great serpent; used as the rope in the churning of the ocean
Vasus: class of deities, normally eight in number Vāyu: god of wind; divine father of Hanumān
Vegadarśin: monkey warrior
Vibhīṣaṇa: rākṣasa lord; brother of Rāvaṇa; ally of Rāma Vidyujjihva: rākṣasa magician
Virādha: rākṣasa slain by Rāma
Virūpākṣa: a field marshal of Rāvaṇa; slain by Sugrīva
Viṣṇu: one of the three main gods ("the trinity") of the Hindu pantheon along with Brahmā and Śiva; incarnated on earth in the form of Rāma in order to kill Rāvaṇa
Viśvakarman: god of craft; architect of the gods; father of Nala
Vivavasvān: epithet of Sūrya, the sun god Vṛtra: demon slain by Indra yakṣas: semi-divine beings associated with Kubera; the women are known for their beauty Yama: god of death yātudhāna: used either as a term for a rākṣasa or a specific class of rākṣasas

Glossary of Flora and Fauna āmalaka: myrobalan tree, Phyllanthus emblica L.

āmra: mango tree, Mangifera indica añkola: type of tree, Alanguim decapetalum Lam.
arjuna: white murdah tree, Terminalia arjuna asana: type of tree, Terminalia tomentosa Wt.
aśoka: tree with red flowers, Saraca indica L., syn. Jonesia asoka Roxb.
aśvakarṇa: sāla tree, Vatica robusta or Shorea robusta bakula: tree with fragrant blossoms, Mimusops elengi L. barhiṇa: peacock, Pavo cristatus bhṛṅgarāja: drongo or fork-tailed shrike, Dicrurus paradiseus bilva: wood-apple tree, bel, Aegle marmelos (L.) Correa bimba: plant bearing a bright red gourd, Momordica monadelpha Roxb.
cakravāka: a type of sheldrake, also called ruddy shelduck, Tadorna ferruginea Pallas (Anas casarca) campaka: tree with fragrant yellow flowers, Michelia campaka cātaka: type of cuckoo, Cuculus melanoleucus ciribilva: (= karañja) Indian oilseed plant, Pongamia glabra cūrṇaka: type of tree, Zizyphus rugosa Lamk.
cūta: mango tree, Mangifera indica dāḍima: pomegranate tree, Punica granatum darbha: type of grass, Eragrostis cynosuroides, syn. Poa cynosuroides dhava: type of tree, Anogeissus latifolia Wall. or Woodfordia floribunda Salisb., syn. Grislea tormentosa haṃsa: commonly identified as the bar-headed goose, or Anser indicus; but can also refer to the Mute swan, Cygnus olor, or Whooper swan, Cygnus cygnus hintāla: the marshy date tree, Phoenix or Elate paludosa jambū, jambuka: the rose apple tree, Syzygium cuminii L., syn. Eugenia jambos Linn, Roxb., or the black plum, Eugenia Jambolana syn. Syzugium jambolanum W.
japā: Hibiscus rosa-sinensis L. kāraṇḍava: generic term for duck; often a goosander or smew, Mergus merganser or Mergus albeus karañja: Indian oilseed plant, Pongamia glabra karavīra: oleander, Nerium odorum karṇikāra: fragrant tree with creamy-white flowers, Pterospermum acerifolium Willd.
kāśa: type of grass, Saccharum spontaneum Mant.
ketaka or ketakī: tree with fragrant white flowers, Pandanus odoratissimus, syn. Pandanus tectorius khadira: type of tree, Acacia catechu Willd. L., syn. Mimosa catechu Roxb. kiṃśuka: type of tree, flame-of-the-forest, Butea monosperma (Lam.) Taub., syn. Butea frondosa kokila: Indian cuckoo: Cuculus indicus koṇālaka: possibly a type of wagtail, Motacilla indica Gmelin?

kovidāra: tree, Bauhinia variegata L. koyaṣṭibhaka: probably the night heron (Nycticorax nycticorax) krauñca: either the sarus crane, Grus antigone, or the eastern common crane, Grus grus lilfordi kṣudratāla: see tāla kuḍaja: = kuṭaja: mountain jasmine, Holarrhena antidysenterica Wall.
kurabaka: red amaranth, Barleria prionitis kuśa: type of grass, Eragrostis cynosuroides, syn. Poa cynosuroides kuṭaja: tree with white flowers, Wrightia antidysenterica madhūka: mahua tree, Madhuca latafolia Roxb., syn. Madhuca indica Gmel.
muculinda: tree with yellowish white fragrant flowers, Pterospermum suberifolium nāgavṛkṣa: = nicula, type of tree, Barringtonia acutangula Gaertn.
nālikera: coconut tree, Cocos nucifera natyūha: = dātyūha, a type of bird probably the cātaka, Cuculus melanoleucus nimba: neem tree, Azadirachta indica A. Juss., syn. Melia a. L. and Melia indica Brandis nīpaka: = nipa/nīpa, type of tree, Anthocephalus cadamba Roxb. Miq.
nyagrodha: banyan tree, Ficus bengalensis, syn. Ficus indica padmaka: tree with white, pink, or crimson flowers, probably the Prunus puddum palāśa: type of tree, the flame-of-the-forest, Butea monosperma panasa: jackfruit tree, Artocarpus integrifolia pāṭala: see pāṭali pāṭali: trumpet flower tree, Bignonia suaveolens Roxb., syn. Stereospermum suaveolens DC plakṣa: type of tree, Ficus infectoria Rox. puṃnāga: type of tree, a nāgavṛkṣa, Rottleria tinctoria, or Calophyllium inophyllum L.
rañku: type of deer, perhaps the kṛṣṇāsara (spotted antelope) sāla: type of tree, Vatica robusta or Shorea robusta śālmali: silk-cotton tree, Salmalia malabarica or Bombax malabaricum saptaparṇa: milkwood tree, Alstonia scholaris śarapatra: type of grass, Saccharum spontaneum sārasa: the Indian sarus crane, Grus antigone sārika/śārika: mynah bird, Acridotheres tristis śiṃśapā: type of tree, Dalbergia sissoo or ougeinensis sinduvāra: type of tree, Vitex negundo tāla: palmyra tree or toddy-palm, Borassus flabellifer tamāla: type of tree, Garcinia xanthochymus Hook f. tilaka: type of tree, probably Clerodendron phlomoides timiśa: type of ebony tree, Dalbergia ougeinensis Roxb., syn. Amerimnus ougeinensis or Diospyros melanoxylon Roxb. or Diospyros embryopteris Pers.
tinduka: type of ebony tree, Diospyros embroyopteris Pers. or D. melanoxylon Roxb.
uddālaka: type of tree, probably Cordia myxa L.
uśīra: khas-khas grass, Andropogon muricatus Retz., syn. Andropogon squarrosus L. vallarī: fenugreek, Trigonella foenum-graecum, the term can also apply to a creeper or any creeping plant varaṇa: type of tree, Crataeva roxburghii Kurz., syn. C. religiosa Forst vibhītaka: myrobalan or purple-leaf plum, Terminalia bellerica

Glossary of Weapons

(See Introduction, pp. 111–112, and individual notes for discussions on the identifications of specific weapons.)

arrow types
- broad-headed: nālika
- calf's-foot-headed: vatsadanta
- crescent-headed: bhalla
- folded-palm-headed: añjalika
- half-iron: ardhanārāca
- half-moon-headed: ardhacandra
- heads with earlike blades: karṇi
- heron-feather-headed: śilīmukha
- horseshoe-headed: kṣurapra
- iron: nārāca
- karavīra leaf-tip-headed: vipāṭha (oleander Nerium odorum)
- lion-fang-headed: siṃhadaṃṣṭra
- long-headed: śalya
- razor-tipped: kṣura

axe: paraśu barbed dart: kunta battle-axe: paraśvadha bludgeon: musundī (v.l. musṛṇṭhī, bhuśuṇḍi, bhṛśuṇḍi) bow: cāpa, kārmuka, śarāsana, dhanuḥ, etc.
broad sword, double-edged sword: ṛṣṭi club: yaṣṭi/yaṣṭī cudgel: musala dart: prāsa
dart/missile/lance: āśanī discus: cakra (small discus: cakraḥ; big discus: cakram).
hook: aṅkuśa
iron club or battering ram: parigha iron cudgel: tomara hundred-slayer: śataghnī javelin: śakti
lance: śūla
nirghāta: See note to 6.66.4–5 mace: gadā mallet: kūṭa noose: pāśa
ploughshare: hala
scimitar: khaḍga [when used with asi] short javelin: bhiṇḍipāla/bhindipāla

sling: kṣepaṇi/kṣepaṇīyam spear: paṭṭiśa/paṭṭasa stave: daṇḍa sword: asi, khaḍga, nistriṃśa trident: triśūla
war hammer: mudgara

Emendations and Corrections of the Critical Edition

Listed below are the emendations and corrections to the critical text made by the translators. We have inroduced such changes only where we felt it essential for the intelligibility of the text. For a discussion of specific issues concerning the emendations, see the respective notes.

	Critical Text	Emendation
6.2.21	rāvaṇālayam	varuṇālayam
6.3.8		add *39
6.4.37	grāhābhyām	grahābhyām
6.4.68	na	naḥ
6.9.15	vaidehībhayam	vaidehī bhayam
6.9.15	kṛte na	kṛtena
6.35.20	gātram	gātre
6.37.10	na	ca
6.38.2	lakṣaṇikāḥ	lākṣaṇikāḥ
6.38.2	ajñāninaḥ	jñāninaḥ
6.38.3	ajñāninaḥ	jñāninaḥ
6.38.4	ajñāninaḥ	jñāninaḥ
6.38.5	ajñāninaḥ	jñāninaḥ
6.42.12		add 860*
6.45.36		add 926*
6.47.45	āryaḥ	ārya
6.48.57	āhatya	ādṛtya
6.52.30		add 1138*
6.53.5	Critical Text viklavānām abuddhīnāṃ rājñāṃ paṇḍitamānīnām / śṛṇvatām āditа idaṃ tvadvidhānāṃ mahodara //
	Emendation viklavānām abuddhīnāṃ rājñā paṇḍitamānīnām / śṛṇvatā sāditam idaṃ tvadvidhānāṃ mahodara //
6.55.66	saṃprati kartum	saṃpratikartum
6.55.76, App. 1, No. 35, line 23	asahyam	asahyaḥ
6.57.72	te 'svasthāḥ	te svasthāḥ
6.67.11	-ottame	-ottamaḥ
6.75. 1659*	āvivyathatuḥ	āvivyadhatuḥ
6.77.38	ādau	ājau
6.92.6	nijaghāna	nicakhāna
6.101.26–28	bhṛśaṃ śuṣkamukhībhiḥ	nakhaiḥ śuṣmamukhībhiḥ

6.102.5	āsīd	īṣad
6.102.7	māciram	mā ciram
6.110.13	bhavatā dharmabhiruṇā	bhavatādharmabhiruṇā
6.114.27	anucaran	anvacarat

Bibliography of Works Consulted

TEXTS OF THE VĀLMĪKI RĀMĀYAṆA

Rāmāyaṇa. (1928–1947). 7 vols. Lahore: D.A.V. College. Northwestern recension critically edited for the first time from original manuscripts by Vishva Bandhu. D.A.V. College Sanskrit Series, nos. 7, 12, 14, 17–20.

Ramayana, poema indiano di Valmici. (1843–1867). Paris: Stamperia Reale. Edited by Gaspare Gorresio.

Rāmāyan of Vālmīki. (1914–1920). 7 vols. Bombay: Gujarati Printing Press. With three commentaries called Tilaka, Shiromani, and Bhooshana. Edited by Shastri Shrinivas Katti Mudholkar.

The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. (1888). Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. With the commentary (Tilaka) of Rāma. Edited by Kāśināth Pāṇdurāng Parab.

The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. (1930). 4th rev. ed. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. With the commentary (Tilaka) of Rāma. Edited by Wāsudeva Laxmaṇ Śāstrī Paṇśīkar.

Śrīmad Vālmīki-Rāmāyaṇa. (1969). 3 vols. Gorakhpur: Gita Press.

Śrīmadvālmīkirāmāyaṇam. (1911–1913). 7 vols. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. Also called the Kumbakonam Edition. Edited by T. R. Krishnacharya and T. R. Vyasacharya. Reprint 1930.

Śrīmadvālmīkirāmāyaṇam. (1935). 3 vols. Bombay: Lakṣmīveṅkaṭeśvara Mudraṇālaya. With the commentaries of Govindarāja, Rāmānuja, and Maheśvaratīrtha and the commentary known as Taniślokī. Edited by Gaṅgāviṣṇu Śrīkṛṣṇadāsa.

The Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa: Critical Edition. (1960–1975). 7 vols. Baroda: Oriental Institute. General editors: G. H. Bhatt and U. P. Shah.

TRANSLATIONS OF THE YUDDHAKĀṆḌA

Dutt, M. N., trans. (1893). The Ramayana. Vol. 6: Yuddha Kāndam. Calcutta: Girish Chandra Chackravarti.

Gita Press Edition translation. (1969). See Śrīmad Vālmīki-Rāmāyaṇa (1969).

Gorresio, Gaspare, trans. (1856–1858). Ramayana, poema sanscrito di Valmici. Vol. 9 (sargas 1–37) and vol. 10. Paris: Stamperia Reale.

Pagani, Brigitte. (1999). Le Rāmāyaṇa de Vālmīki. Canto 6: La Guerre. Paris: Gallimard. Edited by Madeleine Biardeau.

Raghunathan, N., trans. (1982). Srimad Vālmīki Ramayana. Vol. 3. Madras: Vighneswara Publishing House.

Roussel, Alfred, trans. (1903). Le Rāmāyana de Vālmīki. Paris: Librairie des cinq parties du monde. Bibliothèque Orientale, no. 8.

Shastri, Hari Prasad, trans. (1959). The Ramayana of Valmiki. Vol. 3. London: Shanti Sadan. 2nd ed., 1969.

SANSKRIT TEXTS

Abhidhānavyutpattiprakriyakośaḥ (=Abhidhānacintāmaṇi) of Hemacandra: Classical Dictionary of Sanskrit Synonyms and Antonyms. (1932). 2 vols. Varanasi: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series Office. Kashi Sanskrit Series, no. 97. Reprint 1984.

Abhijñānaśākuntalam of Kālidāsa. (1891). 3rd rev. ed. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. Edited by N. B. Godabole and K. P. Parab.

The Abhijñānaśākuntalam of Kālidāsa. (1957). 8th ed. Bombay: Booksellers' Publishing Co. With the commentary of Rāghavabhaṭṭa. Edited by M. R. Kale.

Adhyātma-Rāmāyaṇa. (1884). Calcutta: Valmiki Press. With the commentary of Ramavarman. Edited by Pandit Jibananda Vidyasagara.

Agnipurāṇam. (1900). Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 41. Reprint 1957.

Aitareyabrāhmaṇa. (1931). Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. With the commentary of Śrīmatsāyaṇācārya. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 32.

The Amarakośa. (1940). 11th ed. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. Edited by Wāsudeva Laxmaṇ Śāstrī Paṇśīkar.

Amarakośa. (1971). Madras: The Adyar Library and Research Centre. The Adyar Library Series, vol. 101. With the unpublished South Indian commentaries Amarapadavivṛti of Liṅgayasūrin and the Amarapadapārijāta of Mallinātha. Edited by A. A. Ramanathan.

Amarakośa. (2002). Delhi: Eastern Book Linkers. With the commentary of Maheśvara. Edited by Vamanacharya Jhalakikar. Enlarged by Raghunath Shastri Talekar. Revised, enlarged, and improved from Chintamani Shastri Thatte's edition of 1882.

Amarakośa of Amarasimha. (1972). Kuala Lumpur: S. Mishra. With the commentary of Ācārya Kṛṣṇamitra. Edited by Satyadeva Mishra.

Āpastambaśrautasūtra. (1955–1963). 2 vols. Baroda: Oriental Institute. With Dhūrtasvāmibhāṣya. Edited by Paṇḍita A. Chinnaswāmī Śāstrī.

Arthaśāstra. See Kauṭilīya Arthaśāstra.

Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini. (1891). 2 vols. Allahabad: Pāṇini Office. Reprint Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass, 1962. Edited and translated by Śāstrī Chandra Vasu.

Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini. (1987). Austin: University of Texas Press. Translated by Sumitra M. Katre.

Aṣṭāṅgahṛdayasūtra of Vāgbhaṭṭa. (1997). A machine-readable transcription by R. P. Das and R. E. Emmerick. Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Ayur>.*

Āśvalāyanagṛhyasūtram. (1938). Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 105.

Baudhāyana-Dharmasūtra. (1992). Online version based on E. Hultzsch's [1922] and Pandeya's [The Kashi Sanskrit Series 1972] versions. Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode

*All electronic citations are current as of 12/27/07.

(UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#DhSutra>. Last revised, May 20, 1992.

The Bhagavad-Gita. (1935). Bombay: Gujarati Printing Press. With eleven commentaries. Edited by Shastri Gajanana Shambhu Sadhale.

Bhāgavatapurāṇam. (1965). Nadiyad: Kṛṣṇa Śaṅkar Śāstrī et al. With thirteen commentaries. Edited by Kṛṣṇa Śaṅkar Śāstrī.

Bhāgavatapurāṇam. (1983). Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. With the commentary Bhāvārthabodhinī of Srīdhara Svāmin. Reprint 1988.

Bhāgavatapurāṇam. (2006). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>. Under revision.

Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa. (2004). Based on Bombay: Venkatesvara Steam Press Edition (or a reprint thereof). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Brahmāṇḍapurāṇam. (1973). Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. Edited by J. L. Shastri.

Brahma-Purana. (2004). Adhyāyas 1–246 input by Peter Schreiner and Renate Soehnen-Thieme for the Tüebingen Purāṇa Project, University of Zürich, Department for Indology, <http://www.indologie.unizh.ch/text/text.html> or Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Bṛhadaraṇyakopaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

Bṛhatsaṃhitā of Varāhamihira. (1981–1982). 2 vols. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. Translated by M. Ramakrishna Bhat.

Bṛhatsaṃhitā of Varāhamihira. (1996–1997). 2 vols. Varanasi: Varanaseya Sanskrit Vishvavidyalaya. With the commentary of Bhaṭṭopala. Edited by Avadha Vihārī Tripāṭhī. Sarasvatī Bhavan Granthamālā, vols. 20, 97.

Bṛhatsaṃhitā of Varāhamihira. (1998). Digitalized by Michio Yano and Mizue Sugita. Based on the edition of A. V. Tripathi (Sarasvati Bhavan Granthamala Edition), with reference to H. Kern's text and his translation [variants marked by K. & K.'s translation] and Utpala's commentary [marked by U.]. Variants start from *. Version 4.3.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

The Devībhāgavatapurāṇam. (1986). Delhi: Nag Publishers.

Dharmākūtam, Yuddhakāṇḍa, by Tryambakarāyamakhī. (1964). Thanjavur: O. A. Narayanaswami. Edited by K. Vasudeva Sastri. Tanjore Saraswathi Mahal Series, no. 111.

Dhātupāṭha. (2004). <http://www.flaez.ch/sanskrit/dhatup.html>.

The Garuḍamahāpurāṇam. (1984). Delhi: Nag Publishers.

Garuḍamahāpurāṇam. (2004). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Harivaṃśa. See Mahābhārata: Critical Edition.

Harivaṃśa. Chitrashala Press Edition. See Mahābhāratam—Part VII, Harivanshaparvan.

The Hitopadeśa of Narayana. (1967). 6th ed. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. Edited by M. R. Kale.

The Hitopadeśa of Narayana Pandit. (1890). Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. Edited by N. B. Godabole and K. P. Parab.

Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa of the Sāmaveda. (1954). Nagpur: International Academy of Indian Culture. Edited by Raghu Vira and Lokesh Chandra. Sarasvati-vihara Series, Vol. 31.

The Jaiminīya or Talavakāra Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa: Text, Translation, and Notes. (1892–1895). Edited and translated by H. Oertel. JAOS 16, pp. 79–260.

Kāmandakīyanītisāra. (1971). Kathamandu: Nepāla Rajakīya Prajña-Pratiṣṭhāna Saṃskṛti Vibhāga. Edited by Devrāja Pauḍela.

Kāṭhakam: Die Saṃhitā der Kāṭha-Śākhā. (1900–1910). 3 vols. Leipzig: F. A. Brochaus. Edited by Leopold von Schroeder. Reprint Weisbaden: Steiner, 1970–1973.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

The Kauṣītaka Gṛhyasūtras. (1944). Madras: Anand Press. With the commentary of Bhavatrāta. Edited by Chintamani. Madras University Sanskrit Series, no. 15.

Kauṭilīya Arthaśāstra. (1960–1965). 3 vols. Bombay: University of Bombay. Edited by R. P. Kangle. University of Bombay Studies Sanskrit, Prakrit, and Pali, nos. 1–3.

Kāvyaprakāśa. (1941). Bombay: Karnatak Publishing House. Edited by S. S. Sukthankar.

The Kumārasambhava of Kālidāsa. (1886). Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. With the commentary (the Sañjīvinī) of Mallinātha (1–8 sargas) and of Sītārāma (8–17 sargas). Edited by Nārāyaṇa Bhatta Parvaṇīkara and Kāśīnāth Pāṇḍurang Parab.

Kūrmapurāṇam. (1971). Varanasi: All-India Kashiraj Trust. Edited by Anand Swarup Gupta.

Kūrmapurāṇam. (2004). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Lāṭyāyana Śrauta Sūtra. (1998). 3 vols. New Delhi: Indira Gandhi National Centre and Motilal Banarsidass. Critically edited and translated by H. G. Ranade.

Liṅgapurāṇam. (2007). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Mahābhārata. (1929). 6 vols. Poona: Chitrashala Press. With the commentary of Nīlakaṇṭha.

Mahābhārata: Critical Edition. (1933–1970). 24 vols. Poona: Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute. With Harivaṃśa (1969–1971). Critically edited by V. S. Sukthankar et al.

Mahābhāratam—Part VII, Harivanshaparvan. (1936). Poona: Chitrashala Press. With the Bhārata Bhāwadeepa by Neelakantha. Edited by Pandit Rāmachandrashāstri Kinjawadekar.

Mahābhāṣya. See The Vyākaraṇa-Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali.

Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā. (1881–1886). 4 vols. Leipzig: F. A. Brochaus. Edited by Leopold von Schroeder. [Part of the Kṛṣṇayajurveda.]

Maitrāyaṇī Upaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

Mālavikāgnimitram of Kālidāsa. (1960). Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. With the commentary of Kāṭayavema. Edited and translated by M. R. Kale.

Manusmṛti. (1946). 10th ed. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. With the commentary Manvarthamuktāvali of Kullūka. Edited by N. R. Acharya.

Manu-Smṛti. (1972–1982). 5 vols. Bombay: Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan. With nine commentaries by Medhātithi, Sarvajñanārāyaṇa, Kullūka, Rāghavānanda, Nandana, Rāmacandra, Maṇirāma, Govindarāja, and Bhāruci. Edited by Jayantakrishna Harikrishna Dave.

Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇam. (1967). UP, India: Saṃskṛti-Saṃsthāna. Edited by Śrīrāma Śarmā Ācārya.

Matsyapurāṇam. (1907). Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. Edited by Hari Narayana Apte. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 54.

The Meghadūta of Kālidāsa. (1969). 7th ed. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. With the commentary (Sañjīvinī) of Mallinātha. Edited with introduction, English translation, critical notes by M. R. Kale.

Mudrārākṣasa of Viśākhadatta. (1940). Poona: Aryabhushan Press. Edited and translated by R. F. Karmarkar.

Muṇḍakopaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

Nāradapurāṇam. (2004). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Natyasastra of Bharatamuni. (1971). Varanasi: Banaras Hindu University. With the commentary (Abhinavabharati) of Abhinava Guptacharya. Edited with introduction and commentaries Madhusudani and Balakreeda by Madhusudan Shastri.

The Nighantu and the Nirukta. (1967). Dehli: Motilal Banarsidass. Edited and translated by Lakshman Sarup.

The Nirukta of Yāska. (1993). Vol. 1. 2nd ed. Poona: Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute. Edited by V. K. Rajavade. Government Oriental Series Class A, no. 7.

The Nirukta of Yāska (with Nighaṇṭu). (1918, 1942). 2 vols. Bombay: Government Central Press. With Durga's commentary. Edited by H. M. Bhadkamkar. Bombay Sanskrit and Prakrit Series, nos. 73 and 85.

Nītisārakāmandaka. (2005). The Nītisāra or The Elements of Polity by Kāmandaki. Edited by Rajendralala Mitra. Revised with English translation by Sisir Kumar Mitra. Calcutta: The Asiatic Society, 1982. Bibliotheca Indica. [First edition, based on one recent MS, published in five fascicules, 1849–1884. The revised edition has used other editions and manuscripts of the text and a commentary, which is also published. Nothing is said of the date of the commentary.] Entered by H. Isacson.

Padmapurāṇam. (1893–1894). 4 vols. Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. Edited by Viśvanātha Nārāyaṇa Maṇḍalik. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 131.

Panchatantra. (1869). Vol. 1. Bombay: Oriental Press. Edited by F. Kielhorn. Bombay Sanskrit Series, no. 4.

———. (1868). Vols. 2, 3. Bombay: Oriental Press. Edited by G. Bühler. Bombay Sanskrit Series, no. 3.

———. (1868). Vols. 4, 5. Bombay: Oriental Press. Edited by G. Bühler. Bombay Sanskrit Series, no. 1.

Prācina Caritrakośa. (1964). Written by M. M. Siddheśvar Śāstrī Citrāv. Poona: Bhāratīya Caritrakośa Maṇḍal.

Raghuvaṃśa of Kālidāsa. (1948). Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. With commentary Sañjīvinī of Mallinātha; extracts from the commentaries of Vallabhadeva, Hemādri, Dinkara Misra Charitavardhan, Sumativyaya (Raghuvaṃśasāra); critical and explanatory notes, various readings, and indexes. With an introduction by H. D. Velankar.

Rājanighantu (=Nighanturāja or Abhidhānacūḍāmaṇi) of Narahari Pandita (alias Nṛsimha). (2004). Based on Calcutta 1933: Siddheshvarayantra. Input by Oliver Hellwig. Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Ayur>.

Rāmcaritmānas of Tulsī Dās. (1938). Gorakhpur: Gita Press. With a commentary by Hanumānprasād Poddār.

Ṛgveda-Samhitā. (1933). 5 vols. Poona: Vaidic Samshodhan Mandal. With the commentary of Sāyaṇāchārya.

Ṛtusaṃhāra of Kālidāsa. (1897). Mumbai: Gopal Nārāyaṇ Company Booksellers.

Śabdakalpadruma by Raja Radha Kanta Deva. (1886). 5 vols. Reprint Varanasi: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series Office. Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series, no. 93. 3rd ed., 1967.

Sāhityadarpaṇa of Viśvanātha Kavirāja. (1967). Varanasi: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series Office. Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series, no. 145.

Sāmavediyam Śrautasūtram (with the Lāṭāyanaśrautasūtra). (1984). Varanasi: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series Office.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇam. (1940). 5 vols. Bombay: Laxmi Venkateshwar Steam Press. With Sāyaṇa's commentary.

The Śiśupālavadha of Māgha. (1902). Bombay: Turkaram Javaji. With the commentary Sarvāṅkaṣāvya of Mallinātha. Edited by Wāsudeva Laxmaṇ Śāstrī Paṇśīkar.

———. (1932). Bombay: Gopal Narayan and Co. Edited with introduction, notes, and translation by M. S. Bhandare.

Śivapurāṇam. (1906). Bombay: Veṅkaṭeśvara Press.

Skandapurāṇa Sūtasaṃhitā. (1954). Madras: Balamanorama Press.

Śrautakośa. (1958). 2 vols. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Encyclopedia of vedic ritual comprising the two complementary sections, namely, the Sanskrit section and the English section.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

Taittirīyabrāhmaṇam. (1898). Poona: Ānandāśrama Press. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, no. 37.

Taittirīya Saṃhitā. (1871–1872). Leipzig: F. A. Brochaus. Edited by A. Weber.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad. (1958). In Eighteen Principal Upaniṣads, Vol. 1. Poona: Vaidika Saṃśodhana Maṇḍala. Edited by V. P. Limaye and R. D. Vadekar.

Uttararāmacarita of Bhavabhūti. (1971). 5th ed. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. With the commentary of Ghanśyāma. Notes and translation by P. V. Kane and C. N. Joshi.

Uttararāmacaritam of Bhavabhūti. (1918). Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Edited by S. K. Belvalkar. Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 22.

The Vaijayantī of Yādavaprakāśa. (1893). Madras: Madras Sanskrit and Vernacular Text Publication Society. Edited by Gustav Oppert.

The Vājasaneyi-Sanhitā. (1852). Berlin: Ferd. Dümmler's Verlagsbuchhandlung. In the Mādhyandina and the Kāṇva-Śākha with the commentary of Mahīdhara. Edited by Albrecht Weber. [Part 1 in The White Yajurveda.]

Vāmanapurāṇa. (2004). Based on the edition by A. S. Gupta, Varanasi: All India Kashiraj Trust, 1967. Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Vāyupurāṇam. (1959). 2 vols. Calcutta: Gurumandal Press. Gurumandal Series, no. 19.

Viṣṇupurāṇa. (1972). Calcutta: n. p. With the commentary of Śrīdhara. Edited by Sītārāmadāson Kāranātha.

Viṣṇupurāṇa. (2004). Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages (GRETIL), Archive of E-Texts in Unicode (UTF-8), <http://www.sub.uni-goettingen.de/ebene_1/fiindolo/gret_utf.htm#Pur>.

Viśvākośa. See Viśvaprakāśa.

Viśvaprakāśa of Śrī Maheśvara. (1911). Benares: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Book Depot. Edited by Śrī Śīlaskandha Sthavira and Pt. Ratna Gopāla Bhaṭṭa. Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series, no. 37.

The Vyākaraṇa-Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali. (1962). 3rd ed. Poona: Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute. Edited by F. Kielhorn.

Yājñavalkyasmṛti. (1892). Bombay: Janārdan Mahādev Gurjar. With the commentary of Mitāksharā Vijñāneshvara. Edited by Bapu Shastri Moghe.

Yāska's Nirukta. See The Nirukta of Yāska.

Yogasūtram of Maharṣi Patañjali. (1931). Benaras: Jai Krishnadas-Haridas Gupta. With the Yogapradīpaka commentary of Pandit Baladewa Miśra. Edited by Pandit Dhundhiraj Śastri.

SECONDARY SOURCES

Ali, Salim, and S. Dillon Ripley. (1968–1974). Handbook of the Birds of India and Pakistan. 10 vols. Bombay: Oxford University Press. 2nd ed., 1978–1987.

Alter, Joseph S. (1992). The Wrestler's Body: Identity and Ideology in North India. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press.

Apte, V. S. (1957–1959). The Practical Sanskrit-English Dictionary. 3 vols. Poona: Prasad Prakashan.

Arnold, Matthew. (1905). On Translating Homer. London: John Murray. New edition with introduction and notes by W.J.D. Rouse.

Barnett, Lionel D. (1914). Antiquities of India: An Account on the History and Culture of Ancient Hindustan. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Reprint Calcutta: Punthi Pustak, 1964.

Barth, Auguste. (1906). Religions of India. Translated by J. Wood. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner. 4th ed. Varanasi: Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series Office. Chowkhamba Sanskrit Studies, Vol. 25.

Bedekar, V. M. (1967). "The Legend of the Churning of the Ocean in the Epics and Purāṇas." Purāṇam 9.1, pp. 7–61.

Bhatia, H. S., ed. (1984–1986). Political, Legal and Military History of India. 10 vols. New Delhi: Deep & Deep.

Bhatt, B. N. (1976). "Estimating the Traditions of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa by the Presence or Absence of the Syllables of Gāyatrī in Them." JOIB 26.2, pp. 145–61.

Bhatt, G. H., ed. (1960). The Bālakāṇḍa: The First Book of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa: The National Epic of India. Baroda: Oriental Institute.

Bhattacharji, Sukumari. (1970). The Indian Theogony: A Comparative Study of Indian Mythology from the Vedas to the Purāṇas. London: Cambridge University Press.

Bhattacharyya, N. N. (1991). The Geographical Dictionary: Ancient and Early Medieval India. New Delhi: Munshiram Manoharlal.

Biswas, A. (1985). Indian Costumes. New Delhi: Publications Division, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Government of India.

Böhtlingk, Otto, and Rudolph Roth. (1855–1875). Sanskrit-Wörterbuch. 7 vols. St. Petersburg: Kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften. Reprint in 7 vols., Osnabrück/Wiesbaden, 1966.

Brandis, Dietrich. (1874). The Forest Flora of North-West and Central India: A Handbook of the Indigenous Trees and Shrubs of Those Countries. Reprint Dehra Dun: Bishen Singh Mahendra Pal Singh, 1972.

———. (1906). Indian Trees: An Account of Trees, Shrubs, Woody Climbers, Bamboos and Palms Indigenous or Commonly Cultivated in the British Indian Empire. Reprint Dehra Dun: Bishen Singh Mahendra Pal Singh, 1971.

Brockington, John L. (1984). Righteous Rāma: The Evolution of an Epic. Delhi: Oxford University Press.

———. (1998). The Sanskrit Epics. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

———. (2006). " 'Then in his warlike wrath Rāma bent his bow': Weaponry of the Early Rāmāyaṇa." Paper presented at the Eighteenth World Sanskrit Conference, Edinburgh, Scotland, July 10–14, 2006.

Bühler, Georg, trans. (1886). The Laws of Manu. Reprint New York: Dover, 1969. Sacred Books of the East, Vol. 25.

Bulcke, Camille. (1959–1960). "The Characterization of Hanumān." JOIB 9, pp. 393–402.

———. (1960). "The Rāmāyaṇa: Its History and Character." PO 25 (January–October), pp. 36–66.

Cawthon Lang, Kristina A. (2005). "Primate Factsheets: Rhesus macaque (Macaca mulatta) Behavior." <http://pin.primate.wisc.edu/factsheets/entry/rhesus_macaque/behav>. Accessed September 16, 2006.

Chakravarti, P. C. (1941). Art of War in Ancient India. Dacca: University of Dacca. Reprint Delhi: Oriental Publishers, 1972.

Chattopadhyay, A. (1966). "Martial Life of Brahamans in Early Medieval India as Known from the Kathasaritsagara." JOIB 16.1, pp. 52–59.

Cowen, D. V. (1965). Flowering Trees and Shrubs in India. 4th rev. ed. Bombay: Thacker.

Dange, Sadashiv A. (1969). Legends in the Mahābhārata. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.

———. (1986–1990). Encyclopaedia of Puranic Beliefs and Practices. 5 vols. New Delhi: Navrang.

Dave, K. N. (1985). Birds in Sanskrit Literature. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.
Dey, Nundo Lal. (1927). The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Mediaeval India. 2nd ed. London: Luzac and Co. Calcutta Oriental Series, no. 21, E. 13.
Dikshitar, V. R. Ramachandra. (1934–1935). "Geographical Data." Indian Culture.
———. (1944). War in Ancient India. Madras: Macmillan.
———. (1951–1955). The Purana Index. 3 vols. Madras: University of Madras.
Doniger, Wendy, and Brian K. Smith, trans. (1991). The Laws of Manu. New York: Penguin Books.
Dutt, M. N., trans. (1893). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.
Dwyer, Rachel. (2006). Filming the Gods. London: Routledge.
Emeneau, Murray B. (1953). "The Composite Bow in India." Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 99, pp. 77–87.
———. (1962). "Barkcloth in India—Sanskrit valkala." JAOS 82.2, pp. 161–70.
Fitzgerald, James L. (1998). "Some Storks and Eagles Eat Carrion; Herons and Ospreys Do Not: Kañkas and Kuraras (and Baḍas) in the Mahābhārata." JAOS 118.2, pp. 257–61.
Flack, J. C., et al. (2000a). "Being Nice Is Not a Building Block of Morality: Response to Commentary Discussion." Journal of Consciousness Studies 7:1–2, pp. 67–77.
———. (2000b). " 'Any Animal Whatever': Darwinian Building Blocks of Morality in Monkeys and Apes." Journal of Consciousness Studies 7:1–2, pp. 1–29.
———. (2000c). "Patterns of Conflict Intervention and the Control Role in Pigtail Macaque Society." American Journal of Primatology 51 (suppl. 1), p. 57.
———. (2000d). "Power, Rank, Dominance Style, and the Silent Bared-Teeth Display in Pigtail Macaque Society." American Journal of Primatology 51 (suppl. 1), pp. 57–58.
Gerow, Edwin. (1971). A Glossary of Indian Figures of Speech. The Hague: Mouton.
Giteau, Madeleine. (1951). "Le barratage de l'Ocean." Bulletin de la Société des Études Indochinoises 26.1, p. 154.
Goldman, Robert P. (1977). Gods, Priests, and Warriors: The Bhṛgus of the Mahābhārata. New York: Columbia University Press.
———. (1980). "Rāmaḥ Sahalakṣmaṇaḥ: Psychological and Literary Aspects of the Composite Hero of Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa." JIP 8, pp. 149–89.
———. (1982). "Matricide, Renunciation and Compensation in the Legends of Two Warrior-Heroes of the Sanskrit Epics." In the volume of the Proceedings of the Stockholm Conference Seminar in Indological Studies. Indologica Taurinensia 10, pp. 117–31.
———. (1986). "A City of the Heart: Mathurā and the Indian Imagination." JAOS 106.3, pp. 471–83.
———. (1989). "Tracking the Elusive Ṛkṣa: The Tradition of Bears as Rāma's Allies in Various Versions of the Rāmakathā." JAOS 109.4, pp. 545–52.
———. (1993). "Transexualism, Gender, and Anxiety in Traditional India." JAOS 113.3, pp. 374–401.
———. (1997). "Eṣa Dharmaḥ Sanātanaḥ: Situational Ethics in the Epic Age." In Relativism, Suffering and Beyond: Essays in Memory of Bimal K. Matilal. Edited by P. Bilimoria and J. N. Mohanty. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, pp. 187–223.
———. (2000). "Rāvaṇa's Kitchen: A Testimony of Desire and the Other." In Questioning Ramayanas: A South Asian Tradition. Edited by Paula Richman. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, pp. 105–16; 374–76. Reprint Delhi: Oxford University Press.

———. (2003). "How Fast Do Monkeys Fly? How Long do Demons Sleep? Reading Commentaries on Sanskrit Epic Poetry as Windows to the Knowledge Systems of Pre-Modern South Asia." Paper presented at the South Asia Seminar, University of Chicago, October 16, 2003.

———. (2004). "Resisting Rāma: Dharmic Debates on Gender and Hierarchy and the Work of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa." In The Rāmāyaṇa Revisited. Edited by Mandakranta Bose. New York: Oxford University Press, pp. 19–46.

———. (2006a). "The Spirit of the Age: Social Vision and Historical Perspective in the Mahābhārata and the Vālmīkirāmāyaṇa." In Shrutimahatī (R. K. Sharma Felicitation Volume). Delhi: Pratibha Prakashan.

———. (2006b). "How Fast Do Monkeys Fly? How Long Do Demons Sleep?" Rivista di Studi Sudasiatici, Rome, no. 1, pp. 185–207.

Goldman, Robert P., ed. and trans. (1984). The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. I, Bālakāṇḍa. Introduction by Robert P. Goldman. Annotation by Robert P. Goldman and Sally J. Sutherland. Princeton, N. J.: Princeton University Press.

Goldman, Robert P., and Sally J. Sutherland Goldman. (1994). "Vālmīki's Hanumān: Characterization and Occluded Divinity." Journal of Vaiṣṇava Studies 2.4, pp. 31–54.

———. (2004). Devavāṇīpraveśikā: An Introduction to the Sanskrit Language. Berkeley: Center for South and Southeast Asian Studies. 3rd rev. ed. 1999, reprint with corrections 2004.

Goldman, Robert P., and Sally J. Sutherland Goldman, eds. and trans. (1996). The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. V, Sundarakāṇḍa. Introduction and annotation by Robert P. Goldman and Sally J. Sutherland Goldman. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

Goldman, Sally Sutherland (Sally J. Sutherland). (1992). "Suttee, Sati, and Sahagamana: An Epic Misunderstanding." University of Delhi, St. Stephen's College, Delhi, India. (First delivered at the Nineteenth Annual Conference on South Asia, Madison, Wisconsin, November 1990.)

———. (1996). "Soul Food: Eating, Conception, and Gender in the Literature of Premodern India." Paper presented at the annual meeting of the Association of Asian Studies, Honolulu, Hawaii, April 1996. Revised version, Annual Conference on South Asia, Madison, Wisconsin, October 1996.

———. (1999). "A Tale of Two Tales: The Episode of Hanumān's Childhood in the Critical Edition." Purāṇa 41.21, pp. 132–53; JOIB 48:1–4, pp. 51–57.

———. (2000). "Anklets Away: The Symbolism of Jewelry and Ornamentation in Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa." In A Varied Optic: Contemporary Studies in the Ramayana. Edited by Mandakranta Bose. Vancouver: Institute of Asian Studies, University of British Columbia, pp. 125–53. Reissued as The Ramayana Culture: Text, Performance and Iconography. Edited by Mandakranta Bose. New Delhi: D. K. Printworld, 2003.

———. (2001). "The Voice of Sītā in Vālmīki's Sundarakāṇḍa." In Questioning Ramayanas: A South Asian Tradition. Edited by Paula Richman. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, pp. 223–38. Reprint Delhi: Oxford University Press.

———. (2003a). "Re-siting Sītā: Gender and Narrative in Vālmīki's Sundarakāṇḍa." Purāṇa 45.2, pp. 115–35.

———. (2003b). "Sītā's War: Gender and Narrative in the Yuddhakāṇḍa of Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa." Paper presented at the Twelfth World Sanskrit Conference, Helsinki, Finland, July 2003.

———. (2004a). "Gendered Narratives: Gender, Space, and Narrative Structures in Vālmīki's Bālakāṇḍa." In The Ramayana Revisited. Edited by Mandakranta Bose. New York: Oxford University Press, pp. 47–85.

———. (2004b). "Who's for Dinner?: Cannibalistic Urges in the Mahābhārata." Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Oriental Society, San Diego, March 2004.

———. (2006a). "Illusory Evidence: Māyā in the Yuddhakāṇḍa of Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa." Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Oriental Society, Seattle, Washington, March 2006.

———. (2006b). "Nikumbhilā's Grove: Rākṣasa Rites in Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa." Paper presented at the Eighteenth World Sanskrit Conference, Edinburgh, Scotland, July 2006.

———. (2006c). "Rākṣasīs and Other Others: The Archaic Mother in Bhāsa's Madhyama-vyāyoga." In Shrutimahatī (R. K. Sharma Felicitation Volume). Delhi: Pratibha Prakashan.

González-Reimann, Luis. (2006). "The Divinity of Rāma in the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki." JIP 34.3, pp. 203–20.

Gorresio, Gaspare, ed. (1843–1867). See under Texts of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.

Gorresio, Gaspare, trans. (1853–1856). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.

Grassmann, Hermann. (1872). Worterbuch zum Rig-Veda. Reprint Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1964.

Grewal, Bikram. (2000). Birds of the Indian Subcontinent. Hong Kong: Local Color.

Griffith, Ralph T. H. (1870–1874). The Ramayan of Valmiki, translated into English Verse. 5 vols. London: Trübner.

Guruge, Ananda. (1960). The Society of the Rāmāyaṇa. Maharagama, Ceylon: Saman Press.

Hammer, Niels. (unpublished). "Why Sārus Cranes Epitomize Karuṇarasa in the Rāmāyaṇa."

Hara, Minoru. (1986). "The Holding of the Hair (Kesa-grahana)." Acta Orientalia 47, pp. 67–92.

Hertel, Johannes, ed. (1908). Das Pañcatantra: A Collection of Ancient Hindu Tales. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 12.

Hopkins, Edward Washburn. (1889). "The Social and Military Position of the Ruling Caste in Ancient India, as Represented by the Sanskrit Epic; with an Appendix on the Status of Women." JAOS 13, pp. 56–372. Reprint Varanasi: Bharat-Bharati Oriental Publishers and Booksellers, 1972.

———. (1902). "Time and Age in the Sanskrit Epic." JAOS 23, pp. 350–57.

———. (1903). "Epic Chronology." JAOS 24, pp. 7–56.

———. (1915). Epic Mythology. Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde, Vol. 3, No. 1B. Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner. Reprint Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass, 1974.

———. (1932). "The Oath in the Hindu Epic." JAOS 52, pp. 316–33.
Hora, Sunder Lal. (1952). "Fish in the Rāmāyaṇa." JAS 18.2, pp. 63–69.
Ingalls, Daniel H. H. (1965). An Anthology of Sanskrit Court Poetry: Vidyākara's Subhāṣitaratnakoṣa. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 44.
Jacob, G. A. (1907). Laukikanyāyañjali: A Handful of Popular Maxims. 2 vols. Bombay: Nirṇayasāgar Press. 2nd rev. ed.
Jacobi, Hermann. (1888). Methods and Tables for Verifying Hindu Dates. Bombay: Education Society's Press.
———. (1893). Das Rāmāyaṇa: Geschichte und Inhalt, nebst Concordanz der gedruckten Recensionen. Bonn: Friedrich Cohen.
Jhala, G. C., ed. (1966). The Sundarakāṇḍa: The Fifth Book of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa: The National Epic of India. Baroda: Oriental Institute.
Jones, James. (1962). The Thin Red Line. New York: Scribner.
Kane, Pandurang V. (1941–1975). History of Dharmaśāstra. 8 vols. Poona: Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute. Vol. 1, Pt. 1 (1968); Vol. 1, Pt. 2, 2nd ed. (1975); Vol. 2, Pt. 1, 1st ed. (1941), 2nd ed. (1974); Vol. 2, Pt. 2, 2nd ed. (1974); Vol. 3, 2nd ed. (1973); Vol. 4, 2nd ed. (1973); Vol. 5, Pt. 1, 2nd ed. (1974); Vol. 5, Pt. 2 (1962).
Kapadia, B. H. (1967). "Omens, Astrology, etc. in Mṛcchakaṭikam of Śūdraka." JOIB 16.3, pp. 233–38.
Keith, Arthur Berriedale. (1914). The Veda of the Black Yajus School Entitled Taittirīya Sanhitā. 2 vols. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard Oriental Series, Vols. 18, 19.
———. (1925). The Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Harvard Oriental Series, Vols. 31, 32.
Kirfel, Willibald. (1920). Die Kosmographie der Inder nach Quellen dargestellt. Bonn-Leipzig: K. Schroeder. Reprint Hildersheim: Georg Olms, 1967.
Lassen, Christian. (1858–1874). Indische Alterthumskunde. 4 vols. Leipzig: Kittler, etc. Vol. 1 (1867); Vol. 2 (1874); Vol. 3 (1858); Vol. 4 (1861).
Law, Bimala Churn. (1944). Mountains of India. Calcutta: Calcutta Geographical Society.
———. (1954). Historical Geography of Ancient India. Paris: Société Asiatique de Paris.
Lee, J. S. (1961). "Archery in India." Society of Archer-Antiquaries Journal 4, pp. 19–22.
Lefeber, Rosalind, trans. (1994). The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. IV, Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa. Edited by Robert P. Goldman. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.
Leslie, I. Julia. (1998). "A Bird Bereaved: The Identity and Significance of Vālmīki's Krauñca." JIP 26, pp. 455–87.
———. (1999). "The Implications of the Physical Body: Health, Suffering and Karma in Hindu Thought." In Religion, Health and Suffering. Edited by John R. Hinnells and R. Porter. London: Kegan Paul, pp. 23–45.
Lüders, Heinrich. (1940). Philologica Indica. Gottingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht.
Lutgendorf, Philip. (2007). Hanuman's Tale: The Messages of a Divine Monkey. New York: Oxford University Press.
Macdonell, Arthur Anthony. (1897). Vedic Mythology. Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner. Edited by Georg Bühler. Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde, III Band, 1. Heft A.

Macdonell, Arthur Anthony, and Arthur Berriedale Keith. (1967). Vedic Index of Names and Subjects. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.

Maestripieri, D. (1999a). "The Biology of Human Parenting: Insights from Nonhuman Primates." Neuroscience and Biobehavioral Reviews 23.3, pp. 411–22.

———. (1999b). "Changes in Social Behavior and Their Hormonal Correlates during Pregnancy in Pig-Tailed Macaques." International Journal of Primatology 20.5, pp. 707–18.

———. (1999c). "Consistency and Change in the Behavior of Rhesus Macaque Abusive Mothers with Successive Infants." Developmental Psychobiology 34.1, pp. 29–35.

———. (1999d). "Fatal Attraction: Interest in Infants and Infant Abuse in Rhesus Macaques." American Journal of Physical Anthropology 110.1, pp. 17–25.

———. (1999e). "Formal Dominance: The Emperor's New Clothes?" Journal of Comparative Psychology 113.1, pp. 96–98.

———. (1999f). "Primate Social Organization, Gestural Repertoire Size, and Communication Dynamics: A Comparative Study of Macaques." In The Origins of Language: What Nonhuman Primates Can Tell Us. Edited by J. B. King. Santa Fe: School of American Research Press, pp. 55–77.

Majumdar, Bimal Kanti. (1955). The Military System in Ancient India. Calcutta: World Press.

Mani, Vettam. (1975). Purāṇic Index. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.

Mayrhofer, Manfred. (1956–1980). Kurzgefasstes etymologisches Wörterbuch des Altindischen. 4 vols. Heidelberg: C. Winter.

Meister, Michael, et al. (1988). Encyclopaedia of Indian Temple Architecture. Vol. 2, North India: Foundations of North Indian Style. New Delhi: American Institute of Indian Studies. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

Monier-Williams, Monier. (1899). A Sanskrit-English Dictionary. Oxford: Oxford University Press. Reprint 1964.

Morgenstern, Joseph. (2000). "The Thin Red Line." In Screening Violence. Edited by Steven Prince. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, pp. 47–50.

Mumme, Patricia Y. (1991). "Rāmāyaṇa Exegesis in Teñkalai Śrīvaiṣṇavism." In Many Rāmāyaṇas: The Diversity of a Narrative Tradition in South Asia. Edited by Paula Richman. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, pp. 202–16.

Narayan, Pande Syam. (1980). Geographical Horizon of the Mahābhārata. Varanasi: Bharata Bharati.

O'Flaherty, Wendy Doniger. (1971). "The Submarine Mare in the Mythology of Śiva." JRAS 1, pp. 9–27.

———. (1975). Hindu Myths. Middlesex, England: Penguin Books.

Oldenberg, Hermann. (1894). Die Religion des Veda. Translated by Shridhar B. Shrotri. Reprint Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass, 1988.

Omprakash. (1961). Food and Drinks in Ancient India. Delhi: Munshiram Manoharlal.

———. (1987). Economy and Food in Ancient India. 2 vols. Delhi: Bharatiya Vidya Prakashan.

Oppert, Gustav. (1880). On the Weapons, Army Organisation, and Political Maxims of the Ancient Hindus, with Special Reference to Gunpowder and Firearms. Madras: Higgenbothem. Reprint Ahmedabad: New Order Book Co., 1967.

Pagani, Brigitte. (1999). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.

Pillai, Swamikannu, L. D. (Lewis Dominic). (1922). An Indian ephemeris, A.D. 700 to A.D. 1799, showing the daily solar and lunar reckoning according to the principal systems current in India, with their English equivalents, also the ending moments of tithis and nakshatras and the years in different eras, A.D., Hijra, Saka, Vikrama, Kaliyuga, Kollam etc., with a perpetual planetary almanac and other auxiliary tables. Reprint Delhi: Agam 1982.

———. (1922–1923). An Indian Ephemeris, A.D. 700 to A.D. 1999. 7 vols. Madras: Government Press.

Pingree, David, ed. and trans. (1978). The Yavanajātaka of Sphujidhvaja. 2 vols. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 48.

Pollock, Sheldon. (1984a). "The Rāmāyaṇa Text and the Critical Edition." In The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. I, Bālakāṇḍa. Introduction by Robert P. Goldman. Annotation by Robert P. Goldman and Sally J. Sutherland. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, pp. 82–93.

———. (1984b). "The Divine King in the Indian Epic." JAOS 104, pp. 505–28.

———. (1996). "The Sanskrit Cosmopolis, 300–1300: Transculturation, Vernacularization and the Question of Ideology." In The Ideology and Status of Sanskrit. Edited by Jan E.M. Houben. Leiden: E. J. Brill, pp. 197–247.

———, trans. (1986). The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. II, Ayodhyākāṇḍa. Edited by Robert P. Goldman. Introduction and annotation by Sheldon Pollock. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

———. (1991). The Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki: An Epic of Ancient India. Vol. III, Araṇyakāṇḍa. Edited by Robert P. Goldman. Introduction and annotation by Sheldon Pollock. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

Preuschoft, S., et al. (2000). "Dominance Style or Phylogenetic Affiliation: What Predicts the Social Functions of Affiliative Facial Displays in Pigtailed Macaques." American Journal of Primatology 51 (suppl. 1), pp. 82–83.

Prince, Steven. (1998). Savage Cinema: Sam Peckinpah and the Rise of Ultraviolent Movies. Austin: University of Texas Press.

———, ed. (2000a). Screening Violence. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press.

———. (2000b). "Graphic Violence in the Cinema: Origins, Aesthetic Design, and Social Effects." In Screening Violence. Edited by Steven Prince. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, pp. 1–46.

———. (2000c). "The Aesthetic of Slow-Motion Violence in the Films of Sam Peckinpah." In Screening Violence. Edited by Steven Prince. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, pp. 175–204.

———. (2003). Classical Film Violence: Designing and Regulating Brutality in Hollywood Cinema, 1930–1968. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press.

Raghunathan, N., trans. (1982). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.

Rao, T. A. Gopinatha. (1914). Elements of Hindu Iconography. 2 vols. Madras: The Law Printing House. Reprint Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass, 1985.

Renou, Louis. (1954). Vocabulaire du Rituel Védique. Paris: Librairie C. Klincksieck.

Roussel, Alfred, trans. (1903). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.

Ruben, Walter. (1936). Studien zur Textgeschichte des Rāmāyaṇa. Stuttgart: Verlag W. Kohlhammer.

Sahay, Sachidanand. (1975). Indian Costume, Coiffure and Ornament. New Delhi: Munshiram Manoharlal.

Salomon, Richard. (1998). Indian Epigraphy: A Guide to the Study of Inscriptions in Sanskrit, Prakrit, and the Other Indo-Aryan Languages. New York: Oxford University Press.

Sankalia, H. D. (1973). Ramayana: Myth or Reality? New Delhi: People's Publishing House.

Sarkar, Jagadish Narayan. (1984). The Art of War in Medieval India. New Dehli: Munshiram Manoharlal.

Seely, Clinton, trans. (2004). The Slaying of Meghanada: A Ramayana from Colonial Bengal. Translation of Michael Madhusudhan Datta's Meghanadabadha kabya. New York: Oxford University Press.

Sensarma, P. (1979). Military Wisdom in the Purāṇas. Calcutta: Naya Prakash.

Sharma, Ramashraya. (1971). A Socio-Political Study of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.

Sharma, Ram Karan. (1964). Elements of Poetry in the Mahābhārata. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press.

Sharma, S. K. (1996). "Vidyā, Veda: Their Genesis, Scope, and Illustration." In Education in Ancient India. Shri S. B. Velankar Felicitation Volume. Edited by Vijay V. Bedekar. Thane: Itihas Patrika Prakashan, pp. 23–47.

Shastri, Hari Prasad, trans. (1952–1959). See under Translations of the Yuddhakāṇḍa.

Shukla, R. K. (2003). The Geography of the Rāmāyaṇa. Delhi: Koshal Book Depot.

Singh, Sarva Daman. (1965). Ancient Indian Warfare, with special reference to the Vedic period. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

Slatin, Patricia. (2006). "Heroes on an Indo-European Beach? Reflections on Studies by David A. Krooks and Alain Renoir." Interdisciplinary Journal for Germanic Linguistic and Semiotic Analysis 11.2, pp. 137–61.

Smith, William. (1988). Rāmāyaṇa Traditions in Eastern India. Stockholm: Department of Indology, Stockholm University.

Sobchack, Vivian C. (2000). "The Violent Dance: A Personal Memoir of Death in the Movies." In Screening Violence. Edited by Steven Prince. New Brunswick, N. J.: Rutgers University Press, pp. 110–24.

Sternbach, Ludwik. (1965–1967). The Juridical Studies in Ancient Indian Law. 2 vols. Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass.

———. (1967). Cāṇakyanīti Text Tradition. 2 vols. Hoshiapur: Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute.

Sutherland, Sally J. (Sally J. Sutherland Goldman). (1979). "Śukrācārya the Demons' Priest: Aspects of Character Development in Sanskrit Mythological Literature." Ph.D. dissertation. University of California, Berkeley.

———. (1989). "Draupadi and Sītā: Aggressive Behavior and Female Role-Models." JAOS 109.1, pp. 63–67.

———. (1992). "The Text Which Is No Text: Critical Edition as Text." In Translation East and West: A Cross-Cultural Approach, Selected Conference Papers. Edited by Cornelia N. Moore and Lucy Lower. Honolulu: East West Center, University of Hawaii at Manoa, pp. 82–92.

Swamikannu Pillai, Lewis Dominic. See Pillai, Swamikannu, L. D. (Lewis Dominic).

Te Nijenhuis, Emmie. (1970). Dattilam: A Compendium of Ancient Indian Music. Introduction, translation, and commentary. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

———. (1974). Indian Music: History and Structure. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

Thieme, Paul. (1975). "Kranich und Reiher im Sanskrit." In Studien zur Indologie und Iranistik 1, pp. 3–36.

Tubb, Gary. (2006). "If You Don't Mind: bhadraṃ te in the Sanskrit Epics." Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Oriental Society, Seattle, Washington, March 2006.

Vaidya, Parashuram Lakshman, ed. (1971). The Yuddhakāṇḍa: The Sixth Book of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa: The National Epic of India. Baroda: Oriental Institute.

Vyas, S. N. (1967). India in the Rāmāyaṇa Age. Delhi: Atma Ram and Sons.

White, David Gordon. (1996). The Alchemical Body: Siddha Traditions in Medieval India. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

———. (2003). Kiss of the Yogini: "Tantric Sex" in Its South Asian Contexts. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Whitney, William Dwight. (1889). A Sanskrit Grammar: Including Both the Classical Language, and the Older Dialects, of Veda and Brahmana. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. Reprint 1967.

Wilhelm, Friedrich. (1960). Politische Polemiken im Staatslehrbuch des Kauṭalya. Wiesbaden: O. Harrassowitz.

Wilson, H. H., trans. (1864–1877). The Vishṇu Purāṇa: A System of Hindu Mythology and Tradition. 5 vols. Edited by Fitzedward Hall. London: Trübner and Co.

Yule, Henry, and A. C. Burnell. (1903). Hobson-Jobson: A glossary of colloquial Anglo-Indian words and phrases, and of kindred terms, etymological, historical, geographical and discursive. London: J. Murray. 2nd ed., edited by William Crooke. Delhi: Munshiram Manoharlal, 1968.

Index

abduction: Rāmāyaṇa as tale of, 103–4; of Sītā, 30, 56, 94, 100, 129, 131, 133, 140, 144, 149, 167, 200, 267, 394, 425, 473, 476, 528, 531, 539. 545–46, 560, 565–66, 569–70, 584, 591, 602–3, 697, 716, 726, 735, 783, 844, 870, 879, 892, 900, 902, 911, 942, 966, 974, 1182, 1265, 1304, 1333, 1380, 1385, 1390, 1393, 1431, 1443, 1456, 1493, 1507; of Sītā, chronology of, 1490; of Takṣaka's wife, 556; of women, 74–75, 709, 931, 1392

abhicāra, 25, 28, 39, 1075, 1151, 1186, 1194. See also Indrajit, sacrifice of; sacrifices

Abhīras, 614

abhiṣeka. See consecration action: fivefold application of the three types of, 35, 274, 943, 947. See also strategems

adharma. See dharma

Adhyātmarāmāyaṇa, 41, 104, 1320, 1422, 1503

Ādityahṛdaya, 1341–48, 1389, 1446; Agastya as seer of, 1341; —narrates, 1341–43, 1344–48; Agni in, 1342–44; Hiraṇyagarbha in, 1342; recited in times of trouble, 1348; Vāyu in, 1342, 1344–45

Agastya, 23; ashram of, 473; bolsters Rāma's confidence, 1342; Brahmā gives Rāma's arrow to, 437, 1372; destroys Ilvala and Vātāpī, 1434; drinks up ocean, 1182; honors Lakṣmaṇa, 895; imprisions Krauñca, 881; narrates Ādityahṛdaya, 1341–43, 1344–48; narrates exploits of Hanumān, 62; as seer of Ādityahṛdaya, 1341; tells Rāma how long Kumbhakarṇa sleeps, 909; wins southern regions back, 455, 1433–44

Agni, 201, 260, 277, 290, 324, 328, 422, 646; in Ādityahṛdaya, 1342–44; agnihotra as oblation to, 685, 709, 1347; of the black path, 163, 643; carries Sītā from pyre, 54, 461, 1455–56; criticizes Rāma, 49; divine weapon-spells of, 221, 256–57, 320, 321, 411, 889, 1061, 1062, 1297; father of Krathana, 163; father of Nīla, 172, 249, 256, 871, 890, 934; god of fire, kennings for, 643, 646; as guardian of southeast, 1248; Hanumān equal to, 328; in head of Rāma's arrow, 23, 437, 1372; Indrajit offers oblations to, 324, 349, 1073, 1076, 1077; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 290; orders Rāma to accept Sītā, 462; Rāma defends himself against, 49; regards Sītā as daughter, 1456; returns Sītā to Rāma unharmed, 461; Sītā swears fidelity to Rāma to, 458, 1441; testifies to Sītā's purity, 54, 461; unable to save Rāvaṇa, 260; uses power to spare chosen individuals from being burned, 890; as Vaiśvānara, 66, 164, 260, 298, 312, 322, 328, 349, 473, 474, 646, 900, 901, 1015, 1045, 1089, 1456, 1488; as witness of people's actions, 1456; as wrath of Viṣṇu, 460. See also fire agnihotra, 187, 685, 709, 1252, 1343, 1347, 1401, 1402. See also Agni; fire

Agniketu, 139, 206–8, 1213

agniparīkṣā. See fire ordeal

agniṣṭoma, 178, 684, 799

Āgniveśya, 108, 538, 832, 1379

Ahirāvaṇa, 4

Āhuka, 327; Indrajit strikes down, 327

Airāvata, 127, 302, 312, 571, 733, 1004, 1026, 1046; commentators discuss meaning of, 1127–28; Sudarśana born in lineage of, 302, 1026

aiṣīka, 320, 1063

Aja, 229, 827–28
Akampana (I), 597, 845; battles Hanumān, 240–41, 851; battles monkeys, 239; crushes mountain, 240; death of, mentioned, 377, 472; death of, occurs at end of the fourth day of battle, 853, 1253; Hanumān kills, 63, 241; identification of, 875; ignores ominous signs, 237; Rāvaṇa dejected at death of, 242; Rāvaṇa orders to lead troops, 237; reports slaughter of Janasthāna rākṣasas to Rāvaṇa, 844; suggests abduction of Sītā to Rāvaṇa, 844; as unshakeable, 237
Akampana (II), 251; etymology of name of, 875; identification of, 875
Akṣa, 255, 267, 560, 886, 1266 akṣauhiṇī. See army Alakā, 1138, 1524
alaṃkāras, 24; ananvaya, 1367; atiśayokti, 24, 922, 939; śāstrins, 1154; upameyopamā, 543, 1367; vākya, 537, 743, 1138; viṣama, 1246. See also poetic figures āmalaka. See myrobalan wood
Amarakośa, 782, 799, 860, 951; on alam, 503, 1015–16; on anubandha, 942; on anukarṣa, 1027; on apasavya, 859; on ariṣṭa, 1014; on arka, 1072; on ārya, 688; on atha, 647; on aṭṭa, 1108; on dāyada, 718; on dhenu, 1540–41; on diggaja, 1046; on kambu, 1152; on kaulina, 970; on kūbara, 1322; on lakṣmaṇa, 1230; on manyu, 1473; on military units, 1261, 1277; on nanu, 805; on nivāta, 977; on pakṣa, 1161; on prakīrṇa, 1323; on saciva, 648; on śaṅkha, 1280; on sādhu, 1110; on siṃhasaṃhanana, 668; on tiṣya, 708; on tūṇīra, 1055; on vana in sense of water, 521; on vīrya, 903; on vyāma, 634, 979; on yāvat, 668
Amarāvatī (Indra's city), 195, 303, 342, 474, 1028, 1138 ambiguity: of French translation, 1423; of Rāma's divinity, 626; of text, 502, 505, 520–21, 524, 528, 546, 548–50, 553, 579, 584, 598–99, 610–11, 613, 618, 621, 631, 636, 655, 658, 669, 672, 674, 679, 688, 698, 703–4, 727, 751, 761, 763, 792, 813, 816, 820, 825, 869, 871, 877, 880, 885, 888, 891, 905, 947, 955, 961, 963–64, 969, 1124, 1174, 1187, 1199, 1220, 1400, 1462; of the term satī, 1250; in Vālmīki's portrayal of Vibhīṣaṇa, 83; of words, 102, 654, 706, 797, 824, 1088, 1233, 1250, 1353, 1375, 1430
Anala (I) (vānara) (v.l. Nala), 1536
Anala (II) (one of Vibhīṣaṇa's counselors), 191, 576, 719, 723, 724
Analā (Saramā's daughter), 690
Anaraṇya, 559, 652, 907 ancestors, 178, 381; Anaraṇya as Rāma's, 652; of Daśaratha, 178; deceased, 574; of Ikṣvākus, 681; pitṛ as term for, 681, 683, 1017; pitṛmedha as sacrifice to, 1403; Sagara as Rāma's, 600, 617
Andhaka, 206, 762
Aṅgada, 68–69, 126, 139, 175, 190, 194, 212, 214, 218, 224, 226, 271, 326; addresses Nala, 287; —Rāma concerning Vibhīṣaṇa, 145, 581; —Rāvaṇa, 201–2; advises Sugrīva, 225; Akampana challenges, 337; allows himself to be captured, 202; ancestors of, 178; armlets of, 307, 674, 750, 989, 1035; attacks Rāvaṇa's palace, 201–2; Bharata embraces, 485; carries Lakṣmaṇa, 64, 127, 129, 522, 527, 622–23, 727; climbs Mount Suvela, 194; confronts Rāvaṇa, 203; delivers Rāma's speech to Rāvaṇa, 201–2, 745; described, 632; enters women's quarters to drag Mandodarī by her hair, 1320; fights Devāntaka, 309–10; —Indrajit, 77, 206–7, 325, 327, 773–74; —Kumbha, 337, 338, 1130; —Mahāpārśva, 406–7; —Mahodara, 309; —Narāntaka, 307, 309; —Nikumbha, 337, 1130; —Triśiras, 309, 310; —Vajradaṃṣṭra, 842–44; —with iron club, 406, 407; grandson of Śakra, 172, 995; Hanumān and Nīla come to aid of, 310; hears Sugrīva's words, 225; Indrajit strikes down, 327; kills Indrajit's charioteer and horses, 211; —Mahāpārśva, 407; —Mahodara's elephant, 309; —Narāntaka, 308, 877; loses consciousness, 338, 1129–30; Mahāparśva slaughters army of, 406; maintains watch, 218; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; rallies monkeys, 285–88; Rāma orders, to attack Mahāpārśva and Mahodara, 192; —, to find Indrajit, 212; —,to lead the monkeys across ocean, 224; —, to serve as emissary to Rāvaṇa, 200–201; Rāma posts at southern gate, 192, 199, 740; —presents armlets to, 492, 1541; Rāvaṇa orders ministers to kill, 202; reassures monkeys regarding Kumbhakarṇa, 286; Sāraṇa describes, 160; seized by four rākṣasas, 751; seizes mountain peaks, 271; smashes Indrajit's chariot, 207; Sugrīva orders, to advance, 307; Sugrīva rescues, 339, 1129–30; suspects Vibhīṣaṇa unworthy of trust, 146; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; taunts monkeys for cowardice, 984; tells Sugrīva why monkeys flee, 225; thirsts for battle, 337; unable to help Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 326; uses Indrajit's mace, 763; uses iron club, 407; as yuvarāja, 160, 946, 1376, 1486

Angkor Wat, 648

Anila: as father of Hanumān, 172, 255, 292, 311–12, 343, 490, 997, 1190, 1415, 1533; identity of, 719, 1538; as name of Vibhīṣaṇa's companion, 719 animals: as adhering to dharma, 591; arrowheads shaped as faces of, 1296; beating of, to prepare army for battle, 694–95; beating of, to wake Kumbhakarṇa, 918; as despondent, 1540; distinguished from aquatic animals, 905; five-clawed, 819; land, 905; marine, types of, 502, 510, 540–42, 544, 567, 605–9, 613–14, 730, 905; as metaphors, 110–11; as military mounts, 720, 835; miscegenation among, as evil omen, 712; as motifs, 1152; as omens, 129, 567, 711–12, 736, 738, 846, 859, 981, 1354–55; rākṣasas as having heads of, 835; savage, 1091; scavenger, 1296; types of, 535, 819, 1297. See also antelope; ape; bear; bird; langur; monkeys; serpent antaḥpura. See inner apartments

antaka (Ender of all things), 522; as Death, 367, 409, 1035, 1293; Kāla as, 172, 244, 298, 320, 321, 371, 667, 859, 991, 1014, 1062, 1198; translation of, 110; Yama as, 172, 241, 252–53, 290, 306, 311, 386–87, 396, 522, 668, 843, 851, 975, 1003, 1005, 1034, 1043, 1242, 1293. See also Death; Kāla; Yama antelope, 835; black, skin of, 60, 477–78, 484, 1501; spotted (raṅku), skin of, 1402–3 anugamana, 1250–51, 1458; of Kausalyā, 390, 1251; practice of a wife accompanying her husband in death, 686–87, 1270. See also satī

ape(s) (ṛkṣa), 110, 385, 523, 536, 539, 591, 640, 719, 1419; Kumbhakarṇa devours, 294, 295

Araṇyakāṇḍa, 50, 558, 653, 906, 1145; abduction of Sītā in, 783, 1265, 1505, 1507; Dūṣaṇa's death in, 788; Kabandha in, 1265; Lakṣmaṇa honored in, 895; Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa fight rākṣasas in, 100, 668, 788, 797, 804, 844, 873, 966, 1147; Rāma kills Khara in, 565, 788, 1020; —Triśiras in, 877; —Virādha in, 1010, 1265; Rāma's and Lakṣmaṇa's heroic feats in, 797; Rāvaṇa enlists aid of Mārīca in, 84; Sītā asks Rāma to catch the golden deer in, 51

archery, 24, 437, 814, 1114; blind, 769, 780; Indrajit's skill at, 340; Lakṣmaṇa surpasses Kārtavīrya in, 224, 814;

archery (continued)
positions of, 1216; Rāvaṇa's skill at, 884; Rudra's skill at, 1099; science of, 1133, 1374; techniques of, 1148, 1216, 1219, 1374 architect: of the asuras, see Maya; of the gods, see Viśvakarman; of the monkeys, see Nala; of the rākṣasas, 913 architecture: of ancient Indian fortress, 195, 198, 508–9; of bridges, 125, 126, 274, 510–12, 515, 934, 1281; of defensive structures and fortifications, 63, 124–25, 160, 196, 507, 513, 727, 732, 753–54, 879, 1244, 1373; of drawbridges, 511, 934; features of, 1473; of gateways, 124, 160, 196, 198, 200, 262, 330, 333, 437, 508, 722, 732, 879–80, 908, 1000, 1021, 1068, 1108, 1112, 1288, 1373; of Laṅkā, 124–26, 195–96, 333–36, 879, 1287; terms of, 1473; of towers (aṭṭa), 196, 204, 333, 515, 756, 1108, 1287; of watchtowers, 125, 507, 512
Ariṣṭa, Mount, 1093, 1096
Arjuna (I), 41; battles Kālakeyas, 557; conflict of, in Bhagavadgītā, 48, 1309; kapidhvaja as epithet of, 1152; mastery of blind archery ascribed to, 769; mental afflictions of, 1309; must choose between svadharma and kinsmen, 48; Yudhiṣṭhira's anxiety over failure of, to return, 911 arjuna (II) (Terminalia arjuna), 90, 155, 195, 535 Arjuna Kārtavīrya, 224, 814
armguards, 347, 350, 374–75, 393, 416, 1148, 1155, 1209, 1219, 1261, 1308; leather, 1205 armor, 238, 847, 1033, 1121, 1426; of Atikāya, from Brahmā, 315, 320–21, 1049, 1064; golden, of Kumbhakarṇa, 283, 977–78; golden, of rākṣasas, 20, 210; of Indra, given to Rāma, 420, 1246; of Indrajit, 369, 375, 382; of Lakṣmaṇa, 365, 372, 380, 1201, 1224–25; of the rākṣasas, 182, 198, 206, 232, 244, 305, 336, 391, 410; Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa lack, 19; of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 219, 796–97; of Rāvaṇa, from Brahmā, 301, 388; of residents of Laṅkā, 333; of Sugrīva, 402, 1280, 1284 army, classical (caturaṅgabala), 200, 722, 753; as akṣauhiṇī, 753; divisions of, 19, 391, 514, 978–79; numbers in, 514, 753, 1261 arrow(s): animal heads of, 410–11; of Atikāya, 314; bed of, 223–24, 782, 785, 807, 811, 813; celestial heads of, 411; darken battlefield, 1333; as eagles, 421; fletching of, 258, 298, 319, 321, 435, 780, 837, 1148, 1203, 1293; of Indra, 298; of Indrajit, 46, 50, 56, 65, 78, 82, 87, 100, 212, 228, 232, 775, 779, 820, 828, 829, 1194, 1206, 1228, 1324, 1486; —Garuḍa frightens off, 228; of iron, see iron arrows; of Lakṣmaṇa, 321; rākṣasas fear, of Rāma, 335; of Rāma, 421, 437, 1372–74; Rāvaṇa fears, of Rāma, 262; resemble cobras, 350; serpentlike, 153, 210, 212; as serpents, 420–21; types of, 784, 850, 892, 1296–97, 1300, 1324, 1331. See also in the Glossary of Weapons
artha: as polity, statecraft, 28, 36, 39, 744, 947–48, 963, 965, 966; as puruṣārtha, 946, 1178, 1432
Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya, 37, 948, 950; describes fortification, 508; does not use the term kramayoga, 744; on four vidyās, 706; on king's consultation with ministers, 943; on six guṇas, 706; on trivarga, 964; on types of action, 943–44; on the upāyas, 563
Arundhatī, 443, 473, 1390 aśani: as lightning bolt, 765, 893, 903, 997, 1118–19, 1299, 1302–3; as weapon, 903, 997, 1118–19, 1144, 1299. See also vajra Aśaniprabha, 207–8, 765, 1213 ascetic, 1403; Anasūyā as, 473, 1488; Mārīca as, 84; Rāvaṇa in guise of, 25–26, 892

asceticism: and bathing, 1492; of Bharata, 1470, 1492, 1498, 1501; of Indrajit, 1184; of Lakṣmaṇa, 19; of Rāma, 19, 61, 177, 677, 1491, 1592; of Śatrughna, 1528; of Sītā, 1160, 1390; of Śiva, 1101 ashram: of Agastya, 473, 1487; of Atri, 473, 1487, 1488, 1490; of Bharadvāja, 43, 58, 474, 1488, 1489–90, 1491, 1495; of Bharata, 60, 477, 486; of Rāma and Sītā, 26, 480, 1393; 1487, 1506; of Śarabhaṅga, 473, 480, 1487, 1505; of Sutīkṣṇa, 1487
aśoka grove: as amenity of women's quarters, 1534; destruction of, 498; Hanumān offers to kill rākṣasīs of, 449; —penetrates, 1542; —returns to, 95; locus of Sītā's captivity, 174, 184, 218, 389, 481, 701–2, 795, 810, 1068–69, 1508; Rāvaṇa enters, 174; —leaves, 179; Sītā returns to, 222; —taken from, in Puṣpakavimāna, 218; Sugrīva housed adjacent to, 490, 1534
Asta, Mount, 251, 303, 383, 419, 875–76, 1026, 1319; in Ādityahṛdaya, 1343, 1346; sun sets behind, 383, 419, 1231, 1319; Sūrya perched on, 302–3, 1026
Aṣṭāvakra, 464, 1461
astras. See divine weapon-spells; weapons astrologers: daivacintakas, 564; Sītā criticizes, 53, 220, 221, 679, 680 astrology, 421–22, 527, 922, 1381, 1512; injunctions in, for a journey, 529; naidhana as House of Death in, 520; planetary alignment in, 1204; predicts auspicious moments, 516, 518–20, 529–31, 679, 738; science of (jyotiḥśāstra), 679, 738 astronomy, 1325–26, 1411, 1507, 1512, 1527; in ancient India, 1252; eclipses in, 707; Kāśyapa on, 1381; Kirfel on, 1326 asuras, 33, 293, 363, 1265; abode of, 132; army of Rāma unassailable by, 159, 200; Atikāya invulnerable to, 315, 1049; battle between gods and, 163, 205, 209, 227–28, 273, 378, 382, 532, 640, 642, 643, 759, 770, 940–41, 1245–46, 1328; Brahmā creates, 33, 186; cannot break bonds of Indrajit, 215, 229; citadels of, smashed, 1184; daityas and dānavas as synonyms of, 1232; devoted to adharma, 708; divine weapon-spell of, 410–11; as enemies of the gods, 542; exhort Rāvaṇa, 423; hostility of, to the gods, 423, 1328; Indrajit's arrow could withstand, 381; Kumbhakarṇa conquers, 1133; lord of, compared with Rāvaṇa, 243; Maya, architect of, 411, 414, 1268, 1299, 1302; nature of, tāmasic and rājasic 707; Nivātakavacas as class of, 940, 1394; powers of illusion of, 822; Rāvaṇa battles, 1246; —arouses enmity of, 898; —does not fear, 300, 388, 440; skill of, at archery, 822; Tripura as citadel of, 1009, 1059, 1099, 1268; unable to conquer Laṅkā, 190; —to defeat Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 222; —to reach Laṅkā, 151; Uśanas Kāvya (Śukrācārya), purohita of, 245, 822, 855; way of, unrighteousness, 186 aśvakarṇa tree, 618
aśvamedha. See Horse Sacrifice
Āśvina (September–October), 870, 906, 1067, 1087, 1105, 1150, 1167, 1238, 1255, 1308, 1319–20, 1377–79, 1405
Aśvins, 322, 1071, 1342; as ears of Supreme Lord (Rāma), 459, 1445; Mainda and Dvivida, sons of, 172, 582
Atikāya, 139, 472, 563, 1024, 1026, 1028, 1056, 1059–60, 1062–63, 1066–69, 1379; armor of, from Brahmā, 315, 320–21, 1049, 1064; austerities of, 315, 1048; boons of, 302; —, from Brahmā, 313, 315, 321, 1023, 1048, 1054; chariot of, 303, 313, 315, 1052; chronology of death of, 1067, 1253; compared to Kāla, 314, 317; compared to Viṣṇu, 313; defeated gods and dānavas, 315; description of, 251, 302–3, 313–15, 875–76, 1027, 1048–50, 1052, 1054–55; diadem of, 1048;

Atikāya (continued)
divine weapon-spells of, 302, 315, 1049, 1062; does not strike those who do not resist, 315; fights Lakṣmaṇa, 317–22; —monkeys, 316; garland of, red, 314, 1052; grief-stricken at Kumbhakarṇa's death, 299; Kumbhakarṇa as uncle of, 317, 1020; Lakṣmaṇa kills, 321–22; Mahodara and Mahāpārśva as uncles of, 1048; —dispatched to protect, 302; monkeys flee at sight of, 315; Rāma spies, 313; Rāvaṇa embraces, 302; —grieves death of, 322, 1266; —informed of death of, 1069–70; —sends, to fight, 302; repels Varuṇa's noose, 315; sees brothers and Mahodara and Mahāpārśva killed, 313; size of, 251, 876, 1049; son of Dhānyamālinī, 315; terrifies monkey army, 313; twangs bow, 313, 316; Vāyu tells Lakṣmaṇa how to kill, 321; weapons of, 314–17 atiśayokti. See alaṃkāras auspicious articles, 446–47, 489, 1409, 1533 auspicious signs: barleycorn as, 220, 803; clockwise direction as, 324, 349, 859–60, 1077, 1350, 1486; conjunction of moon and Puṣya as, 482, 1378, 1512, 1528; Lakṣmaṇa marked with, 45, 57, 152, 362, 366, 372, 384, 417, 588, 604, 1157, 1184, 1190, 1201, 1234, 1318; in Rāma, 427, 1309; Sītā marked with, 220, 801–4; svastika as, 1533; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 747. See also omens, auspicious; sāmudrikaśāstra avatāra, 107, 1454; ambiguous nature of, 689; colors of, 1305; commentators' understanding of, 101, 831; divine seers possess knowledge of, 1449; heroes as partial (aṃśāvatāra), 50; Lakṣmaṇa as, of Śeṣa, 547, 1453, 1463; —, of Viṣṇu, 1463; Pollock on, 713; Vaiṣṇava framings of theology of, 33, 50. See also Kṛṣṇāvatara; Narasiṃhāvatara; Rāmāvatāra; vāmanāvatāra; varāhāvatāra; Viṣṇu
Aviddha, 184, 702, 703, 1251
Ayodhyā, 17, 18, 37, 94, 95, 479, 486, 488, 490; Bharadvāja instructs Rāma to enter, 475; citizens of, travel to Nandigrama, 483; description of, 474; as eternal playground of Rāma, 1454; female monkeys as travelling companions of Sītā on way to, 1529; gods tell Rāma to proceed to, 467; Hanumān spies Bharata a quarter league from, 477; Lakṣmaṇa foretells Rāma's victorious return to, 129; Maheśvara instructs Rāma to take kingship of, 463; monkeys and rākṣasas wish to see, 471, 1495; paths to, described, 475, 1494; Rāma sends Hanumān to, 476–77; —takes leave to return to, 471; return of Rāma to, 25, 41, 43, 59–60, 82, 468, 487–90, 1405, 1489–91; Sāketa as heavenly city of, 1459; Saramā foretells Sītā's return to, 185; visibility of, from Bharadvāja's ashram, 1489, 1495
Ayodhyākāṇḍa, 3, 28, 38, 652, 684, 1518, 1544–45; agnostic views of Lakṣmaṇa in, 1169; banishment of Rāma in, 41; Bharata begs Rāma to return to Ayodhyā in, 1472; conscripted laborers in, 1514; conversation between Sītā and Anasūyā in, 1429; Daśaratha renounces Kaikeyī and Bharata in, 1462; Daśaratha's death and funeral in, 1251; discourse with Jābāli in, 38, 56, 652; events of, 58; journey to Citrakūṭa in, 61; outburst of Lakṣmaṇa in, 38, 814, 1175; Rāma as prince regent in, 946; Sītā critiques Rāma's attempt to persuade her to stay in Ayodhyā in, 51; succession struggle in, 59; term svayaṃvara in, 1429

bakamantra, 972
Bala, 373, 1204
Bālakāṇḍa, 4, 20, 94, 666, 762; aborted fetus of Diti become vātaskandhas in, 1138; ancestry of monkeys given in,

669; as belonging to latest stratum of epic, 96–97; birth of Kārttikeya in, 1148; critical principles laid out in, 751, 808, 869; daughters of Kuśanābha in, 1429; divine weapon-spells in, 1005, 1012, 1061, 1063; encounters with rākṣasas in, 100; Horse Sacrifice in, 1459; Introduction to, 99; Lakṣmaṇa described in, 653; marriage of Rāghavas in, 1529; nocturnal powers of rākṣasas in, 767; parentage of Suṣeṇa in, 667; promise of Viṣṇu in, 1459; putreṣṭi in, 1526; reign of Rāma in, 1546, 1547; roaring of monkeys knock birds from sky in, 730; slaying of Tāṭakā in, 1012; story of churning of ocean in, 823; —of descent of Ganges in, 600, 1488; —of Rāma Jāmadagnya in, 675; —of Sagara in, 600, 1482; —of Triśaṅku in, 681; svayaṃvara of Sītā in, 1429; terms for sacrificer in, 799; wrist and finger guards in, 1148
Balarāma (Saṃkarṣaṇa), 1066, 1453
Bali, 340, 460, 853, 900, 1132, 1454 barkcloth: of Bharata, 60, 477–78, 484, 1501; Emeneau on, 677; of Rāma, 60, 177, 474, 478, 677, 1492
basilisk, 1307
battle, 19; between gods and asuras, 163, 205, 209, 227–28, 273, 378, 382, 640, 642–43, 759, 770, 940–41, 1245–46, 1328; —takes place in Kṛtayuga, 532; description of, as music recital, 235; duration of, 436, 534, 1370–71, see also chronology of the epic; night, 20–21, 209–12, 335–36, 767–70; rules of engagement in, 410 battle banner/battle flag/ battle standard, 219, 244; of Atikāya, 1050, 1064; as bodily sign, 801; carrion birds perch on, 233, 836; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 269, 929; of Indrajit, 251, 349, 369; of Kumbha, 251; of Rāma, 421, 1325; of Rāvaṇa, 413, 1300, 1325; of Śiva, 396, 458, 1268; of Viṣṇu, 829 battlefield: description of, 206–7, 209–10, 234, 238, 241, 247; —gore of, 391, 439, 843, 848, 866, 1333; as hero's bed, 213, 215; located on Mount Trikūṭa, 1094; as musical recital, 235, 840; resembles playground of Rudra, 393; as river, 22, 92, 247, 866–67; searched at night by Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa, 327; wounded of, described, 327 bear(s) (ṛkṣa), 110, 195, 450, 523, 535, 536, 591, 640, 674, 730, 742, 986, 996–97, 1072, 1381, 1419; recites story to tiger, 450, 1419 bells: as battle accoutrement, 182, 233, 251, 304, 336, 835; on elephants, 251, 696, 871; on Indra's chariot, 420; purpose and location of, unclear, 835; on Puṣpaka, 469; on Rāvaṇa's chariot, 1274; on Rāvaṇa's lance, 414, 424, 1330; on Vajradaṃṣṭra's sword, 844
Bhadrā, 127, 522
Bhādra (August–September), 841–42, 853, 870, 906, 1067, 1087
Bhagavadgītā, 4, 748, 950, 1435; Arjuna's conflict in, 48, 1309; fallen warriors win heaven in, 988; Kṛṣṇa as Kāla in, 1050; Kṛṣṇa as Sāmaveda among vedas in, 1450; Rāmānuja cites, 499; svadharma in, 48, 1252, 1548; theology of avatāra in, 33, 41; Vaiṣṇava theology in, 499, 964
Bhāgavatapurāṇa, 41, 514, 532, 575, 612, 643, 705, 823–24, 896–98, 911, 1015, 1059, 1099, 1446, 1450
Bharadvāja, 1491; ashram of, 43, 58, 61, 63, 474, 1488–91, 1495; boon of, 475, 484, 532, 1517–18; chronology of visits to, 1490–91; hospitality of, 1518; instructions to Rāma of, 477, 1499; Rāma asks, about Bharata and Ayodhyā's residents, 474; Rāma stays with, 482, 1512; recalls Rāma's deeds, 474–75; smile of, 1491; through the grace of, trees always in fruit and flower, 484

Bharata, 58–61; accepts kingdom as nyāsa (deposit or trust), 1525; accuses Hanumān of flightiness, 484; ascetic garments of, 60, 477–78, 484, 1501; asceticism of, 60, 477, 484, 1470, 1492, 1501; awaits Rāma's return, 474; as backgrounded figure, 58; bathing of, 488, 1470, 1492, 1528; capability of, to rule, 1498, 1504, 1526; in chronology of story, 1490–91; co-reign of, with Rāma, 1526; Daśaratha's shade instructs Rāma to extend grace to, 465; —wishes reunion of Rāma with, 464; declares incapacity for kingship, 487; description of, 475, 477–78, 1459, 1470, 1492; follows Rāma into the Sarayū and to heaven, 61; formally returns reins of power to Rāma, 61; gods instruct Rāma to console, 463; —instruct Rāma to see, 467; going forth of, to meet Rāma, 61, 483: —as a reprise of journey to Citrakūṭa in the Ayodhyākāṇḍa, 61; greets Vibhīṣaṇa, 485; Hanumān gives Rāma's report to, 478–82; —recapitulates career of Rāma to, 60–61, 478–82; —relates Rāma's events in exile to, 478–82; instructs Śatrughna to arrange welcome party for Rāma, 482–83; Lakṣmaṇa as younger brother of, 258; latent competition of, with Rāma annulled, 60; misses trials and adventures of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 61; obeisance of, to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 1520–22; offers to reward Hanumān, 478–79; orders Śatrughna to prepare Ayodhyā for Rāma's return and consecration, 482–83; places Rāma's sandals in place of honor, 60; —sandals on Rāma's feet, 486; questions Hanumān about Rāma's alliance with monkeys, 479; Rāma asks Bharadvāja about, 474; —consecrates as yuvarāja, 58, 493, 1544–45; —dreads telling, of Lakṣmaṇa's apparent death, 223; —eager to see, 469; —refuses to bathe before, 468, 1528; —sends Hanumān as messenger to, 63, 476–77; —tells Sītā to turn thoughts to, 456; —tries to determine intentions of, 59, 476, 1497–98; —willing to defer kingship to, 477; representation of abjection of, because of Rāma's absence, 60; resumes trappings of royalty, 61; reunion of, with Rāma, 5, 41, 44, 61, 485–87, 1485; suffering of, 477–48; suggests Rāma divide kingdom between Kuśa and Lava, 61; vow of self-immolation, 1470, 1472, 1495–97; waits for exile to pass in Nandigrāma, 58; welcoming party of, described, 483–84

Bhava, Lord, 335, 1113. See also Rudra; Śiva

bheri, 133, 161, 180–82, 185, 230, 244, 250, 264–65, 323, 344, 483, 624, 636, 688, 695, 704, 758, 831, 857, 872, 915, 918, 1143. See also drums

Bhīṣma, 506

bhūtas, 522, 873, 879, 905, 1258. See also malignant spirits

Bhūteśa, 522, 873. See also, Rudra; Śiva bird(s): as arrows, 1324; domestic and wild, 712–13; felled by roars, 264, 730, 916; Garuḍa as mythical, 665, 826, 1228, 1307, 1324, 1535; in maxims, 717 (kākatalīya), 884 (kākadadhighātaka); kennings of, 712; as omens, 233, 399, 567, 712–13, 738, 836, 846, 859–60, 981, 1276, 1306, 1353, 1355, 1374; —on battle standard, 233, 836; —circling of, 859–60; —feeding on flesh of, 244; —flying clockwise of, 284; —flying in houses of, 712; —screeching of tethered, 188, 712; —sweet voices of animals and, 129; —swooping down of, 197, 431, 738; Pagani on, 860; plunge into gap in Mount Krauñca, 951, 992; of prey, 362, 736, 860, 1184, 1374; sounds of, 712, 1386; Śuka turns himself into, 602, 626–27, 719 birds, types of, 535, 590, 676, 729–30, 738, 780, 812, 856, 867, 884, 951; adjutant storks (kaṅka), 22, 23, 247, 437, 780, 867, 1184, 1296, 1374; brainfever or hawk-cuckoos (cātaka, dātyūha, or natyūha), 415, 729, 1306; cakravākas, 535, 1296; carrion, 233, 243, 426, 738, 780, 836, 843, 859, 867, 1335, 1353, 1394; cātakas, 415, 729, 1306; crows (kāka), 197, 346, 400, 411, 487, 567, 578, 624, 884, 717, 729, 749, 884, 1072–73, 1273, 1276, 1298, 1327; cuckoos (kokila or parabhṛta), 195, 625, 729; doves (kapota), 712;—story of, 149–50; 587, 590, 591; drongos (bhṛṅgarāja), 195, 729; falcons, 411, 1297; haṃsas, 22, 247, 248, 304, 365, 471, 487, 867, 951, 1028, 1073, 1159, 1479–80, 1520; herons (kaṅka or koyaṣṭibhaka), identification of, 729, 780; —, arrows fletched with feathers of, 213, 234, 351, 571, 780, 837, 843, 867, 1122, 1184; kites (śyena), 197, 373, 738, 1202, 1297, 1374; koyaṣṭibhaka, identified as lapwing or plover, 729; krauñca, 334, 535, 1111, 1126; mynahs (sārika), 188, 431, 712–13, 1355; ruddy goose (cakravāka), 1298; sārasa cranes, 22, 195, 247, 730, 867; —, as krauñca, 951; vultures, 22–23, 187, 197, 233, 245, 247, 284, 346, 372, 398, 399, 400, 404, 411, 426, 431, 437, 567, 624, 711, 736, 773, 859–61, 867, 981, 992, 1273, 1282, 1293, 1335, 1353, 1374, 1508; —, arrows fletched with feathers of, 409; —, fly to Mount Meru, 992; —, Jaṭāyus as, 480, 603; —, Saṃpāti as, 481

black: as color of complexion of women, 711; as color of Death, 188, 1052, 1198; as color of Indrajit's horses, 371, 379, 1198; as color of Kṛṣṇa, 1454; as color of langur, 164, 211, 773; as color of monkeys' fur, 161–62; as color of Rāvaṇa's horses, 439; as color of Sāgara's complexion, 612; garments, 1076; garments of Sītā, 1424; goat, Indrajit sacrifices, 324, 349, 1075–76, 1404; as inauspicious color, 1076; Knight, 93; path of Agni, 163, 643

black antelope skin. See antelope

black iron, 509, 975, 997, 1010; Kumbhakarṇa's lance made of, 282, 292, 298; ladle made of, 324, 349, 1076. See also iron black magic, 25, 28, 39, 79, 95. See also magical illusion blood/bleeding, 664, 780, 1087; commentators on theological implications of, 101, 778–79, 782, 811, 1202; drinking of, 234, 597, 838, 958; —by Kumbhakarṇa, 75, 263, 266–67, 277, 294, 296, 395, 569; of gods, 101, 778–79; of Lakṣmaṇa, 224, 372, 375–76, 384, 414, 416, 1202, 1209, 1211, 1234–35, 1309; oblations of, 357, 1167; as product of māyā, 101; raining down of, as inauspicious omen, 187, 197, 233, 245, 399, 430, 624, 710, 736, 836, 860, 1208, 1276, 1352; of Rāma, 425; of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 100–102, 176, 213–15, 223, 226–27, 778–79, 811; rivers of, 21–22, 207, 210, 236, 247, 263, 391; of warriors like kiṃśukas, 779, 884, 993, 1082, 1210 bodily signs: science of prognostication by (sāmudrikaśāstra), 798–804. See also sāmudrikaśāstra; Sītā boons: demonstrate human dharma of heroes, 101; from Rāma, to petitioners, 1549; to Atikāya, 302;—, from Brahmā, 321, 1023, 104; —, similar to Rāvaṇa's, 1054; to the dānava heroes, 138, 557; to Devāntaka, 302; to Hanumān, 103, 902–3; to Indrajit, 212, 214, 251, 325, 350, 364, 559, 775, 810, 834, 875, 930, 1081, 1156, 1185, 1187, 1189; —arrows obtained from, 1068, 1079; —Brahmaśiras obtained from, 364; —chariot-horses obtained from, 364; —serpents-weapons

boons (continued)
obtained from, 232, 775; —from sacrificial fire, 1185–86; —from Śiva, 834; —from Śiva (Paśupati), 1186–87; —of invisibility, 788; to Jāmbavān from Śakra, 163; to Kaikeyī, 59, 479; to Kesarin from sages, 644; to Kumbhakarṇa, 34, 270, 340, 908–10, 930, 932, 938; to monkeys from Indra, 466–67, 532, 1494; to Nala from Viśvakarman, 154, 616–17; to Narāntaka, 302; to Rāma from Bharadvāja, 474, 532, 1494, 1517–18; to Rāma from Brahmā, 475–76, 1511; to Rāma from gods, 482; to Rāma from Indra, 15, 466–67, 484, 1466, 1494, 1511–12, 1518; to Rāma from Viśvāmitra, 1061; to Rāvaṇa, 192, 200, 254, 340, 590, 596–97, 710, 723, 746, 779, 830, 885, 895, 930, 1060, 1133, 1267, 1269, 1320, 1481, 1494; to Rāvaṇa from Brahmā, 39, 42, 44, 101, 262, 396;—, gained through asceticism, 1388; —, terms of, 895; —women would know of, 1269; to Vibhīṣaṇa, 83, 578, 1086; to "The Wasteland" (Marukāntāra), from Rāma, 615; unwillingness of Rāma to transgress Brahmā's, 781, 783, 826; Viṣṇu and Garuḍa exchange, 828

bow: of Akampana, 239, 251; of Atikāya, 313–16, 318, 319; of Dhūmrākṣa, 235; horn-, 459, 785, 1447; of Indra, 420, 875, 1127, 1132, 1137; of Indrajit, 213, 324, 349–51, 364, 367–69, 371–72, 382; of Kumbha, 251, 337, 338–39; of Lakṣmaṇa, 193, 254, 257–59, 316–17, 319–21, 365, 374, 377, 382, 409, 413, 470; of Mahāpārśva, 407; of Makarākṣa, 346–47; of Prahasta, 247–48, 868; of Rāma, 24, 123, 153, 156, 180, 198, 214, 252–53, 295, 348, 364, 392–93, 408, 410, 412, 416, 420–21, 424, 430, 432, 435, 437; —,cuts down Rāvaṇa's, 261; —,consists of the vedas, 335, 1113; —,illusory, 26, 52, 85, 95, 174, 176–80, 689, 691; —, Kumbhakarṇa unable to withstand, 296; —, slips from his grasp, 57, 417; —, unstrung, 214; of Rāvaṇa, 252, 254, 256–58, 398–99, 409, 410, 412–13, 420, 422, 425; —, Lakṣmaṇa shatters, 259; —, Rāma cuts down, 261; Brahmā gives, 301, 388, 1246; —, can no longer be deployed, 427; —, slips from his grasp, 438; of Śañkara, 331, 1100; thrice-curved, 214, 314, 785; of Triśiras, 303, 311; twanging of, 316, 335, 347, 369, 408; of Virūpākṣa, 401; of Viṣṇu, 675, 1447

bowstring(s): twanging of, 235, 251, 257, 296, 313, 316–17, 335, 350, 369, 374, 377, 393, 408, 626, 839, 842–43, 891, 1054, 1113, 1149, 1205, 1290–91, 1350

Brahmā: abode of, 331, 1098; arrow of, 258, 437; boon from, to Atikāya, 313, 315; boon from, to Indrajit, 212, 326; boon from, to Rāvaṇa, 39, 42, 44, 101, 262, 396, 895, 1388; comes to Laṅka, 458; created gods and asuras, 186; curses Kumbhakarṇa, 262, 270–71, 396; —dānavas and rākṣasas, 396; divine weapon-spell of, 166, 906, 1048; —, different from Brahmaśiras, 1185; —, directions and natural phenomena fear, 321; —, Hanumān shows reverence to, 327, 1087; —, impervious to weapons of Atikāya, 321; —, Indrajit invokes, 324, 1077, 1083; —, Indrajit master of, 364; —, Indrajit protected by, 349, 1152; —, kills Atikāya, 321–22; —, Lakṣmaṇa wishes to use, against Indrajit, 351, 1157; —, not loosed in vain, 614; —, Rāma succumbs to, 325–27; —, Rāma uses, against Sāgara, 609; frightened upon seeing Kumbhakarṇa, 270; Gadgada, son of, born from śakti, 666–67; gives Kubera Puṣpakavimāna, 1519; gives Rāvaṇa armor, bow, and arrows, 388; gods propitiate, 396; grandfather of Kumbhakarṇa, 271; head of, fell on

Himalaya, 331, 1099; identifies Rāma as Supreme Spirit/Viṣṇu, 458–61; Indra goes to, 270; praises Rāma in stotra, 40, 458–61; Puṣpakavimāna fashioned by, 1518; Rāvaṇa compared to, 272; Rāvaṇa's austerities gratify, 388, 396; requests Rāma to return to heaven, 460; staff of, 262; throne of, on Himalaya, 331, 1100; unable to save Rāvaṇa, 260
Brahman, 1453, 1463; and Āditya-hṛdaya, 1341; as imperishable, 459, 465; Rāma's bow as form of, 1113; sacred syllable oṃ expresses, 1450
brahman astrologers. See astrologers Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, 824, 1448; Nāgoji-bhaṭṭa cites, 499 brahmans: abode of, 1100; Aṣṭāvakra saves, 464, 1461; Bharata compared to, 60; Bṛhaspati as, 1235; gifts to, 492, 943; gods pray for, 435; Indrajit's death removes anxiety of, 383; kenning of, 623, 1387; Kumbhakarṇa as foe of, 299; in Laṅkā, 243; participate in consecration ceremony, 489, 491; as performers of rājasūya, 603; Rāma as Supreme Lord manifest in, 460; —gives gifts to, 492; —instructed to give wealth to, 463, 1451; Rāvaṇa born in lineage of, 353; Rāvana oppresses, 187, 708; require Rāma's protection from demons, 465, 709; rites of, 1109, 1402, 1451; self-restraint of, 32, 142; sins of, 1233; Sītā learns duties of wife from, 179; Sītā pays obeisance to, 458; social system of, 1124, 1157, 1172, 1252, 1434, 1513; warrior, Jāmadagnya, 951 brahmaśiras, 221, 364; different from divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 1185 brahmāstra. See Brahmā, divine weapon-spell of Bṛhaspati, 486, 571, 1235, 1525; battle over Tārakā, wife of, 532; Kaca, son of, 557; Kesarin, son of, 667; Mainda more skilled at argument than, 146; as name of Jupiter, 527; purohita of the gods, 582, 822, 1235; restores gods with herbs and mantras, 65, 227; story of, 822 bridge (over the ocean) (setubandha/nalasetu), 69, 89–90, 95–96, 124, 506; Bharadvāja knows about, 475; building of, 90, 122–23, 154–55, 189, 506, 619–20, 1388; —, as starting point of northern manuscripts, 496; commentators discuss establishing Śiva-liṅga at, 1484; Hanumān tells Bharata about, 482; Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva advise Rāma to have, built, 151; length of, 619–20; Mālyavān warns Rāvaṇa that building of, is sign of power of Rāma, 188; monkeys cross to Laṅkā by, 155–56; Rāma instructs Hanumān to tell Bharata about, 476; —points out to Sītā, 472; —tells monkeys to leave Laṅka by means of, 224; Rāvaṇa informed of, 157; —belittles feat of building of, 189, 717; Sītā informed of, 448; spies report to Rāvaṇa that army has crossed by means of, 164 bridges (four, in Laṅkā), 125–26, 271, 510–13, 515 Brockington: on chāyasītā, 105; on divinity of Rāma, 50, 713; identifications of, 111, 535–36, 618, 643, 712, 719, 729, 1075, 1353; on "stages" of the epic, 96, 824 burial: marine, of rākṣasas, 1469. See also cremation; funeral rites

Caitra (March–April), 767, 842, 853, 870, 906, 1019, 1141, 1150, 1234, 1238, 1371, 1378, 1405, 1407, 1489–91 caitya, 135, 196, 550, 731
Caṇḍa, 161, 505, 634
Candra, 322, 520, 527
Candra, Mount, 65, 228, 824, 1091, 1314 cardinal and intermediate directions. See directions

catapults, 508 cat's eye beryl (vaidūrya), 558, 1152, 1535. See also vaidūrya caturañgabala. See army celestial bards (caraṇas), 156, 379, 421, 425, 439, 442, 1228
Cg. See Govindarāja
charioteer: of Akampana, 239; of Indrajit, 69, 207, 211, 324, 355–56, 368–69, 379, 399, 773–74, 1218, 1220; of Mahāpārśva, 406, 1286; of Makarākṣa, 344, 347, 1143; of Nikumbha, 208, 766; of Prahasta, 244–45, 858, 861; of Rāvaṇa, 261, 412, 427–29, 1300, 1337–38, 1349; skills of, 428–29, 434, 1340; Sumantra, 488, 1490, 1515, 1517, 1530–31, 1540; of Virūpākṣa, 407–8. See also Mātali chariot-javelin (rathaśakti), 463, 1050, 1357; identity of, unclear, 763–64 chariot(s): of Aśaniprabha, 208; of Atikāya 303, 313, 315–16, 318, 319, 1027, 1050–52; -battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, 432–38; Brahmā gives, to Rāvaṇa, 301; chariot smashed with, 305; as division of army, 391, 514, 559; of Devāntaka, 304; of Dhūmrākṣa, 236, 835–36; flying, 445, 463–64, 466, 682, 765; Hanumān destroys, of rākṣasas, 240; Indra sends his, to Rāma, 19, 420; of Indra, 420–21, 430, 433; of Indrajit, 207, 323, 324, 349–51, 354–55, 367–69, 371, 375, 379, 774, 1071–72, 1074; —, illusory Sītā on, 352–53; —invisible, 352, 1051; of Jāmbumālin, 207; Laṅkā filled with, 124; of Mahāpārśva, 304, 406; of Mahodara, 404; of Makarākṣa, 234–34, 343–44, 347; of Narāntaka, 304, 878; of Prahasta, 244; of Rāma 488–89; Rāma sends, back to Indra, 446; of Rāvaṇa, 261, 314, 388, 390, 399–400, 408, 410, 413, 427–28, 435–36, 438, 1051; —description of, 429, 430; evil omens surrounding—, 430–31; of Triśiras, 303, 309; of Vajramuṣṭi, 208; of Vidyunmālin, 207; of Virūpākṣa, 401; weapons of, 261, 1053, 1220; yoke poles on, 303, 420, 434, 1207, 1322, 1365 chāyāsītā. See māyāsītā chronology of epic, 19, 105–6, 108, 390, 474, 477, 482, 519–20, 529, 697, 728, 767–68, 793, 832, 841–42, 853, 870, 906, 911–12, 938, 1019, 1107–8, 1141, 1150, 1167, 1234, 1238, 1253, 1255, 1307–8, 1319–20, 1356, 1370–71, 1377–79, 1401, 1405, 1407, 1489–91, 1512; disagreement of Yuddhakāṇḍa with Araṇyakāṇḍa on, 1505; Hopkins on, 519; of Rāmopākhyāna, 1406 churning of the ocean, story of, 594–95, 612, 648, 823, 834, 896, 977, 1027–28, 1244–45, 1324, 1452 cinema. See films and film studies cinematic style of narrrative, 35, 61, 109–13
Citrakūṭa, Mount, 61, 469, 473, 479, 1093, 1472, 1490, 1505
Ck. See Kataka
Cl. See Lokanātha club, iron. See iron club
Cm. See Maheśvaratīrtha combat: techniques of, 733–34 commentators, 99–107, passim; on asceticism and bathing of Rāma and others, 1528–29; on boon to Rāma, 1517–18; on chronology of epic, 17, 105, 108, 767, 1363 (see also chronology of epic); on contradictions between Vālmīki's poem and other versions of Rāmakathā, 612; on creator of Puṣpakavimāna, 1518; dates of, 105; on deference, 827, 1090, 1254, 1383, 1520–22; on deliberations of Vibhīṣaṇa regarding Sītā, 1429; on desire of Bharata to rule (kingdom), 1497–98; on discrepencies in names of monkeys, 669; on emotions of Rāma at reunion with Sītā, 1425; on emotions of Sītā at reunion with Rāma, 1430; on fetching water from oceans by the monkeys, 1536; on genealogies of monkeys, 669; on giving of an image of presiding divinity of the Ikṣvākus by Rāma to Vibhīṣaṇa, 1544; on giving of necklace by Sītā, 1542; grounding of, in devotional Rāmāyaṇa texts, 103; on nature of avatāra, 101; on obeisance of Bharata to Lakṣmaṇa, 1520–22; on ownership of Puṣpakavimāna, 1519; on physical suffering of Rāma and Lakṣmana, 100–101; on Puṣpakavimāna, 1479–80; on Rāma's seeing ashram of Bharadvāja, 1495; on Rāmopākhyāna, 1406; on Rāvaṇa's deliberations, 701; on redundancy, 1349; on Saramā as an agent of Rāvaṇa and confidante of Sītā, 691–93; scholarship on, 99; sectarian affiliations of, 105–6; on sexuality of Hanumān, 1503; texts of, 68; theological exegeses of, 108, 1389; on thoughts of Rāma toward Kaikeyī, 1170; understand Rāma has no evil thoughts toward Kaikeyī, 1170; on wounding and bleeding of Rāma and Lakṣmana, 101–2, 782–83, 778–79, 811, 820–21, 826, 1202, 1209, 1237, 1303. See also Govindarāja; Kataka; Lokanātha; Maheśvaratīrtha; Nāgojibhaṭṭa; Rāmānuja; Satyatīrtha; Śivasahāya; Varadarāja complexion: dark, of rākṣasas, 20, 210; —, of Rāma, 653; —, of Rāvaṇa, 1392, 1394; —, of Samudra, 154, 611; —, of Vibhīṣaṇa, 1423; —, of women, 711; golden, of maidens Bharata gives to Hanumān, 479; of Lakṣmaṇa, 167, 653; of Rāma, 176, 653; of Rāvaṇa, 1392, 1394; sauvarṇakaraṇī, herb that restores, 1092, 1314; of Sītā, 220, 474, 1488

conch (kumbha, śaṅkha): as an āyudha of Viṣṇu, 1389, 1446; as an instrument, 185, 210, 230, 244, 250, 264–65, 283, 323, 344, 483, 489, 567, 758–59, 842, 917, 978, 1275, 1516; as meaning of kumbha, 917, 1152; —of śaṅkha, 802, 917, 1345; as an ornament, 349; as a shell, 45, 89, 152–53, 472, 608

conscripted labor, 483, 1514

consecration (abhiṣeka): of Aṅgada, 1486; of Rāma, 17, 42, 44, 58, 61, 96, 464, 488, 490–93, 1102, 1461, 1479, 1491–92, 1512, 1528, 1530, 1535, 1538–40, 1543–44, 1549–50; of Sugrīva, 147–48; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 41, 83, 150–51, 156, 227, 446–47, 471, 587, 598, 623, 654, 814, 819, 1400, 1405, 1407–9, 1490

contradictions: in chronology, 1371; commentators rationalize, 543, 556, 572, 612, 642, 650, 654, 665–67, 669, 690–92, 712, 988, 1010, 1025, 1096, 1153, 1382, 1393, 1399, 1404, 1406, 1444, 1465; in consecration of Vibhīṣaṇa, 654; of identity, 712, 1025, 1444, 1465; in narrative, 942, 989, 1010, 1153, 1211, 1315, 1399, 1483, 1486, 1489, 1492, 1521, 1536, 1546; particle tu as indicating, 582; of passages, 538, 650, 667, 669, 762, 1382, 1469, 1483, 1486, 1489, 1492, 1521, 1536, 1545–46; in role of Saramā, 690–92; with other version of Rāma story, 612, 666, 1016, 1393, 1404, 1406, 1486 counsel, 553; Atikāya skilled at, 315; of bakamantra, 972; as beneficial to Rāma, 454; as the cornerstone of victory, 29, 135; of counselors, 173; evaluation of, 36, 275; of Kumbhakarṇa, 910–12, 938; Lakṣmaṇa as wise in, 448, 1412; Mālyavān gives, to Rāvaṇa, 186; ministers of Daśaratha take, 488, 1530; of Prahasta, 855; Rāma honored by Vibhīṣaṇa's, 469; Rāma and monkeys take, together, 190, 200; of Rāvaṇa, 941, 949–50; Rāvaṇa rejects Mālyavān's, 188–89; —takes, with counselors, 28–29, 173, 181, 189, 242; —unable to benefit from, 71; spies sent to discover, 169, 661; Sugrīva as skilled in, 151, 445, counsel (continued)

1406; three types of, 29, 136; —highest, 29, 136; —in between, 29, 136, 552; —lowest, 29, 136, of Vibhīṣaṇa, 80–81, 151, 601, 941; Vibhīṣaṇa skilled at, 193, 725
Cr. See Śivasahāya
cremation, 178, 685, 1490; as final agnihotra, 1402; ground, 395, 1262, 1402–3, 1481; of rākṣasas, 1106, 1469; wife follows during, 686. See also anugamana; funeral rites; satī critical edition of Yuddhakāṇḍa: annotation of, 107–9; chronology of, 17; on concluding passages of, 1548; editors of, date commentators, 105; emendations to, 99 (see also in the Emendations and Corrections of the Critical Edition); higher criticism in, 1254, 1481; kāṇḍa breaks in, 7, 18; length of, 3, 107; numbering of verses in, 642; principles of editing, 99; problematic readings in, 99; questionable verses in, 548, 566, 594, 639, 645, 649, 681, 755, 775, 777, 785, 841, 868, 894, 915, 970, 973, 1035, 1040, 1067, 1074, 1097, 1103–4, 1126, 1147, 1180, 1208, 1231, 1254, 1272, 1358, 1388, 1409, 1439, 1440–41, 1463, 1481, 1513, 1536; technical information in, 108; text of, 115; translation of, 109–112; —appendix passages in, 107; typographical errors in, 99, 708, 758, 830, 863, 909, 923–24, 1004, 1033, 1086, 1110, 1157, 1169, 1204, 1221, 1314, 1463; verses and passages excised from, 107, 117. See also Yuddhakāṇḍa
Cs. See Satyatīrtha
Ct. See Nāgojibhaṭṭa cudgels, iron. See iron cudgels; in the Glossary of Weapons curses: by Brahmā, 262, 270, 906; on dānavas and rākṣasas by Brahmā, 396; on the forest by Kaṇḍu, 591; on Jaya and Jayabhadra, 1346–47; on Kumbhakarṇa by Brahmā, 34, 76, 262, 265, 270, 271, 908, 909–11, 919, 938; on Rāvaṇa, 907–8, 1393; —, by Anaraṇya, 907; —, by Brahmā, 570; —, by Nalakūbara, 572, 907; —, by Nandīśvara, 907; —, by Rambhā, 907; —, by women, 1393; on royal fortune by Mandodarī, 1398; on Rudra by Brahmā, 1136; on Śuka and Sāraṇa, 660; on Triśaṅku, 1076; Rāma asks Daśaratha to retract his, against Kaikeyī and Bharata, 465
Cv. See Varadarāja

Dadhimukha, 325, 667; son of Soma, 172 daityas, 165, 182, 192, 209, 267, 318, 383, 422, 571, 696–97, 1232 Dalits, 46
dānavas, 158–59, 166, 171, 252, 259, 261, 267, 282–83, 300, 302, 313, 315, 387, 440, 460; battle with gods, 345, 382; become despondent, 421; boons to, 557; Brahmā curses, 396; depart in flying chariot, 445; despair, 270; dwell in Pātāla, 153, 199, 435; experts in use of arrows, 227; famine destroys, 396, 1268; heroes among, 557; indestructible, 556; Indra slays, 420; invulnerability of Atikāya to, 315; Kumbhakarṇa defeats, 296, 1133; lance of Kumbhakarṇa kills, 282; Laṅkā unassailable by, 121; magical powers of, 557, 882; monkeys compared to, 165; oblation gratifies, 349, 1151; Rāma able to destroy, 149; Rāvaṇa —defeats, 138, 254, 269, 340; —delights in harming, 192; —, as enemy of, 751; —fights for a year, 137; —, invulnerable to, 254, 262, 396, 710, 885; —, thorn in side of, 202; rejoice at death of Indrajit, 383; support Rāma, 420, 1321, 1325, 1328; surround Lakṣmaṇa, 379, 1228; as synonym of daitya, 1232–33; Triśiras slays, 301; turn engine of war, 387, 1244–45; unable to break bonds of Indrajit, 229; Uśanas Kāvya as purohita of, 556–57; as witnesses, 347, 422, 436, 445, 1218 Daṇḍaka Forest, 346, 569, 1505–6; assault on Sītā in, 415; Rāma lives in, 478–79; —kills Khara and Dūṣaṇa in, 788

Dardara, Mount, 161, 637
Darīmukha, 129, 175, 673 dark complexion. See complexion, dark darkness, 20, 21, 345, 768, 769; arrows create, 410, 425, 1293–94, 1333; battle in, 210–11, 238; covers directions, 233, 399, 431; divine weapon-spell of, Tāmasa, 408, 1289, 1297; engulfs all, 379, 1217–18, 1221–22; of hell, 914; impenetrable, 20, 210; Indrajit creates, 350, 1155–56; Indrajit obscured by, 212, 366, 777, 1189; Rāvaṇa as, 463, 1459; of Rudra, 873. See also tamas darts. See in the Glossary of Weapons
Daśaratha, 37, 178, 229, 827, 1167; absolves Kaikeyī, 41; anger of, toward Kaikeyī, 464; appearance of, 41; appears as if dancing, 1094; blesses Rāma, 1271; compliance with Kaikeyī, 38; death and embalming of, 1490; devotion of, to Rāma, 464; funerary rites of, 58, 1251, 1490; Horse Sacrifice of, 1459; identifies Rāma as Supreme Spirit, 464; instructs Lakṣmaṇa to serve Rāma, 465; —Rāma to assume kingship, 465; —Sītā to obey Rāma, 465–66; obtains salvation from hell, 1523; Rāma compares, to Garuḍa, 229; —obeys instructions of, 1170; —strives to be unlike, 48; —would not imprison, 1175; returns to Indra's world, 466; reunited with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 463–66; saved by Rāma, 1461; sires Rāma for purpose of ruling, 1526; Sītā believes Rāma met with, in heaven, 178; Sumantra reports to, 1540; unaware of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa's divinity, 1463; wives of, 483, 485–86, 1513, 1523, 1529
Death, 138, 499, 855, 1003–4, 1311, 1392; as antaka, Ender of all things, 367, 409, 1093, 1293; black as color of, 188, 1052, 1198; in the form of hideous bald man, 188; Indrajit looks like, 367; as Kāla, 679, 1198; naidhana, or eighth house, as "House of," 520; monkeys resemble, 667; rod of, 137; as Yama, 1198. See also funeral rites; Kāla; suicide; Yama death: in battle removes impurity of, 1407; evildoers as worthy of, 1419; of husband, greatest calamity for a woman, 678; people on the point of, see faces of sons, wives, etc., 749; period of impurity after, 1407; rākṣasas thrown in sea after, 1105; rattle of, 840; of relative, as time when women can be seen in public, 1428–29; wits desert one at point of, 200, 257, 745–66, 892 debts: as anartha and adharma for this world, 965; freedom from, 1340; three traditional (to pitṛs, devas, and ṛṣis), 1341 deference: as a social imperative, 38, 76, 83, 827, 1520; of younger to elder, 37, 58, 444, 1090, 1383 destiny. See fate
Devāntaka (Surāntaka), 21, 92, 312, 322, 377, 472, 1024, 1026, 1038–41, 1048, 1067, 1213; Aṅgada strikes with Mahodara's elephant's tusk, 309; charges Aṅgada, 309; compared to Viṣṇu, 303; death of, 1067; description of, 302; fights Hanumān, 310; Hanumān kills, 310; identification of, 1038; iron club of, 303, 309, 310; Kumbhakarṇa, paternal uncle of, 299, 876, 1020; Mahodara and Mahāpārśva dispatched to protect, 302; mourns Narāntaka's death, 308–9; Rāvaṇa sends, to battle, 302; son of Rāvaṇa, 302, 1020; strikes Aṅgada with iron club, 309–10; Surāntaka, as variant name of, 1039 devotional tradition: concerning Hanumān, 62; energy of Rāvaṇa in, 715; interpretations of, 558, 715–17, 960, 972, 1142, 1145–46, 1369, 1400; literature of, 538; of medieval Vaiṣṇavism, 101, 103, 108

Dhānyamālinī, 315, 1053
dharma (righteousness), 89, 450, 591; artha as root of, 1177; avatāra instructs world in, 831; battle as conflict of, with adharma, 89; conflict of, with adharma, 33, 74; critique of, 38, 56; deities revere, 33, 187, 708; eclipses unrighteousness in golden age, 186; fruits of, only manifest after time, 966; gods have recourse to, 186; Hanumān compared to, incarnate, 478, 1501; incorrect interpretation of, 38; of kings, 745; Lakṣmaṇa denounces, 36–38, 55–56, 358–61, 1169–76, 1189; —exhorts Rāma to abandon, 1175, 1176; may yield excellent results, 278, 963; noose as weapon of, 576; as observed by gods and demons, 708; obtained through dharma, 1172; as one of the puruṣārthas ("goals of man"), 274–75, 278, 946–47, 964, 1178, 1432; as pointless, 1169–70; practice of, destroys a person, 176; practiced in the morning, 946; practioners of, 1178–79; —have no fear of death, 216; Rāma as exemplar of, 3, 36, 38, 166, 213, 652; —does not refute anti-dharma speech of Lakṣmaṇa, 39–40; —suffers in service of, 51; Rāma's treatment of Sītā reflective of conflict between public and private, 48; Rāvaṇa as practioner of sva-, 1252; —tramples, 186, 193; relationship to adharma in different yugas, 707–8; relies on human effort, 1174; special (viśeṣa), trumps general (sāmānya), 575; sva-, 1252; transient, 1173; triumph of, 74; Vālmīki on 36–38; Vibhīṣaṇa adheres to, 80, 83; wrath as destructive of, 141 Dharma: Hanumān, a second, 478, 1501; noose of, 576; Suṣeṇa, son of, 172, 207, 667, 762 dharmaśāstra, 28, 32, 37, 77, 726
Dhūmra, 162, 288, 758; as king of ṛkṣas, 739; son of Brahmā, 640; son of Gadgada, 666–67; stands with Rāma, 205
Dhūmrākṣa, 139, 377, 834, 836, 1068, 1481; chariot of, pulled by donkeys, 233, 835, 836; death of, 841–42, 1253, 1491; Hanumān fights, 235–36; —kills, 236; leads troops to western gate, 233; mobilizes rākṣasa army, 232; shaken at evil omens, 233; vows to kill Rāma, 139–40
Dikshitar: on weapons, 509, 532, 582, 665, 760, 835, 1015, 1039, 1128, 1261, 1299 directions: cardinal, 421, 757, 913, 1248, 1535; —and intermediate, 347, 423, 431, 772, 900–901, 905, 1013, 1046, 1217, 1242; ten, 160, 187, 195, 206, 212, 238, 260, 298, 313, 314, 329, 334–35, 408, 455, 732, 900–901, 1049, 1282, 1434 discus, 175, 208, 246, 250, 399, 412, 433, 763, 766, 863, 874, 1041–42, 1092, 1299; as weapon of Indra, 1013, 1063; as weapon of Viṣṇu, 330, 332, 459, 766, 1260, 1389, 1446. See also in the Glossary of Weapons
Diti: aborted fetus of, 1138; daityas, descendants of, 1232; Maya, son of, 1397 divine weapon-spells (astras), 112, 777, 805, 844, 1298–99; descriptions of, 19; in Bālakāṇḍa, 1005, 1012; named aiṣīka, 320, 1063; named Brahmaśiras, 221, 364, 1185; named Tāmasa, 408, 1289; of Agni, 221, 256–57, 320–21, 411, 889, 1061–62, 1297; of asuras, 410–11; of Brahmā, 166, 321, 324, 325–27, 349, 351, 364, 609, 614, 652, 906, 1048, 1065, 1077; —, different from Brahmaśiras, 1185; —, directions and natural phenomena fear, 321; —, impervious to weapons of

Atikāya, 321; —, Indrajit master of, 364; —, Indrajit protected by, 349, 1152; —, Indrajit uses, against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 324, 1083; —, Lakṣmaṇa wishes to use, against Indrajit, 351, 1157; —, never loosed in vain, 614; —, Rāma kills Atikāya with, 321–22; —, Rāma succumbs to, 325–27; —, Rāma uses, against Sāgara, 609; of the gandharvas, 392–93, 412, 420, 1259, 1323; of Indra, 221, 297, 320, 382, 1013, 1063, 1230; of Maya, 411; of Rudra, 294, 410, 1298–99, 1005, 1295; of Sūrya, 320, 412, 1062; of Tvaṣṭṛ, 1063; of Varuṇa, 221; of Vāyu, 221, 297, 329, 320–21, 324, 1012; of Yama, 320, 1063 double negatives, 588, 795, 809, 961, 1157, 1339, 1361, 1398, 1420
drawbridges. See bridges droṇa, 536. See also measurement
Droṇa, Mount. See Candra, Mount Drumakulya, 614–15 drums: bheri, 133, 161, 180–82, 185, 230, 244, 250, 264–65, 323, 344, 483, 624, 636, 688, 695, 704, 758, 831, 857, 872, 915, 918, 1143; dundubhi, 978, 1532; mṛdaṅga, 264–65, 624, 1275; paṇava, 264, 769, 872, 916; paṭaha, 250, 264, 872, 915, 1275. See also muscial instruments Dundubhi, 655
dundubhis. See drums
Durmukha, 138–39, 172, 247
Dutt, 115–16, passim; contrasts Kumbhakarṇa's materiality with Rāma's spirituality, 914; notes of, 509, 513, 633, 734, 766, 804, 907, 914, 985, 993, 1059, 1101, 1107, 1148, 1164, 1189, 1217, 1277, 1375, 1402; on obscure passages, 504, 783, 944–45, 962
Dvijihva, 279, 1213
Dvivida, 126, 133, 165, 175, 325, 657, 673, 726, 789, 991, 1079, 1122–23, 1126, 1262, 1289; approaches eastern gate, 198, 740; Bharata embraces, 485; climbs Mount Suvela, 194; drinks nectar of immortality, 166; fights Aśaniprabha, 207–8; —Atikāya, 316; Indrajit strikes down, 327; kills Narāntaka, 246; Kumbha spares, 1132; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; receives gifts from Rāma, 492; son of the Aśvins, 172, 582; takes counsel with Rāma, 190

echoing: of epithets, names, terms, 522, 538, 562, 572, 601, 604, 631, 663, 672–75, 700, 703, 733, 750, 765, 818, 845, 893, 1307, 1309, 1313
eclipse, 707; of moon, 298, 737, 1291; of Mūla, 130; Rāhu, demon of (see Rāhu); of Rohiṇī, 1249–49 elephants: capture of, 32, 142; domestication of, 142, 572–74; exemplify masculine image, 111; Hanumān smashes, 240; hostility of, toward monkeys, 643–44; as nāgas, 114, 1255, 1263; of the Padmavana, 142, 573; rut fluid of, 166, 233, 248, 286, 319, 522, 868–69, 1060, 1134; rutting, 124, 164–65, 182, 209, 319, 483, 522, 567, 646, 695, 843, 1060, 1211, 1381; sea-, 45, 152; scent- (gandhahastin), 522, 626, 1381; song of wild, 31–32, 142; support the earth (diggaja), 296, 522, 735–36, 1046; wake Kumbhakarṇa, 75, 265; wear bells in battle, 251, 695 ellipsis, 547, 566, 583, 590, 592, 623, 811, 815, 835, 926, 939, 1062, 1070, 1090, 1173, 1175, 1209, 1259, 1299, 1323, 1384, 1404, 1418, 1527, 1538, 1543; fleshed out by commentators, 534, 545, 553–54, 564, 584, 599, 631, 640, 644–45, 657, 659, 661, 679–82, 683, 693, 696, 698, 709, 734, 740–41, 744, 745, 759, 762, 764, 776–78, 802, 841–42, 844–45, 854–55, 865, 884, 887, 889–90, 916, 926, 941–43, 944–45, 947, 952, 954, 958, 968, 972–73, 985–86, 999–1001, 1004, 1065, 1084,

ellipsis (continued)
1024, 1120, 1133, 1158, 1163, 1171, 1178, 1188, 1193, 1195, 1200, 1210, 1232, 1238, 1239, 1270, 1278, 1286, 1294, 1306, 1337–39, 1349, 1359, 1360, 1366, 1372, 1382, 1385, 1411, 1428, 1432, 1438, 1458, 1461, 1479, 1482, 1491–92, 1495, 1512, 1517; in story of dove, 590; of story of churning of ocean, 1244
emendations, 99, 505, 507–8, 527, 538, 755, 770, 782, 783, 795, 798–800, 838, 860, 883, 889, 923, 927–28, 970, 973, 1000, 1004, 1021, 1026, 1035, 1151–52, 1204, 1221, 1321, 1333, 1416–17, 1422, 1423, 1478; marking of, 123. See also in the Emendations and Corrections of the Critical Edition emotion(s): of the avatāra, 47, 51, 107–8; bhāva as, 589; heart as seat of, 546; inner, 586; of Kumbhakarṇa, 957; of Lakṣmaṇa, 1440; of Rāma, 41, 45, 47–49, 57, 452, 545, 1422, 1425–26, 1431; of Rāvaṇa, 71, 955; in repudiation of Sītā, 451–58, 1422–31; of Sītā, 51–53, 1430; Vālmīki's portrayal of agniparīkṣā, as charged with, 103–4; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 1429 Ender of all things. See antaka enemies: acting in concert with, brings ruin to master, 275; always enemies, 370; compassion of Rāma for, 230, 830; conditions under which, should not be slain, 351; demoralization of, as theme of Vālmīki, 27; kinsmen and false friends more treacherous than, 31; nature of, 36, 275–76, 715, 950–51; one who seeks refuge from, should be saved, 149; protocol toward, 745; six stratagems kings may use against, 744 equine similes, 180; Vālmiki fond of, for describing women, 690–91 etymological epithets. See echoing evil. See sin
evildoers. See sinner(s) exile: Bharata waits for Rāma to complete, 58–59, 1470; of the Pāṇḍavas, 1378–79; of Rāma, 19, 37, 51, 82, 96, 108, 177–78, 360, 479, 529, 596, 676, 679, 731, 851, 912, 1489–90, 1495–97, 1523, 1525, 1540; of Sugrīva, 1265–66; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 83 eyes: rolling of, as sign of rage, 22, 188, 246, 403, 607, 714, 864, 937 fable(s): of dove who showed hospitality, 149, 578, 590–91; -genres, 31; of the hunter, the tiger, and the ṛkṣa, 450, 1419. See also maxims; parables false friends, 31–32, 141, 573 family. See hierarchy fate (destiny), 359, 1169, 1250, 1418; bhāgya, 1418, 1522; cannot be stopped, 441; contact of Sītā with Rāvaṇa result of, 456; contrasted with free will, 1386; contrasted with puruṣakāra (human effort), 551, 1432; daiva, 551–53, 564, 1071, 1136, 1386, 1418, 1432, 1437; evil, of Rāma, 680; evil, of Sītā, 389, 450; as imponderable, 679; impossible to evade, 221, 225, 438; kāla, 775, 805, 820, 909; kṛtānta, 718, 982, 1375, 1388; Kumbhakarṇa impelled by, 285, 909; person killed because of, 359; Rāma as befuddled by, 679; —expunges affront caused by, 454; —Rāma free from vagaries of, 565; Rāvaṇa impelled by power of, 190, 427; seizes Rāvaṇa, 718; sets all things in motion, 441; as vidhi, 1174 films and film studies: cinematic action of narrative, 7, 17, 43, 90–95; comparison of films with depictions in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 90–95; depictions of violence in, 93 fire: at the end of a cosmic age, 23, 153, 294, 312, 317, 342, 367, 387, 397, 414, 437, 1079, 1115, 1122; at the end of time, 256, 258, 260, 290, 300, 888, 983, 1021; submarine, see mare's head fire. See also Agni; agnihotra fire ordeal (agniparīkṣā) of Sītā, 49, 103–4, 456–61, 890, 1422, 1429, 1431, 1436–55 flowers: blossom in all seasons, 195, 532, 645, 729; orange-red, of palāśa tree, 866; red, in garlands, 312, 314, 611, 1046, 1052, 1151; —, of aśoka tree, 1332; —, of aśvakarṇa tree, 618; —, of kiṃśuka tree (see kiṃśuka tree); —, of sālmali tree (see śālmali tree); types of, 535, 1353. See also the Glossary of Flora and Fauna forbearance: of Rāma, 45–46, 152–53, 179, 459, 579, 1415; Rāma abandons, 46, 142, 153; as sign of weakness, 45–46, 152; of Sītā, 1390; used in curse, 606, 616–17; as virtue of the good, 153 force: appropriate use of, 30, 140, 274–75, 563–64; as best expedient to use on the wicked, 616–17; coercive, 35, 274, 563–64, 745, 944, 947, 1182; motivating, 278, 963; of righteousness and unrighteousness, 359; stratagem of (daṇḍa), 563–64, 745, 947, 983. See also punishment; stratagems; torture fortifications: defensive, at gates of Laṅkā, 507, 510, 513, 727, 732, 754, 779, 879–80, 934 fortress: literary description of, 508 friends: false, 141, 275, 950; highest type of, 135; king recognizes, 35, 274, 945; to be praised behind their backs, 497; qualities of, 145, 276, 501; rich men have, 360; trusting of, 518 funeral rites, 387, 390, 493, 549, 685–86, 749, 1250; of Daśaratha, 58, 1251, 1460, 1490; of rākṣasas, 1106, 1469; of Rāvaṇa, 41, 74, 444–45, 1378, 1380, 1382, 1383, 1400–1403, 1405; —chronology of, 1405, 1407, 1490; vedic, 74. See also anugamana; cremation; satī

Gadgada, 171–72; Dhūmra, son of, 666–67; Jāmbavān, son of, 666
Gaja, 165, 172, 657, 726, 1079, 1083; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; fights Tapana, 206–7, 764; guards monkey army, 205, 525–26; identity of, 525; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; maintains watch, 218; positioned at southern gate, 199, 758; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; takes counsel with Rāma, 190
Gandhamādana, 194, 205, 218, 625, 726, 794, 993, 1079, 1289, 1522; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; commands left flank, 127; etymology of, 522, 669; fights Indrajit, 325, 327, 379; Indrajit strikes down, 327; maintains watch, 218; rushes Kumbhakarṇa, 289; son of Vaivasvata, 172
gandharvas, 121, 190, 229; battle resembles dance of, 840; dance at Rāma's consecration, 492; desire Rāma's victory, 33, 186; divine weapon-spell of, 392–93, 412, 420, 1259, 1262, 1295, 1323; emotions of, 421, 435, 440; flee, 442; give birth to monkeys, 165; heavenly city of, 1349; Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 269; lance of Kumbhakarṇa kills, 282; Laṅkā unassailable by, 121, 190; praise Rāma, 393; Rāvaṇa commits crimes against, 200; —defeats, 270, 940; —, invulnerable to, 254, 262, 885; —, thorn in side of, 202; singing of, 1232; support Rāma in battle, 420; surround Lakṣmaṇa, 379, 1228; unable to break bonds of Indrajit, 229; unable to withstand Rāvaṇa, 138; Viṭapāvatī as city of, 1138; witness battles, 90, 155, 99, 347, 381–82, 383, 415, 422, 430, 445, 1218
Gaṇeśa: invocation to, 497
Ganges, 164–65, 403, 477, 482, 612, 637, 644, 647, 1281, 1488, 1490, 1495, 1512; Bhīma dams, 506; flows by three paths, 474, 1488 garland(s): consecrated with spells, 244, 857; multicolored, 488; red as color of, 312, 314, 611, 1046, 1052, 1151; white as color of, 483

Garuḍa 23, 45, 70, 150, 183, 228–30, 332, 490, 491, 498, 820–21, 823, 826–31, 895, 898, 1092, 1103, 1228, 1324, 1535, 1537; able to cross the ocean, 121; appearance of, as indication of narrative expansion, 823–25; appearance of, unheralded, 78, 101, 228–30, 875; arrows of Rāma fletched with feathers of, 437; associated with Indra, 594; assures Rāma he will recover Sītā, 230; claims gods, etc., unable to free serpent-bonds, 229; comes with affection, 229; demonstrates divinity of Rāma, 831; departs, 230; depicted on Viṣṇu's battle flag, 828; depiction of, 826, 828; as devotee, 821; divine weapon-spell of, 421, 1324; drives away serpent-arrows, 65, 228; enmity of, with serpents, 262, 290, 301, 303, 824, 826, 1096, 1307; exchanges boons with Viṣṇu, 828; and the garuḍavyūha, 664–65; heals Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 45, 50, 65, 228, 230; helps Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa stand, 229; inferior to Hanumān, 498; intervention of, in Rāmopākhyāna, 823; as king of the birds, 150, 229, 594–95, 752; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 288; mount and associate of Viṣṇu, 50, 594, 820, 828; Rāma compared to, 262; —describes, 229; Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa as devotees of, 820; Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa fail to recognize immediately, 828; reveals himself as Rāma's second breath, 229; role in removing serpent-weapons well known, 820; as standard of speed, 740–41; terrifies sea serpents, 228; Vinatā as mother of, 829; Viṣṇu mounts back of, 899–900; wind driven by wings of, 825

garuḍavyūha (military formation), 171, 664–65; Rāma arranges, 171

Gavākṣa, 63, 165, 172, 521, 657, 726, 789, 1048, 1079, 1522; Aṅgada addresses, 285; assists Nala in building bridge, 645; climbs Mount Suvela, 194; fights Kumbhakarṇa, 288–90; —Mahāpārśva, 406, 1286; —Rāvaṇa, 253; guards monkey army, 205, 218; Kumbhakarṇa strikes, 289; a langur, 164, 205, 645, 758, 815; marches in front, 127; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; returns to battlefield, 288; seeks refuge with Rāma, 253; seizes mountain peaks, 271; son of Vaivasvata, 172; stands with Rāma, 205; stationed at southern gate, 199, 758; takes counsel with Rāma, 190

Gavaya, 127, 165, 172, 726, 794; brings water for consecration of Rāma, 491, 1536–38; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; expands body, 162, 638; fights Rāvaṇa, 63, 253; guards monkey army, 205, 218; identification of, 758; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; seeks refuge with Rāma, 253; son of Vaivasvata, 172; stationed at southern gate, 199, 758

gāyatrīmantra: Brahmā summons rākṣasas with a similar mantra, 931; as an index to Rāmāyaṇa, 497, 654, 826, 1019, 1026, 1159, 1383

gems: Hanumān gives Rāma's, to Sītā, 481; Kaustubha, 612; navaratnas, 1540; vessels for Rāma's consecration adorned with, 490–91 geography: of continents or dvīpas, in traditional India, 558, 1535; of four directions in Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa, 1091. See also directions ghosts. See malignant spirits goats. See black: goat, Indrajit sacrifices

Godāvarī, 473, 480, 1470

gods (devas): anxiety of, 435; ask Rāma to return to brahmaloka, 1454; asuras as enemies of, 542; avatāra in service of, 51; battle with asuras, 163, 205, 209, 227–28, 273, 378, 382, 640, 642–43, 759, 770, 940–41, 1245–46, 1328; —takes place in kṛtayuga, 532; Bṛhaspati, purohita of, 582, 822; Bṛhaspati uses mṛtasaṃjīvani to heal, 65, 227;

bleeding of, 101, 778–79; boons from, 482; come to Laṅkā in flying chariots, 458; depart in flying chariots, 445; desire victory of Rāma, 186; despair, 270; dharma as observed by, 70; difference between, and asuras, 707; exclusively devoted to dharma, 708; frequent Himalaya, 331; hail Rāma as omniscient, 40; hostility of asuras toward, 423, 1328; identify Rāma as Supreme Lord, 458–61; Indrajit calls upon, to witness his power, 322; instruct Rāma to console Bharata, 463; —Rāma to see Bharata, 467; invulnerability of Atikāya to, 315; Krathana assists, 163; Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 269; lance of Kumbhakarṇa kills, 282; mistake Kumbhakarṇa for Kāla, 270; plant healing herbs, 228; praise Hanumān, 332; present no danger to Rāma, 267; propitiate Brahmā, 396; —Śiva, 396; question ignorance of Rāma, 458–61; Rāma capable of defeating, 722; Rāvaṇa crushes the pride of, 251; —defeats, 273; —does not fear, 388; —invulnerable to, 262; —oppresses, 708; will attain realm of, 201; rebuke Rāma for treatment of Sītā, 1444; rejoice at Rāvaṇa's humiliation, 261; remind Rāma of his true identity, 45, 50; return to heaven, 467; Sītā calls upon, to testify to her chastity, 1441; Śiva grants relief to, 396; Śivasahāya defines two classes of, 886; tell Rāma to proceed to Ayodhyā, 467; Tvaṣṭṛ as architect of, 1044, 1176, 1331, 1342; unable to break bonds of Indrajit, 215, 229; —to conquer Laṅkā, 190; —to defeat Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 222; —to enter Laṅkā, 442; —to kill Kumbhakarṇa, 270; urge on Rāma, 422–23; urge Rāma to return to Ayodhyā, 467; Viśvakarman as architect of, 969; watch chariot duel between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, 422, 430; way of, is righteousness, 186

golden age (kṛtayuga), 4, 15, 33, 186, 532, 708

golden deer, 26, 84, 480, 747

Gomatī River, 160, 477, 484, 1500

Gomukha, 325, 1083

Gorresio: on dance of the gandharvas, 840; and Lokanātha, 910, 943, 1210, 1355; notes of, 651, 803, 850, 930, 943, 996, 1099, 1136, 1144, 1172, 1210, 1426; Roussel influenced by, 115–17, 1338, 1383, 1385, 1386; text of, 18, 497, 504

Govindarāja (Cg), 106, 115, passim; on abruptness of Hanumān, 1502; alternative readings of, 955–57, 959; argues that Rāma would confer kingship of Kosala on Rāvaṇa should he seek refuge with him, 747; on chronology, 1489–91; comments on Saramā's status as a servant, 692; on compassion and tolerance of Sītā, 1420; denies wounding and bleeding of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 101; devotional readings of, 960; on distinction between great seers and divine great seers, 1449; on equality of Sītā with Rāma in virtues, 1420; on fluctuation in weight of Lakṣmaṇa, 896, 898; on ironies of Rāma's situation, 831; on Lakṣmaṇa as yuvarāja, 1544–45; on lamentation of Sītā, 687; on a Laṅkan dialect of Sanskrit, 719; on location of Kiṣkindhā, 519; psychological analysis of, 1440–41; regards sarga as suspect, 669; on scribal error, 804; theological interpretations of, 500, 1420; translation of Raghunathan based on text of, 114; on virtues and feats of Hanumān, 1542. See also commentators

Guha (I) (Niṣāda ally of Rāma), 474, 467, 477, 1472, 1488, 1490, 1496, 1499

Guha (II) (Skanda), 303, 1027; pierces Mount Krauñca, 253, 289, 881, 951, 992

haṃsas, 304, 365, 1072; in description of battlefield as a river, 22, 247, 867;

haṃsas (continued)
fly through gap in Krauñca mountain, 951, 992, 1520; identification of, 1028; Puṣpaka yoked to, 471, 1479–80. See also birds; in the Glossary of Flora and Fauna
Hanumān, 62–67, 175; abruptly included in abortive mission to Candra and Droṇa, 824; accomplishes impossible feats, 225; acts on own initiative, 498; adamantine body of, 903; adviser of Sugrīva, 62; Agastya narrates exploits of, 62; Akampana fights, 851; asks Sītā permission to kill rākṣasīs, 54, 449; assumes human form, 25, 477, 1498–99, 1502–3; attempts to swallow the sun, 649–50; believes Sītā slain, 27, 356–58; Bharata offers to give sixteen maidens to, 478, 1503; —offers to reward, 478–79; —questions, about Rāma's alliance with monkeys, 479; bliss of Brahmā communicated to, 499; boons of, 103, 902–3; breaks Kumbhakarṇa's lance, 292; burns Laṅkā, 267, 515, 550, 554, 560, 565, 651; carries Lakṣmaṇa, 52, 64, 259; —mountain of healing herbs, 18, 65–67, 332, 418; —Rāma, 527, 622–23, 651–52, 727, 902; carrying of mountain as popular episode, 67; celibacy of, 1503; challenges Indrajit, 368; charges Rāvaṇa, 254, 260; childhood exploits of, 166, 649–51; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; comes to aid of Aṅgada, 310; comforts monkeys, 327; commands western gate, 63; commentators on reason for his mentioning only one healing herb, 1315; compared to dharma incarnate, 478, 1501; contest of, with Surasā, 635; conversations with Sītā in Sundarakāṇḍa, 1422; criticizes Aṅgada's advice, 583; cuts off heads of Triśiras, 312; dazed by Rāvaṇa, 289, 887; derives energy from divine boons, 902; describes defenses of Laṅkā, 124, 514; desires nothing other than Rāma's embrace, 499; despairs, 214; destroys aśoka grove, 498; —Dhūmrākṣa's chariot, 236; devotion of, to Rāma, 51, 1412, 1437; devotional traditions of, 62, 64; Dhūmrākṣa draws near, 233; discomfort of commentators with sexuality of, 1503; discovers Sītā, 703; distracted by sorrow, 122; eldest son of Kesarin, 649; encounter of, with Kālanemi, 1315; enters Laṅkā, 442; —Rāvaṇa's palace, 447; equal of Śakra, 549; exploits of, in Laṅkā, 62; extraordinary service of, 500; feats of, 185, 1542; fetches healing herbs, 329–32; fights Devāntaka, 310; —Dhūmrākṣa, 235–36; —forces of Indrajit, 367; —Jambumālin, 206; —Nikumbha, 341–43; —Rāvaṇa, 63, 259; —Triśiras, 311; flight of, across the ocean, 62, 66, 565, 745; —, to fetch healing herbs, 329–32; Govindarāja on abruptness of, 1502; —on virtues and feats of, 1542; gratified that Rāma is uninjured in battle, 1415; heads toward Mount Meru, 330; healing herbs hide from, 331; image of, carrying Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 64; immune to Indrajit's attacks, 68; impossible feat of, 30; incarnation of divinity, 703; indispensable in the defeat of Rāvaṇa, 62; Indra strikes, with vajra, 650; Indrajit boasts he will slay, 354; —charges, 63, 367–68; —pierces, with arrows, 325; invisibility of herbs to, 1315; Jāmbavān asks about welfare of, 66; —asks only of survival of, 328; —claims, only one not expendable, 328; —instructs, as to how to save monkeys, 328–29; —narrates exploits of, 62; —sends, to Himalaya, 329, 1096; Jambumālin strikes, 207; jawbone of, broken, 650; Kesarin as father of, 525, 644; kills Akampana, 63, 241; —Akṣa, 267; —Devāntaka, 310; —Dhūmrākṣa, 236; —horses of Triśiras, 311; —Jambumālin, 560; —Nikumbha, 63,

343, 562, 1138, 1141; —rākṣasas, 356; —Triśiras, 312; —Yūpākṣa, 924; knocks Rāvaṇa down, 64, 897; Kumbhakarṇa pierces, 289; lands on Mount Trikūṭa, 332; leads attack on Indrajit, 355; leap of, crushes mountain, 329–30; leaps ocean, 185; learning of, 577; locates Himalaya, 331, 1097; —Kailāsa, 331; Maināka assists, 616; maintains watch, 218; material reward inadequate for service of, 1414; may have brother, 649; monkeys honor, 236, 241; most important monkey, 62; Mount Meru, childhood home of, 649; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; origin of name of, 650–51; penetrates fortress of Laṅkā, 62; popular stories and art concerning, 64; power of, compared to Garuḍa, 330; Puñjikasthalā as mother of, 907; questions Vibhīṣaṇa as to how to cross the ocean, 599; rallies monkeys, 355; Rāma asks, to note Bharata's gestures, 476; —asks, to tell Bharata about events in exile, 476; —calls upon, for special missions, 63; —commends, 67; —embraces, 121; —fights Rāvaṇa on the back of, 259; —hears report of, 121; —instructs, to watch facial expressions of Bharata, 59; —orders, to care for Lakṣmaṇa, 415; —orders, to tell Sītā of death of Rāvaṇa, 447; —posts, at western gate, 192, 199; —praises, 62, 225; —recognizes, as in service of Sugrīva, 67; —sends Jāmbavān to assist, 357; —sends, to Bharata, 25, 63; —sends, to convey news of victory, 58–59; —takes advice of, 62; —urges, to witness battle with Rāvaṇa, 415; rampage of, in Sundarakāṇḍa, 28; Rāvaṇa addresses, 254; —praises prowess of, 255; —strikes, 260; —struck with palm of, 255; —stuns, 255; reason for second trip of, to fetch healing herbs, 1316; rebukes Indrajit for seizing Sītā, 353–54; —Nīla for interfering in fight with Rāvaṇa, 256; recapitulates career of Rāma to Bharata, 60, 61, 479–82; receives Brahmā's bliss, 499; recommends accepting Vibhīṣaṇa as an ally, 146–147; recovers from Rāvaṇa's blow, 256; reminds Rāvaṇa of death of Akṣa, 886; reports apparent murder of Sītā to Rāma, 357–58; —Rāvaṇa's slaying and Rāma's well-being to Sītā, 447–48; —Sītā as eager to see Rāma, 48; —Sītā slain to Rāma, 27, 36, 47; —Sītā's reply to Rāma, 1421; —success of Rāma to Bharata, 478; respectfully greets Jāmbavān, 328; respects boons of Brahmā, 775; returns mountain of healing herbs to Himalaya, 332; role of, in Rāmāyaṇa, 62; —, in success of Rāmāvatāra, 66; —, in Sundarakāṇḍa, 62, 66–67; —, in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 62; —in Rāmāyaṇa, 62; rushes Dhūmrākṣa, 236; —Indrajit, 354; searches battlefield with Vibhīṣaṇa, 327; sees abode of Brahmā, 331, 1098; —abode of Hayānana, 331, 1099; —abode of Hiraṇyagarbha, 331, 1098–99; —abode of Kubera Vaiśravaṇa, 331, 1100; —abode of Śakra, 331; —abode of sun, 331, 1100; —Indrajit seize Sīta by the head, 353; —navel of the earth, 331, 1100–1101; —no point in continuing battle after slaying of illusory Sītā, 356; —place of Śaṅkara's bow, 331, 1100; —place where Brahmā's head fell, 331, 1099; —place where Rudra loosed arrows, 331, 1099; —place where vajra was presented, 331, 1100; —servants of Vaivasvata, 331, 1099; —throne of Brahmā, 331, 1100; seizes mountain of healing herbs, 332; —mountain peaks, 271; shows reverence to divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 327, 1087; Sītā fails to recognize, 1412; —gives garments and necklace to, 492; —gives pearl necklace to, 64–65; —looks to Rāma for permission to give necklace to, 492; —praises, 449, 1415;

Hanumān (continued)
—refuses request of, 54; slaughters rākṣasas in Sundarakāṇḍa, 515, 550; smashes chariot of Dhūmrākṣa, 236; —domed place, 135; son of Kesarin, 166, 525, 643–44, 649, 667; speaks for Vibhīṣaṇa, 146–47; stops fleeing monkeys, 293; strikes Kumbhakarṇa, 288–89; —Rāvaṇa, 254; —Triśiras, 311; stunned by Rāvaṇa, 63; succumbs to battle fatigue, 841; Sugrīva tells, to bring healing herbs, 228; Śuka narrates exploits of, 62; superior to Vāyu and Garuḍa, 498; Suṣeṇa sends, to fetch healing herbs, 65, 67, 417–18; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; tears off summit of mountain of healing herbs, 332; tears open own chest, 65; tells Bharata about nalasetu, 482; threatens mountain of herbs, 331–32; unable to help Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 326; —to identify healing herbs, 418, 1315; unharmed in battle, 327; uninjured by Indrajit, 66; urges Rāma to accept Vibhīṣana, 586; —Rāma to see Sītā, 451; Vāyu, father of, 840, 1138; —inferior to, 498; —supports mission of, 1105; virtues of, 1542; vomits blood, 288; withdraws from battle with Indrajit, 356; worthy foe of Indrajit, 722; wounded, 903
Hara, 162, 194
Hariloma, 325
Hasta, 126, 519–20, 621
hasta. See measurement Hayānana, 331, 1099
head(s): Akampana killed by blow to, 241; crushed, of Mahodara, 311; of illusory Sītā grabbed by Indrajit, 1161; Indrajit threatens to sever, of Lakṣmaṇa, 372; Lakṣmaṇa threatens to sever, of Atikāya, 318; number of Rāvaṇa's, 1367–68; place where Brahmā's, falls, 331, 1099; severed, of Atikāya, 321; —, human, as emblem on Rāvaṇa's battle standard, 1300; —, of Indrajit, 382, 384, 1231; —, of Indrajit's charioteer, 379; —, of Kumbhakarṇa, 76, 92, 93, 298, 1016; —, of Mahodara, 405, 1284; —, of Rāmas, illusory, 26, 52, 76, 85, 87, 95, 174–80, 687; —, of Rāvaṇa, 24, 412, 436, 1367–69; —, of Rāvaṇa's charioteer, 412; —, restored to body by healing herbs, 1092; —, of Vṛtra, 24; shattered, of Devāntaka, 21, 310; —, of Dhūmrākṣa, 21, 236; —, of Narāntaka, 865; —, of Prahasta, 248–49; split open, of Aṅgada, 308; twisted off, of Nikumbha, 343, 766, 1140 healing herbs, 66; Bṛhaspati uses, to heal gods, 65; commentators on Hanuman's mentioning only one, 1315; commentators on reason for second trip of Hanuman to fetch, 1316; conceal themselves from Hanumān, 67; flight of Hanumān to fetch, 329–32; found on mountains in ocean of milk, 823; fragrance of, revives Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and monkeys, 332, 418, 1317; Hanumān unable to identify, 418, 1315; hide from Hanumān, 331; invisibility of, to Hanumān, 1315; Jāmbavān tells Hanumān of, 329; planted by the gods, 228; rejuvenate slain and wounded warriors, 67; second trip of Hanumān to fetch, 1316; source of, 824; Suṣena heals wounds of Rāma's army with, 385; —sends Hanumān to fetch, 417–18; —tells of, 227; —uses, to heal Lakṣmaṇa, 418. See also healing herbs, types of healing herbs, mountain of, 164, 329, 823–24; Hanumān brings, to Suṣeṇa, 418; Hanumān carries summit of, to Laṅkā, 332; Hanumān threatens, 331–32; identified as Mount Mahodaya, 1314; located in Himalayas, 1314 healing herbs, types of, 823–24; mṛtasaṃjīvanī (restorer of life to the dead), 329, 823, 1091–92, 1102; saṃdhānī (joiner of limbs) 329, 1091, 1093; saṃjīvakaraṇī (restorer of life), 228, 823, 1102, 1192; saṃjīvanī

(restorer of life), 418, 823, 1092, 1314, 1315; sauvarṇakaraṇī (restorer of a golden glow), 329, 418, 1091–92, 1314; viśalyā (healer of arrow wounds), 228, 329, 417–18, 823, 1091–92, 1314, 1315, 1317–19. See also healing herbs hedgehog, 227, 819 heir apparent. See yuvarāja Hemakūṭa, 172
hierarchy: critique of, 38; deference of younger to elder in, 37, 58, 83, 444, 1090, 1383, 1520–22; familial, 1545; inversion of, 1254; social, 1496, 1520
Himalaya, 18, 44, 165, 612, 752, 824, 874, 878, 896, 1017, 1047, 1091, 1093, 1101, 1104, 1450; abode of Brahmā, 331, 1098; —of Hayānana, 331, 1099; —of Hiraṇyagarbha, 331, 1098–99; —of Kubera Vaiśravaṇa, 331, 1100; —of Śakra, 331; —of sun, 331, 1100; Akampana compared to, 250; Alakā located in, 1524; Atikāya compared to, 314, 321; best of mountains, 167; burning mansions of Laṅkā compared to, 334; description of, 331; Ganges, daughter of, 164; Hanumān fetches healing herbs from, 65, 66, 70; —locates, 331, 1097; —returns mountain of healing herbs to, 332; holy ashrams on, 331; Jāmbavān sends Hanumān to, 329, 1096; Krauñca as peak of, 951; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 24, 299; location of healing herbs, 768; lord of mountains, 329, 978, 1047; medicinal herbs of, 1091, 1092; mountain of healing herbs near, 66, 329, 1314; place of Śaṅkara's bow, 331, 1100; —where Brahmā's head fell, 331, 1099; —where Rudra loosed arrows, 331, 1099; Rāvaṇa able to lift, 259, 896; as standard of steadfastness, 896–97; Triśiras compared to, 303; unable to withstand divine weapons released by Atikāya, 317; viśalya herb grows on, 824
Hindu ideology: foundational ontological and eschatological principles of, 38
Hiraṇyagarbha, 1101; bliss arising from, 988; as Brahmā, 1100; "golden embryo," in Ādityahṛdaya, 1342; Hanumān sees abode of, 331, 1098–99; as Viṣṇu, 827
Homeric account of violence, 5, 21, 1014 honey-wine: Kataka believes Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa use to cure monkeys, 905; monkeys gorge on, 536–37; Rāvaṇa intoxicated from, 1489; refreshment for monkeys, 131, 520; in Sundarakāṇḍa, 520, 536–37; Vajrahanu instructs Rāvaṇa to drink, 139; warriors drink before entering battle, 335, 1118 Horse Sacrifice (aśvamedha): in Balākāṇḍa, 1459; of Daśaratha, 1459; Maheśvara tells Rāma to perform, 463; of Rāma, 335, 493, 799, 1546–47 horses, 207; emitting sparks from hindquarters of, as bad omen, 431; halting steps of, as bad omen, 344; of Indra, 1176; loss of strength of, as bad omen, 344, 1143; stumbling of, as bad omen, 245, 399, 1143, 1276; tears in eyes of, as bad omen, 187, 344, 431, 710. See also equine similes human effort (pauruṣa, puruṣakāra), 359–60, 551, 964, 1174, 1176, 1196, 1432. See also fate human ends or goals (puruṣārthas), righteousness, profit, and pleasure, 35, 499, 946–47, 962–64, 1178, 1447, 1432. See also artha; dharma; kāma human form: of the avatāra, 44, 713; Govindarāja on, of Lakṣmaṇa, 896; Govindarāja on, of Rāma, 1461; Hanumān assumes, 25, 477, 1498–99, 1502–3; monkeys do not take on, in battle, 192–93, 723; of monkeys on trip to Ayodhyā, 485, 489, 723, 1522; Rāma instructs monkeys not to take on, in battle, 192, 723; of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in battle, 192–93, 723; of Sugrīva, 1532; of Vibhīṣaṇa and his four ministers, 25, 192–93 humans, as danger to Rāvaṇa, 262, 267, 907 hundred-slayers (śataghnī), 339, 367; made of iron, 124; tied to ropes and straps, 265; type of weapon, 124–25, 509, 919, 1073, 1192. See also weapons; Glossary of Weapons hyperbole, 24, 76–77, 1003, 1404. See also alaṃkāras; poetic figures

Ikṣvākus, 24, 530; Anaraṇya as dynast of, 559; exalted through accomplishment of ancestor Triśañku, 129, 530, 681–82; Kosala as region of, 1326; Śrīrañganātha as presiding divinity of, 1544; the twin Viśākhas as significant constellation of, 130, 530, 1326; Vasiṣṭha as preceptor of, 530, 1525
Iliad, 95
illusion: Indrajit creates and kills simulacrum of Sītā with, 47, 352–54, 1159–62; Indrajit's power of, 229; Saramā identifies Rāma head as, 181; vanishes, 26, 52, 180; of Vidyujjihva, creates simulacra of Rāma's severed head and bow, 26, 52, 173–74, 176. See also Indrajit; magical illusion inauspicious omens. See omens
Indra (Śakra, Vāsava), 23, 24, 248; armor of, given to Rāma, 420, 1246; battle of, with Vṛtra, 410; bow of, 430, 1349–50; cannot defeat Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 222; chariot and charioteer (Mātali) of, 1349; chariot of, described, 420; defeats the daityas, 697; as deity of monsoon, 786; delights at the slaying of Indrajit, 383; divine weapon-spell of, 221, 297, 320, 382, 1013, 1063, 1230; fashions weapons, 1331; fears Rāvaṇa, 442; fights Kumbhakarṇa, 270; foe of Kumbhakarṇa, 289; gives his armor to Rāma, 420; gives his chariot and charioteer to Rāma, 420; gives his weapons to Rāma, 420; grants boon to monkeys, 532; grants boon to Rāma, 466–67; heaven of (world of), 420, 463, 466; horses of, 1358–59; Indrajit defeats, 348; javelin of, 424; killing of Vṛtra by, as standard of comparison, 24, 174, 299, 382, 410, 438, 445, 672, 869, 1015, 1132, 1176, 1204, 1294, 1376, 1405, 1449; kills dānavas, 420; —Vṛtra, 299, 445; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 268; Lakṣmaṇa uses weapon-spell of, to sever Indrajit's head, 382; and Namuci, 850; obscure mythological reference to, 822; power of Indrajit compared to power of, 324; Prajāpati creates, 1449; Rāma compared to, 261; Rāma equal of, in use of weapons and divine weapon-spell, 393; Rāma's weapon compared to vajra of, 261; Rāvaṇa compared to, 249; —shoots horses of, 421; —terrorizes, 440; recovers Lakṣmī, 697; releases torrents of rain, 380; said to welcome Garuḍa, 594–95; sends chariot and charioteer, Mātali, to Rāma, 1321; severs head of Vṛtra, 24, 298; slays a sage and performs a sacrifice, 359; strikes Hanumān with vajra, 650; —Mount Meru with vajra, 261, 903, 1135; thunderbolt of, 153, 355, 374, 413; unable to break bonds of Indrajit, 229; —to save Rāvaṇa, 260; vajra of, 300, 438, 444, 485; stopped by Atikāya's arrows, 315; Vāyu as messenger of, 1102; Vāyu's antagonism with, 1103; Viṣṇu as inner spirit of, 1449. See also aśani; Śakra; vajra; Vāsava Indrajit (Rāvaṇi), 77–80; acquires name by defeating Indra, 783; as all-but-invincible sorcerer-warrior, 55; Aṅgada bests, 774; archery skill of, 378; armor of, 369, 375, 382; army of, described, 366; arrow of, gift from Kubera, 381; —, gift from Yama, 381; arrows of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa do not hit, 350; asceticism of, 364; assails monkey troop leaders, 215; battle of, with Lakṣmaṇa described, 372–84; binds Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with serpent-arrows, 46, 50, 56, 212–13, 776, 778, 864; boasts, 215, 349, 354;

boons of, 212, 214, 251, 325, 350, 364, 559, 775, 810, 834, 875, 930, 1081, 1156, 1185, 1187, 1189; —arrows of, as a result of, 1068, 1079; —from Brahmā, 212, 326, 774–75, 834, 875; —from Paśupati (Śiva), 1186–87; —from sacrificial fire, 1185–86; —from Śiva, 834; —obtained Brahmaśiras from, 364; —obtained chariot-horses from, 364; —of invisibility, 212, 215, 326, 788; —of invisibility received in exchange for releasing Indra, 788; calls upon gods to witness his power, 322; can take any form at will, 214; capable of leading troops, 242; character of, 77–80; compared to Hanumān, 240; conditions of boon of, revealed, 364; creates and destroys a simulacrum of Sītā, 27, 78, 85, 352–54, 1159–64, 1465; creates dense darkness, 350; cuts down monkeys, Rāma, and Lakṣmaṇa with divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 324–26, 327; defeats Indra, 214, 348; deludes monkey army, 36, 212; deploys serpent-weapons, 212–13, 777–78; disables Lakṣmaṇa, 56, 65–66, 231–32, 326; —monkeys, 56, 65, 66, 327; —Rāma, 231–32, 326; divine weapon-spells of, 349, 364; Indrajit severs head of, 382; drives back monkey army, 354; employs serpent-weapons, 56, 65, 212–13; energy of, compared to Agni's, 324; enters Laṅkā, 216–17; fights Aṅgada, 206–7; —deceitfully, 776; —Hanumān, 63, 354–56; —Lakṣmaṇa, 27, 47, 55, 372–84; —monkeys, 212, 324–26, 356–57; form of, impossible to see, 350; garments of, red, 324, 349, 1076; goes before his father, 217; Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa as immune to attacks of, 68; Hanumān withdraws from battle with, 356; horses of, slain, 211; invincibility of, if he completes sacrifice, 362, 364; as invisible foe, 221, 324, 326, 348–49, 352, 363, 369, 372, 504, 539, 596, 609, 774, 776, 779, 1077–78, 1151, 1153, 1158, 1165, 1184, 1190, 1207, 1231; invisibility of, 28, 53, 78–90, 221, 324, 326, 348–49, 352, 363–64, 369, 372, 504, 539, 596, 609, 774, 776–77, 779–80, 1077–78, 1151, 1153, 1158; 1165, 1184, 1190, 1207, 1231; —chariot of, 349, 352; obtained from boon, 788, 834, 875; iron arrows of, 212, 214, 350, 351; Jāmbavān attacks army of, 378; kills monkeys, 325–26, 351; Lakṣmaṇa wishes to use divine weapon-spell of Brahmā against, 351, 1157; —challenges, to fight, 369; —kills, 382; —kills charioteer of, 379; —reviles, 371; magical illusion (māyā) of, 25, 28, 47, 53, 78–79, 190, 211, 221, 229, 324–25, 352–53, 364–65, 388, 700, 774, 776, 1081, 1089, 1155, 1159, 1183, 1187, 1188, 1190, 1194; —, baffles monkeys with, 325; —, as master of, 190, 216–17, 352, 366, 722, 774, 814, 1189, 1190; marches through western gate, 352; master of divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 364, 777; monkeys cannot see, 215; mounts chariot, 349; obtains invisibility from boon, 788, 834, 875; power of, compared to Indra's, 325; praises family loyalty, 370; pretends to slay illusory form of Sītā, 352; protected by divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 349, 1152; Rāma impervious to weapons of, 325; —orders monkey leaders to find, 212; —sends Lakṣmaṇa to battle, 364–65; —sends Vibhīṣaṇa to battle, 365; —submits to brahmāstra of, 326; Rāvaṇa assigns to the western gate, 190; —laments, 73, 386–87; —praises, 217–18, 793; reviles Vibhīṣaṇa, 369–70, 571; riddles Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with arrows, 212–13, 350; sacrifice of, 323–24, 348–49, 356–57, 1167–68, 1186–87; —, incomplete, 367; sacrifices black goat, 324, 349, 1075–76, 1404; sacrificial ground of, described, 369; sallies forth, 323; says not even

Indrajit (Rāvaṇi) (continued)
Śakra can see him, 213; seizes illusory form of Sītā by the head, 353; serpent-arrows/weapons of, 46, 50, 56, 65, 78, 82, 87, 100, 212, 228, 232, 775, 779, 820, 828–29, 1194, 1206, 1228, 1324, 1486; shoots sharp arrows unseen, 212; —Lakṣmaṇa in forehead, 380; Śiva grants boon to, 843; son of Rāvaṇa, 139, 215; strikes down Āhuka, 327; —Aṅgada, 327; —Dvivida, 327; —Gandhamādana, 327; —Jāmbavān, 327; —Jyotimukha, 327; —Mainda, 327; —Nala, 327; —Panasa, 327; —Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 312–13, 326; —Śarabha, 327; —Sugrīva, 327; —Suṣeṇa, 327; —Vegadarśin, 327; tells Rāvaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are dead, 217; terrible bondage of, 229; threatens Lakṣmaṇa, 372; —Vibhīṣaṇa and the monkeys, 371; uses divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 66, 324, 1083; —of Rudra in battle with Lakṣmaṇa, 382; vanishes, 211; Vibhīṣaṇa able to see when invisible, 28, 215; —advises Lakṣmaṇa to attack army of, 366; —describes, 251; —foretells destruction of, 370–71; —observes unpropitious signs on, 374; —predicts Lakṣmaṇa's victory over, 364; —rebukes, 370; —shoots, 381; —urges monkeys to attack, 377; —urges Rāma to send Lakṣmaṇa to slay, 362–63; victorious, 216; vows to kill Rāma, 139–40, 322; weapons of, 356; withdraws from battle, 352; would achieve invulnerability upon completion of sacrifice to sun, 788
Indus River, 544, 612, 637 inner apartments (antaḥpura), 1543; attack of Hanumān on, 138, 560; Rāma accuses Sītā of residing in Rāvaṇa's, 461, 462; of Rāvaṇa, 49, 190, 387, 439, 1114; Vibhīṣaṇa enters, 451 instruments, musical. See musical instruments interpolation(s), 578, 621, 800, 938, 1016, 1031, 1382–83, 1483, 1507; "modern" 1409; sarga in which Mandodarī rebukes Rāvaṇa as, 870; Vaiṣṇava, 1007 invisibility: of creatures, 609; existence of, 38; of Indrajit, 28, 53, 78–80, 221, 324, 326, 348–49, 352, 363–64, 369, 372, 504, 539, 596, 609, 774, 776–77, 779–80, 1077–78, 1151, 1153, 1158, 1165, 1184, 1190, 1207, 1231; māyā, as ability to see through, 789; of medicinal herbs, 67, 331, 1103, 1315; of moon, 1216, 1310; obtained from boon, 788, 834, 875; of rākṣasas, 578, 760, 769; of Sītā, 1430; of sun, 1216; of Supreme Spirit, 1451; Vibhīṣaṇa destroys, of rākṣasas, 760; as way of thieves, 372 invocation, 1077, 1155; of deities begins manuscripts, 497; nanu as marker of, 805 iron, 672, 1045, 1054, 1128; color of, compared to sun, 422, 1325; Guruge on, 509; hundred slayers made of, 124; kenning for, 1287; Vyas on, 509; wrought, 509 iron, black. See black iron iron arrows, 175, 212, 214, 316, 626, 784, 851, 1078, 1122, 1155–56, 1202, 1207, 1209, 1222–23, 1295; of Atikāya, 316; of Indrajit, 212, 214, 350, 351; of Lakṣmaṇa, 372, 375, 1207; of Rāma, 347; of Rāvaṇa, 410, 416 iron bars, 124, 508 iron beams, 437, 1226, 1373
iron club, 23, 125, 137, 139, 175, 232, 234–35, 238, 246, 284, 303, 309, 336, 346, 394, 433, 435, 444, 555, 569, 837, 1073, 1118–19, 1143, 1225, 1283, 1286–87, 1366; Aṅgada picks up, 406–7; of Devāntaka, 303, 309, 310; of Kumbhakarṇa, 285, 982; of Mahāpārśva, 406; of Mahodara, 404, of Nikumbha, 251, 341, 342; —, shattered 342, 1337–38, 1139; Sugrīva picks up, 404; of Vajradaṃṣṭra, 139 iron cudgels, 175, 209, 232, 238, 314, 324, 335, 366, 367, 371, 378, 559, 1039, 1078–79, 1109, 1128, 1144, 1199, 1200; Aṅgada picks up, 406; of Mahodara, 309 iron mace, 1122; of Mahāpārśva, 312; Mahodara, 404, 1286–87 iron shafts, 338, 1128 iron war hammers, 367

Jābāli, 491; critique of dharma of, 38, 56, 652; refuted by Rāma, 56
Jagannātha, 1544
Jāmbavān, 66–68, 82, 126, 163, 175, 198, 212, 218, 326, 364, 384, 408, 1107–8; advanced age of, 327; advises Rāma to interrogate Vibhīṣaṇa, 146; asks only if Hanumān still lives, 66, 328; assigned to rear guard (kukṣi), 526; attacks Indrajit's army, 378; Bharata embraces, 485; boons of, from Śakra, 163; born from Brahmā's mouth, 666; brings water for Rāma's consecration, 491, 1536; brother of Ṛkṣavant, 163; —of Dhūmra, 640; cut down, 175; directs Hanumān to fly to the Himalayas, 18, 328–29; fights Kumbhakarṇa, 339; —Mahānāda, 247; —rākṣasas, 378; follows Rāma into battle, 198; guards the rear of the army, 127–28, 526; Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa search battlefield for, 327; Hanumān turns back army of, 357; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; —strikes down in battle, 327; instructs Hanumān how to save monkeys, 328–29, 1101; king of the apes, 18, 127, 190, 192, 226, 365, 378, 385, 406, 522–23, 723, 739, 815, 1189, 1286, —in Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa, 523; king of the bears, 522–23; knows where the mountain of healing herbs is, 417, 1314; Lakṣmaṇa encounters army of, 365; Mahāpārśva wounds, 406; maintains watch, 218; narrates Hanumān's exploits, 62; proceeds toward western gate, 357; Rāma orders, to find Indrajit, 212; —sends, to assist Hanumān, 357; —stations, at central encampment, 192; reassures monkeys, 226; renders Indra assistance, 163; riddled with arrows, 327; sends Hanumān to fetch healing herbs, 329, 823; —to region of Himalaya, 329, 1096; shares central command with Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa, 68; son of Brahmā, 640; —of Gadgada, 171, 666; —of Prajāpati, 327; states that only Hanumān is indispensable, 328; stationed at central encampment, 199; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; unable to help Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 326; —to see, 328; Vibhīṣaṇa sees, on battlefield, 327; among wounded, 1088; wounded by arrows, 327
Jambū River, 611, 643
jambū tree, 163, 642; identification of, 643 Jambumālin, 764, 1213; fights Hanumān, 206; son of Prahasta, 560; strikes Hanumān, 207 jāmbūnada gold, 154, 167, 251, 253, 297–98, 349, 611, 653
Janaka: Sītā receives name from 457, 1438–39
Jānakī. See Sītā
Janasthāna, 221, 475, 480, 628; commentators on survivors in, 966–67; Govindarāja on Vibhīṣaṇa removing guards from, 1478; Rāma kills Khara in, 442; —kills rākṣasas of, 100, 172, 184, 279, 395, 668, 702, 797, 804, 844, 966, 1264, 1493; —shows, to Sītā, 473; Sītā abducted from, 30, 140, 144, 167, 425
Jaṭin, 137, 556 javelin (śakti), 11; chariot- (rathaśakti), 207, 314, 763, 1050, 1226, 1357; word play on, 893. See also in the Glossary of Weapons
jewelry, 174, 218, 795, 977
Jyotirmukha (v.l. Jyotimukha), 63, 172, 253, 325, 327, 881; Indrajit strikes down, 327

Kabandha, 172, 296, 395, 426, 473, 475, 481, 668, 1010, 1369
Kadrū: mother of snakes, 229, 829, 1228, 1324
Kaikeyī, 463, 475, 1462, 1488, 1497, 1534, 1549; and adjective "illustrious," 1459, 1472, 1523; Bharata chastises, 58; boons of, 479; —,terms of, fulfilled, 59; as cause of the destruction of Rāvaṇa, 1459, 1461, 1523; commentators understand Rāma has no evil thoughts toward, 1170; Daśaratha takes back curse on, 465; Daśaratha's anger toward, 464, 1462; Daśaratha's compliance with, 38; Daśaratha's forgiveness of, 465; obduracy of, 1461; Rāma absolves, 41, 486; —dreads telling, of Lakṣmaṇa's death, 223, 811–12; —pays obeisance to, 486, 490; —wishes to see, 469; reconciled to Rāma's ascension to the throne, 1525; subordinate position of, 1516
Kailāsa, Mount, 196; as abode of silver, 1098–99, 1101; —of Śiva, 1394; Hanumān locates on flight, 331; kenning for, 1098–99; Kubera lives on summit of, 137, 643; as location of Sītā, 1456; Mount Meru close to, 1096; mountain of healing herbs located between, and Mount Ṛṣabha, 329, 824, 1091, 1096, 1101–2, 1314; parts of Laṅkā resemble peaks of, 196, 204, 335, 756; Rāvaṇa shakes peak of, 896, 907–8, 1394; Rāvaṇa sports with Mandodarī on, 443
Kaiṭabha, 852, 1446
Kāla, 172, 177, 180, 194, 218, 221, 244, 270, 298, 314, 317, 319, 320, 322, 371, 382, 386, 397, 413, 423, 572, 646, 667, 679–80, 719, 775, 795, 805, 859, 909, 922, 927, 930, 1003, 1008–9, 1014, 1019, 1021, 1024, 1050, 1052, 1056, 1060, 1062, 1198, 1208, 1242, 1269, 1301, 1334, 1342, 1344, 1382, 1447, 1525, 1548; as antaka, "Ender of all things," 172, 244, 298, 320–21, 371, 667, 859, 991, 1014, 1062, 1198; compared to Atikāya, 317; compared to Prahasta, 244; cooks all creatures, 679; as Death, 1198; gods mistake Kumbhakarṇa for, 270; mouth of, compared to Atikāya's, 314; noose of, 193, 371, 558; nothing beyond power of, 221. See also antaka; Death; Yama Kālakeyas, 557
Kālanemi: magical illusion of, 1315
Kālarātrī, 52, 178, 211, 311, 680, 770, 1043; Triśiras releasing javelin compared to Yama releasing, 311
Kaliyuga. See Tiṣya (Kali) Age kalpabheda, 527, 620, 1482, 1484–85
kāma (pleasure): brings immediate gratification, 966; lowest of human ends, 946–47; as one of the three goals, 35, 274–75, 278, 570, 964, 1178, 1432. See also puruṣārthas
Kāmandaka (nītiśāstra of), 521–22, 564, 706, 1415; on political stratagems, 563; on qualities of friends, 501 Kaṇḍu, 149, 587, 591–92
karma, 545, 659, 1019; inevitability of, 450; Sītā blames suffering on, 55, 549; system of, 38, 965–67
Kataka (Ck): derides rival as "Yadvābhaṭṭa," 966; his devotional interpretation of scattering of Rāvaṇa's heads, 1369; rejects some sarga divisions as inauthentic, 638, 725, 849, 1363; relationship of, to Maheśvaratīrtha, 105–6, theological interest in Brahmā of, 1061. See also commentators Kausalyā, 177–78, 223, 389–90, 464, 469, 471, 483, 488, 490, 679, 690–91, 805, 811–12, 1271; consumes pāyasa, 1312, 1521; contemplates suicide, 390, 1251; heart will break at news of slaying of Rāma, 389; as illustrious, 463, 1459; joy of, 464; mother of Rāma, object of Sītā's grief, 805–6; poet differentiates from junior wives, 812; Rāma dreads telling, of Lakṣmaṇa's death, 223; reunion of, with

Rāma, 485–86; shares pāyasa with Sumitrā, 1312; will enter fire or water at news of slaying of Rāma, 390
Kaustubha, 612
Kauṭilya. See Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya
Kesari[n] (I) (vānara chief), 128, 164, 225, 325, 645, 815; identification of, 525–26, 645–46
Kesarin (II) (Hanumān's father), 644, 815; father of Hanumān, 166, 525, 643–44, 649, 667; identification of, 525–26, 645–46; kills the asura Śamba-sādana, 644; son of Bṛhaspati, 667
Khara, 174, 296, 628, 1010; as aggressor in conflict, 565–66; brother of Rāvaṇa, 426, 1334, 1389; killing of, and kṣatriyadharma, 652; Makarākṣa, son of, 344, 346, 1140, 1145–47; order of episode inconsistent, 1505–6; rākṣasa attendants of, 966; Rāma slays in Janasthāna, 30, 100, 140, 172, 215, 394–95, 436, 442, 473, 668, 702, 788, 1264, 1369, 1372; Rāvaṇa remembers, 1022; —wants to avenge death of, 398, 1271–72; Triśiras as lieutenant of, 1020 kiṃkaras: an elite rākṣasa force, 514–15; servants, 876–87; —of Yama, 983, 1334; —of (Yama) Vaivasvata, 1099 kiṃśuka tree (Butea monosperma): red flower of, 22, 92, 213, 290, 325, 334, 351, 376, 425, 733–34, 779, 844, 993, 1082, 1112, 1156–57, 1210, 1225, 1333
kinnaras: become anxious, 435; frequent Himalaya, 163, 642; lance of Mahodara kills, 282; miscegenation of, 188; Rāvaṇa crushes, 269; as witnesses, 347
kinsmen: as jealous and ambitious, 31; nature of, 32, 141; Rāvaṇa's tirade against, 141–42; as a sign of a rich man, 360; take pleasure in others' hardships, 32, 141; vicious, as a source of danger, 31–32, 142; who wish well, as a sign of highest type of man, 29, 135–36
Kiṣkindhā, 58, 94, 167, 227; a cavern, 167, 654–55; chronology of Rāma's stay in, 1491; Govindarāja on location of, 519; Laṅkā southeast of, 519, 529; Rāma asks Sugrīva to return to, 471; return of Rāma and monkeys to, in Puṣpakavimāna, 482; Sugrīva tells Vibhīṣaṇa to take Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to, 227; Sugrīva's capital, 497; Sugrīva's home, 165; Vibhīṣaṇa sees parallel political situations in Laṅkā and Kiṣkindhā, 587
Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa: Aṅgada made yuvarāja in, 946; childhood exploits of Hanumān related in, and Uttarakāṇḍa, 649–51; description of oceans in, 1535; Dvivida paired with Mainda as sons of the Aśvins in, 582; geography of four directions in, 1091, 1535; Jāmbavān as king of apes in, 523; short temper of Sugrīva in, 1279; story of monkeys in cave of Svayaṃprabhā told in, 506–7, 1509–10
Kosala, 15, 44, 202, 422, 1525; Govindarāja conjectures that Rāma might confer kingship of, on Vibhīṣaṇa, 747; prospers at Rāma's consecration, 492; Viśākha, constellation of House of, 1325
Krathana, 161; son of Agni and a gandharva, born to assist the gods, 163
Krauñca (I) (name of an asura), 992
Krauñca (II) (name of forest), 436 krauñca (type of bird), 334, 535, 1111, 1126
Krauñca, Mount: gap in, 36, 275, 569, 572, 951; Guha pierces, 253, 289, 881, 951, 992; as peak of Himalaya, 951; Rāma Jāmadagnya pierces, 951
Kṛṣṇa, 4, 41, 763; able to be picked up by gopīs, 51; in Bhagavadgītā, 964, 988; —, as Kāla, 1050; as child, 51, 896; kills Śiśupāla in Mahābhārata, 1447; makes self heavy to defeat Tṛṇāvarta, 51; Rāma as, 459, 460, 1448; slays Naraka in Mahābhārata, 1024;

Kṛṣṇa (continued) younger brother of Balarāma, 1453, 1454. See also Kṛṣṇāvatāra
Kṛṣṇagiri mountains, 161, 634
Kṛṣṇāvatāra, 41, 1454
kṛta yuga (golden age), 4, 708; battle between gods and asuras occurs during, 532; righteousness eclipses unrighteousness in, 33, 186. See also golden age; yugas
Kubera Vaiśravaṇa, 277, 340, 442, 569, 626, 643, 721, 873, 1132, 1443, 1518–19, 1524; abode of, 331, 643, 1100; associated with gūhyakas, 1017–18; associated with yakṣas, 1017–18, 1138, 1158; bestower of wealth, 174, 395, 426, 555; disports himself among the Jambū trees, 163, 643; flying palace of, Puṣpaka, 1518–19; god of wealth, 1017–18, 1132, 1266, 1334, 1342, 1344, 1518–19, 1524; grants Lakṣmaṇa a bow, 381; Hanumān sees abode of, 331, 1100; lives on summit of Himalaya, 137, 163; lokapāla of north, 522, 1248; Mahāpārśva resembles, 303; Maṇibhadra, general of, 597; obtains Puṣpaka from Brahmā through austerities, 1519; older brother of Rāvaṇa, 158, 174, 315, 390, 395, 426, 1053, 1100, 1252, 1266; Rāma returns flying palace (Puṣpakavimāna) to, 486, 1473; Rāma returns to Ayodhyā in flying palace (Puṣpakavimāna) of, 471–72; Rāvaṇa fights, 192; —steals Puṣpakavimāna from, 440, 468, 555, 1384, 1470–71; —subjugates, 137; returns Puṣpakavimāna to Rāma, 1524; rules Laṅkā, 570; as ruler of yakṣas, 127, 522, 1017–18, 1138; Sarvabhauma, serves as elephant mount of, 522; watches as Sītā enters fire, 458; wife of, Bhadrā, 522
Kumbha, 12, 251, 377, 1127–28, 1132, 1133–35, 1141; brother of Nikumbha, 854; death of, concludes ninth day of battle, 1140, 1253; death of, on tenth day of battle, 1491; fights monkeys, 337–41, 1129; knocks Aṅgada unconscious, 337, 1130; Rāvaṇa sends, forth to battle, 12, 335; son of Kumbhakarṇa, 335, 337, 1126, 1481; Sugrīva breaks bow of, 339–41; Sugrīva fights with, 339–40, 1131; —hurls, from summit of Mount Trikūṭa, 1134; —kills, 341
Kumbhahanu, 246; Tāra kills, 247
Kumbhakarṇa, 75–77; Agastya addresses, 266–67; Aṅgada represents, as a scarecrow, 286; appearance of, compared to a cloud, 266; arms of, severed, 297–98; arrows of Rāma do not wound, 297; asks rākṣasas why he was awakened, 266; Atikāya grief-stricken at death of, 299; awakened, 266, 920; bleeds heavily, 294; boasts that he is more powerful than others killed by Rāma, 296; boons to, 34, 270, 340, 908–10, 930, 932, 938; Brahmā amends curse of, 271; —, frightened upon seeing, 270; —, grandfather of, 271; breath of, 263, 266; bypasses Lakṣmaṇa, 294; carries off Sugrīva, 292; chides Rāvaṇa, 274; compared to Agni, 290; —to battle standard, 269, 929; —to Garuḍa, 288, 290; —to Guha, 289; —to Indra, 268, 290; —to Nārāyaṇa, 283; —to Rāhu, 298; —to Yama, 268, 285, 290; conquers asuras, 1133; crushes dānavas, 269; —gandharvas, 269; —gods, 269; —rākṣasas, 269; —Ṛṣabha, 289; —yakṣas, 269; curse on, 34; —, by Brahmā, 76, 262, 265, 270–71, 908–11, 919, 938; death of, described, 24–25, 76, 92–94, 297–99; defeats dānavas, 296, 1133; description of, 266; devours allies and enemies, 290, 294–95; —many thousands, 270; drinks blood, 75, 263, 266–67, 277, 294, 296, 395, 569; —one thousand jars (of drink), 268; duration of sleep of, 572, 923, 932–33, 938; —, debated by commentators,

909–12; ears and nose of, severed, 294; eats meat, 266; elephants used to wake, 75, 265; enters Laṅkā, 293; exemplar of bloodthirsty voracity, 34; exponent of moral conduct and ethical statecraft, 28, 34; feet of, severed, 298; fights Indra, 270; —Nīla, 289; —Rāma, 294–98; foe of brahmans, 299; —of Indra, 289; footsteps of, shake earth, 268; Gandhamādana fights, 289; Gavākṣa fights, 289; general of rākṣasas, 940; gods mistake for Kāla, 270; —unable to kill, 270; golden armor of, 283, 977–78; grandson of Brahmā, 271; —of Prajāpati, 291; groggy, 272; Hanumān fights, 288–89, 292; head of, severed, 76, 92–93, 298, 1016; hisses like a serpent, 263; impelled by Death, 285, 909; inauspicious omens appear to, 284; Indra battles, 270; intoxication of, 979; iron club of, 285, 982; Kumbha, son of, 335, 337, 1126, 1481; Kumuda flees from, 287; Lakṣmaṇa strikes, with seven arrows, 294; lance of, 282, 292, 298; laughs at Rāvaṇa's misfortune, 941; lectures Rāvaṇa, 34, 274, 568, 943–50; Mahodara beseeches, to consult Rāvaṇa, 267; —criticizes, 278–79; monkeys fight, 286–90, 295; —flee, 269, 285–88, 292; mouth of, like fire beneath sea, 265; narcoleptic nature of, 24; Nikumbha, son of, 139, 335, 562; Nīla fights, 289; noose of, 290; paternal uncle of Atikāya, 1020; —of Devāntaka, 299, 876, 1020; pierces Hanumān, 289; profundity of, 908; proposes going to battle alone, 282; questions Rāvaṇa, 273; —wakening, 266; rākṣasas driven back by breath of, 263; —wake, 263–65; Rāma kills, with arrow, 24, 297–99, 300; —questions Vibhīṣaṇa about, 269; —wounds, with arrows, 294; Rāvaṇa angry at, 275; —begs, for assistance, 36, 273; —laments, 73, 301; —orders, to be awakened, 262; —protests curse of, 271; —rebukes, 36; —sends, to battle, 282; —tells, to take troops, 282; reports to Rāvaṇa, 272; resembles Mount Mandara, 296; —Vindhyā mountain, 296; —Yama, 296; residence of, 913; reviles Mahodara, 281; Śarabha rushes, 289; sets forth to battle, 283; size of, 24, 263, 284, 299, 960, 979, 982; slaughters monkeys, 286; sleeps all the time, 263; —six to nine months, 262; slightly intoxicated, 268; strength of, equal to that of Indra, 263; stride of compared to that of Lord Nārāyaṇa, 269; Sugrīva fights, 291–94; trampled by elephants, 919–20; tricked by Brahmā and Sarasvatī, 932; unable to withstand Rāma's bow, 296; uses supernatural powers to increase size, 27; Vibhīṣaṇa narrates history of, to Rāma, 269; vows to destroy Rāma's army, 37, 267; —to drink Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa's blood, 267; —to kill Rāma, 281, 284; —to kill Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 267; —to slaughter the foes of Rāvaṇa, 276, 569; —to slay the gods, 923; wakened by Rāvaṇa, 34, 262; war hammer of, 296–97; weapons of, 976, 982; Yūpākṣa addresses, 266–67

Kumbhīnasī, 137, 556

Kumuda, 128, 160, 175, 190, 218, 238, 285, 288, 316, 325, 408, 525, 634, 657, 726, 758; climbs Mount Suvela, 194; counterattacks rākṣasas, 238; fights Atikāya, 316; flees from Kumbhakarṇa, 287; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325, 1079; returns to battlefield, 288; rules Mount Saṃkocana, 160; stationed at eastern gate, 204, 757–58; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; as variant of Sumukha, 787

Kūrma Purāṇa, 108, 824; Rāma establishes Śivaliṅga in, 1484; Sītā's fire ordeal in, 104, 1422

Kuśa, 61

kuśa grass, 152, 376, 602–3, 1075, 1210, 1494

ladles, of black iron, 324, 349, 1076
Lakṣmaṇa, 55–58; as active participant in battle, 55; acts on advice of Vibhīṣaṇa, 55; adept in all the śāstras, 653; as agent of Rāma, 55; Aṅgada carries, 64, 127, 129, 522, 727; anger of, at repudiation of Sītā, 1440; angry outburst of, 38; archery skill of, 378; argues Rāma should not have accepted exile, 37; —that the practice of righteousness is in vain, 37, 55; armor of, 365, 372, 380, 1201, 1224–25; arrows of, compared to Indra's vajra, 258; —, do not hit Indrajit, 350; Atikāyā confronts, 317; —invokes divine weapons against, 320; —praises prowess of, 319; attacks Laṅkā, 335–36; attempts to calm Rāma, 609; as avatāra, 547, 1453, 1463; barely breathing, 214; begs permission of Rāma to fight Rāvaṇa, 254, 883–84; bleeds, 351, 372, 414, 416; blockades northern gate, 205; blood of, 101, 778; bound with arrows, 212–13, 223–26, 231–32; builds pyre, 54, 55, 458; carries out supporting role in Rāma's consecration, 58; challenges Indrajit to a duel, 369; character of, 55–58; common paternity of, with Rāma, 1312; compared with Indra (Vāsava), 408; consecrates Vibhīṣaṇa as king, 55, 150, 446; consoles Rāma, 38, 361; Daśaratha instructs, to serve Rāma, 465; decapitates Rāvaṇa's charioteer, 412; defends Vibhīṣaṇa, 413; delivers critique of dharma, truth, and morality, 36, 55, 56; denounces dharma and denies moral causation, 358–61; departs for Nikumbhilā shrine, 365; despairs of life, 214; destroys bow of Rāvaṇa, 258, 413; diminishes Rāvaṇa's strength (or power), 1302; discourse of, 37, 55, 358–61; —, materialism in, 56; —, refutes concept of dharma, 37, 55–56; drenched in blood, 214–15, 223–26; embraces Rāma, 384; encounters army of Jāmbavān, 365; exchanges battlefield taunts with Rāvaṇa, 257; expounds materialist view, 360; fair complexion of, contrasted with Rāma's dark complexion, 653, 1305; fights Atikāya, 318–22; —Indrajit, 47, 55, 372–84; —Kumbhakarṇa, 294; —rākṣasas, 335–36; —Rāvaṇa, 64, 211–14, 258–59, 326, 409, 412–14, 777–86, 893–95, 1085, 1302–5; —Virūpākṣa, 206; as focus of Rāma's grief, 56; follows Rāma into battle, 198; —Rāma's instructions, 55; foregrounded in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 55; Garuḍa frees, from serpent bonds, 228–30; gives concrete rewards when Rāma is pleased, 598; Hanumān carries, to safety, 51, 64, 259; —removes javelin from, 259; healed by Garuḍa, 228–30, 826–27; —by healing herbs, 332; —by Suṣeṇa, 418, 1317–18; as incarnation of the cosmic serpent, Śeṣa, 546–47, 606, 883, 1305, 1545; as inconceivable portion of Viṣṇu, 259, 899, 1302; Indrajit binds, with serpent-arrows, 46, 50, 56, 65, 212–13, 778; —boasts he will slay, 354; —riddles, with arrows, 350; —shoots, in forehead, 380; —strikes down, 326; —threatens, 372; —uses divine weapon-spell of Brahmā against, 324, 1083; invokes divine weapon-spell, 350; —against Atikāya, 320; —of Brahmā, 321; iron arrows of, 372, 375, 1207; Kataka sees, as identified with Brahmā, 895; kills Atikāya, 321–22; —charioteer of Indrajit, 379; —foremost among rākṣasas, 210; —Indrajit, 382; —Virūpākṣa, 208; learned in nītiśāstra, 527; lies on bed of arrows, 27, 45, 214, 223–25; like a second life breath of Rāma, 653, 828–29, 901; Maheśvaratīrtha denies wounding and slaying of Rāma and, 102–3; Mainda mourns Rāma and, 214; māyā of, 101, 778; monkeys delighted at recovery of Rāma and, 230; —honor, 322; —unable to extract javelin from, 414; —unable to help, 326; Nikumbha vows to kill Rāma and, 139, 140; Nīla returns to, 249; —mourns Rāma and, 214; —unable to help Rāma and, 326; pained at Rāma's words, 1318; passive role of, 56; performs every kind of service for Rāma, 576; powerful, 121; praises rich and powerful, 360; proposes that monkeys swarm Kumbhakarṇa to subdue him, 295; as protector of Rāma, 653; rākṣasas tell Rāvaṇa that Rāma and, escaped Indrajit's bonds, 231; —think Rāma and, are dead, 216; Rāma advises, how to fight, 254; —and, kill rākṣasas, 210, 335; —banishes, 61; —calls irreplaceable, 46; —claims to value, above Sītā, —dreads telling Kausalyā, Kaikeyī, Sumitrā, Bharata, and Śatrughna about the loss of, 223; —dreads telling Sītā of death of, 223; —grants, permission to fight Rāvaṇa, 254, 883–84; —extracts javelin from, 415; —laments, 46, 56, 57, 223–24, 416–17, 1312–13; —offers to consecrate, as yuvarāja, 61, 493; —orders, to perform consecration of Vibhīṣaṇa, 150, 446; —sends, to battle Indrajit, 27, 364–65; —stations, at northern gate, 192; —tells, he must endure the divine weapons of Indrajit, 326, 1084; —values, above all, 419; Rāvaṇa claims, is driven off, 175; —has Sītā shown the wounded Rāma and, 26, 53; —orders Indrajit to battle, 348; —pierces forehead of, with arrow, 258; —strikes down, 13, 50, 64, 66; —, with divinely charged weapons, 326, 1085; —, with javelin of Brahmā, 258–59, 893–95; —, with javelin crafted by Maya, 413–14, 1302–5; —unable to lift, 51, 259; —vows to kill, 408; —wounds with javelin, 259, 414; reaches Laṅkā, 198; rebukes Atikāya, 317–18; recalls that he is a portion of Viṣṇu, 259, 849, 896–97, 899, 905, 1060; recognizes his own divinity, 895; refuses consecration as yuvarāja, 58, 61, 493; regains consciousness, 259; removes darts from monkeys, 261; resembles Yama and Kubera, 127, reviles Indrajit, 372; revived by fragrance of healing herbs, 332; riddled and bound with arrows by Indrajit, 797, 804; Śārdūla describes, 173; serpent-arrows binding Rāma and, flee from Garuḍa, 228–29; severs Indrajit's head with weapon-spell of Indra, 382; shreds Rāvaṇa's battle flag, 412; Sītā assumes Rāma and, are dead, 219; —fears Rāvaṇa has slain, 389; —impugns motives of, 51; —names, 221; —orders, to build pyre, 54, 457; —spies Rāma and, unconscious on a bed of arrows, 219, —thinks, will die of a broken heart, 178–79; Śivasahāya denies defeat of, 102; slayer of Khara and Dūṣaṇa by association, 788; stands in for Rāma, 55; stands on Rāma's right, 653; strikes Kumbhakarṇa with seven arrows, 294; submits to divinely charged weapon of Brahmā, 327; Sugrīva says Rāma and, are only stunned but to take Rāma and, to Kiṣkindhā, 227; —tells Vibhīṣaṇa not killed, 227; Śuka describes, 167; Sumukha mourns Rāma and, 214; surpasses Arjuna Kārtavīrya in archery, 224, 814; Suṣeṇa heals, 67, 385; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; torment of, 224; tries to prevent Rāma from going into battle, 883; Trijaṭā gives reasons why Rāma and, are alive, 221; —says, cannot be defeated, 222; —tells Sītā that the army protects Rāma and, 222; urges Rāma to depose Daśaratha, 38; —Rāma to slay Rāvaṇa, 419; uses weapon of Varuṇa in battle with Indrajit, 381; Vāyu tells, how to kill Atikāya, 321; Vibhīsana accompanies, to battle Indrajit, 365; —advises, to attack

Lakṣmaṇa (continued)
Indrajit's army, 366; —aids, in battle with Indrajit, 376–77; —assures Sugrīva Rāma and, will recover, 216; —points out Indrajit's sacrificial ground to, 369; —predicts victory of, over Indrajit, 364; —rests hope of kingship on, 227; —sees vital glow of Rāma and, 217; —shaken at fall of Rāma and, 214; —tells Sugrīva to guard Rāma and, 217; —tells, that he must slay Indrajit, 368; —wipes eyes Rāma and, 226; vigilance of, 546; virtues of, return, 228; Virūpākṣa fights, 206; vital glow of, 217, 222; vows to avenge Sītā, 37; —to destroy Laṅkā, 361; —to destroy Rāvaṇa, 37; —to exterminate all rākṣasas, 351; —to kill Indrajit, 365; weight of, debated by commentators, 895–96; wicked unable to carry, 897; wishes to die with Rāma, 179; wishes to use divine weapon-spell of Brahmā, 351, 1157; wounding of, denied by commentators, 1303–4; wounds Indrajit, 351; wounds of, and Rāma, 213
Lakṣmī, 181, 694, 731, 734–35, 795, 1230, 1236, 1313, 1592; as the constant companion of the Lord, 1446, 1452; as goddess of victory and fortune, consort of Viṣṇu, resides in Vālin's necklace, 655; gods and men covet, 167, 655; Indra recovers, 697; loss of lotus of, 702; as Mā, 500, 676; as object of comparison to Sītā, 716; resides in Sugrīva's necklace, 167, 655; as royal, 574; Sītā as, 40, 460; as vital glow or sign of life, 791–92, 808–9, 874. See also Śrī; vital glow lament, 28; as deception, 798; Govindarāja's analysis of Sītā's, 687; of Mandodarī, 51, 74, 88, 441–44, 952, 1391–95, 1398–99; of monkeys for Rāma, 832; of rākṣasīs for sons, husbands, 394–97, 1267, 1272–73; of Rāma for Lakṣmaṇa, 46–47, 223–25, 416–17, 1311–12; of Rāma for Sītā, 133–135, 545; of Rāvaṇa for fallen rākṣasas, 273; for Indrajit, 386–87, 1242; of Rāvaṇa for Kumbhakarṇa, 73, 300–301, 1023; shrieking of osprey, compared to, of women, 676, 812, 1386; of Sītā, 52–54, 85, 176–79, 219–21, 389–90, 684, 686–87, 689, 806; speech uttered as, meaningless, 684; true men do not, 301; of Vibhīṣaṇa for Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 226–27, 820; of Vibhīṣaṇa for Rāvaṇa, 1379–80; of women for Rāvaṇa, 41, 74, 88, 439–41, 1384,1386 langur(s) (golāṅgula—Presbytis entellus), 110, 164, 205, 211, 225, 466, 639, 758, 773, 789; army made up of, 742; assist Nala in building bridge, 645; Gavākṣa as, 164, 205, 758; —as leader of, 645, 789, 815; Hara as, 639
Laṅkā: action of Yuddhakāṇḍa located in, 18; action of Yuddhakāṇḍa switches between, and Rāma's encampment, 94–95; asuras unable to conquer, 190; blockade of, 555; building of bridge to, 123, 154–56; burning of, 333–34; citadel of, well guarded, 121; defenses of, 124–26, 191; description of, 124–26, 195, 198, 624; forces of, depleted, 974; gods cannot conquer, 190; —cannot enter, 442; Hanumān enters, 442; Hanumān sets fire to in Sundarakāṇḍa, 69; Hanumān tells Rāma he destroyed and burned, 126; Hanumān's exploits in, 62; Hanumān's intelligence report concerning, 63; Indrajit enters, 216, 217; killing fields of, aestheticized by Vālmīki, 90; Kubera ruled, 570; Kumbhakarṇa enters, 293; Lakṣmaṇa vows to destroy, 361; located on peak of Mount Trikūṭa, 123, 472, 503, 727, 986, 1003, 1327; measurements of, 731; monkeys attack, 333; —besiege, 198; —enter, 230; —march toward, 195, 230, 333; —scale walls of, 204; —set fire to, 333; —stationed at gates of, 200; mountain of, 292;

Nala engineer of bridge to, 154; opulent citadel of Rāvaṇa, 196; parks and woodlands of, 194; principal stronghold of Rāvaṇa, 719; Puṣpaka takes Sītā back to, 222; rākṣasas protect, 242; —return to, 249; Rāma approaches, 185; —posts monkeys at various gates of, 192; —says Vibhīṣaṇa will rule, 201; —surveys, 193, 196; Rāvaṇa guards, 121; —inspects havoc wrought in, by Hanumān, 135; residents of, bring gifts for Vibhīṣaṇa, 446–47; Sāgara forbids passage of Rāma to, 45; self-sufficient enough to withstand siege, 513; shakes with roar of troops, 200; southeast of Kiṣkindhā, 519, 529; surrounded, 203; topography of, 986; unconquerable, 190; Vibhīṣaṇa abandons, 150; —comforts residents of, 446; —foretells destruction of, 370; —vows to help assault, 150; Viśvakarman builds, 732
Laṅkākāṇḍa, 5, 18
lapis lazuli (vaidūrya), 509, 611, 1152, 1322, 1473, 1535, 1541. See also vaidūrya
Lava, 61
Lokanātha (Cl): 114, 651, 800, 803, 840, 855, 860, 910, 943–44, 1090, 1136, 1144, 1172, 1210–11, 1258, 1268, 1281, 1294, 1355, 1426 love: anaṅga, god of, 942; fire of, 134, 547; Kandarpa, god of, 304; lamentation of Rāma for lost, 7, 133–35; Rāma rejects Sītā's, 455, 1435, 1437–38; of Sītā for Rāma, 453, 457, 942, 1430. See also kāma lunar asterisms,1325; Hasta, 126, 520, 621; Mūlā, 1381; Nirṛti regent of mūla, 130, 530–31; Punarvasu, 315, 520, 1015–16, 1052; Puṣya, 482, 1491, 1512; Rohiṇī, 389–90, 421, 443, 447, 480, 624, 1248–49, 1251, 1325, 1390, 1411, 1507; Uttarāphalgunī, 126, 519–20
lunar mansions. See lunar asterisms
Machiavellian realpolitik, 37
Madhu: Rāvaṇa subdues, 137, 556; Viṣṇu conquers, 852, 1446–48 magical illusion (māyā): bleeding as, 101; in Vaiṣṇava theology, 499; Indrajit baffles monkeys with, 324–25, 1081, 1159; Indrajit creates simulacrum of Sītā with, 25, 47, 85, 353, 1159, 1165; —as master of, 216, 352, 366, 722, 1189–90; of Atikāya, 302, 875; of Bṛhaspati, 822 (magical skill); of dānavas, 882; of Devāntaka, 302; of Indrajit, 11–13, 25, 28, 47, 53, 78–79, 190, 211, 221, 229, 324–25, 352–53, 364–65, 388, 700, 774, 776, 1081, 1089, 1155, 1159, 1183, 1187, 1188, 1194; of Kālanemi, 1315; of Lakṣmaṇa, 101, 778; of Maya, 1302; of monkeys (vānaras), 25, 85; of Narāntaka, 302; of Nīla, 257, 882; —, as trickery, 889–90; of rākṣasas, 25–28, 302, 539; of Rāma, 101, 1260, 1262; of Rāvaṇa, 85, 137, 173, 181, 184, 411, 414, 427, 433, 442, 557, 670, 692, 734, 803, 807, 814, 932, 1183, 1297, 1359, 1392; of Sītā, 104; of Vajradaṃṣṭra, 842; of Vāsava, 442, 1388; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 27, 215; of Vidyujjihva, 26, 52, 84–85, 173; power of, defeats Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 222; Rāma's blood released through power of, 778, 782; Rāvaṇa uses, to lure Sītā, 201, 747; Rāvaṇa uses weapons invested with power of, 435, 1359; Sītā demoralized by, 95; Sītā as victim of, 87, 181; 787; Vidyujjihva uses, to make simulacra of Rāma's bow and head, 32, 174, 670. See also māyāsītā magical power. See magical illusion magical skill. See magical illusion
Mahābhārata, 522; Arjuna Kārtavīrya in, 814; Aṣṭāvakra story in, 1451; battle books of, 19; bed of arrows in, 782; Bhīṣma dams Ganges in, 506; blind archery in, 769; commentators rationalize apparent contradiction between, and Rāmāyaṇa, 612, 620, 760, 1016, 1024, 1113, 1251, 1378, 1404, 1406; episodic differences between, and Rāmāyaṇa, 1157, 1424; garuḍavyūha in, 665; Indra fashions his own weapons in, 1331; Karṇa as tragic figure in, 71; Mārkaṇḍeya story in, 1453; metaphor in, 1256; parable of dove and hunter in, 591; possession of the mṛtasaṃjīvanī in, 822; power struggle in, as central theme of, 60; practice of sahagamana in, 1251; relationship between Garuḍa and Viṣṇu in, 828; story of Guha and Mount Krauñca in, 992; story of sons of Kadrū in, 829; the term aiṣīka in, 1063; the term atiratha in, 875; the term kaṅka in, 780; the term rathaśakti in, 763–64; theological message of, 5; the verb ā √diś in, 1158

Mahābhārata (continued)
Mahānāda, 246; Jāmbavān fights, 247
Mahāpārśva (I) (brother of Rāvaṇa), 1038, 1045–47, 1048; compared to fire at end of cosmic age, 312; compared to Kubera, 303; death of, on sixth day of dark half of Bhādrāśvina, 1067; fights Ṛṣabha, 312–13; identity of, 771, 1020, 1025, 1270; Kubera resembles, 303; mace of, 303, 312; overwhelmed with grief at death of Kumbhakarṇa, 299; Rāma strikes, 211; Rāvaṇa sends, to protect Narāntaka, Devāntaka, Atikāya, and Triśiras, 302; red garland of mace of, 312, 1046; Ṛṣabha kills, 313; Ṛṣabha uses sword of, 312–13; sets forth for battle, 302; urges Rāvaṇa to assault Sītā, 570; vows to kill Rāma, 139–40
Mahāpārśva (II) (minister of Rāvaṇa), 1270; Aṅgada kills, 407; bow of, 407, 1287; fights Aṅgada, 406–7; fights Gavākṣa, 406; fights Jambavān, 406; Gavākṣa destroys horses and chariot of, 406; identity of, 771, 1025, 1270; iron club of, 406, 1286–87; iron mace of, 1270; orders commanders to assemble troops, 399; Rāvaṇa assigns, to southern gate, 189, 191, 192; slaughters Aṅgada's army, 406; wounds Aṅgada, 406; wounds Jāmbavān, 406
Mahendra: commentators understand as epithet of Brahmā, 1465; as epithet of Indra, 880, 923, 1530
Mahendra, Mount, 131, 251, 847, 875, 1096, 1137; Rāma descends, 538
Maheśvara: Atikāya compared to, 314; as epithet of Brahmā, 1458, 1511; as epithet of Śiva, 137, 463, 555, 1050, 1228, 1511, 1458; instructs Rāma to console relatives, assume kingship, and establish lineage, 463. See also Śiva
Maheśvaratīrtha (Cm), 102–7, passim; believes Sītā's lamentation is feigned to deceive rākṣasas, 689; chronology of, 1491, 1545; on curse on Rāvaṇa by Ūmā, 907; defines √han in the sense of "approach," 102–3; denies wounding and slaying of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 102–3; inner readings of, 103, 676, 717, 798, 970–72, 980, 1022, 1024, 1070, 1202, 1254–55, 1329–30; interprets epic as both martial and religious text, 103; literal and deeper readings of epic of, 103; Nāgojibhaṭṭa quotes 525, 820, 1127; —criticizes, 816; relative date of, 105–7; rhetorical strategy of, 102; theological readings of, 676, 715–16, 795, 891, 912, 959–60, 970, 1022, 1254. See also commentators Mahodara (I) (brother of Rāvaṇa), 1020, 1025, 1048; Atikāya angry at death of, 313; charges Aṅgada, 309; —Hanumān, 309; death of, on sixth day of dark half of Bhādrāśvina, 1067; elephant of, Sudarśana, 302, 1026; identity of, 771, 1025, 1038, 1045, 1270, 1281; iron cudgel of, 309, 1039; mourns death of Narāntaka, 308; Nīla kills, 311; overwhelmed with grief at death of Kumbhakarṇa, 299; Rāma strikes, 211; Rāvaṇa sends, to protect Narāntaka, Devāntaka, Atikāya, and Triśiras, 302; sets forth for battle, 302; strikes Aṅgada with iron cudgel, 309; Vibhīṣaṇa describes, 251; vows to kill Rāma, 139–40

Mahodara (II) (minister of Rāvaṇa), 398, 406, 407, 472; advises Kumbhakarṇa against fighting, 280; army of, flees, 405; beseeches Kumbhakarṇa to consult Rāvaṇa, 267; criticizes Kumbhakarṇa's rashness, 278–79, 961–63, 965; enters battle against monkeys, 403; fights Sugrīva, 404–5, 1282–83; goes forth to battle with Rāvaṇa, 399; identity of, 771, 1025, 1270, 1281; iron club of, 404; Kumbhakarṇa reviles, 281; maces of, 404–5, 1283; proposes false rumor of Rāma's death, 279–281; Rāvaṇa assigns, to southern gate, 189, 191, 192; —calls, a coward, 282, 973; —orders, to find spies, 169, 661; —orders, to send forth troops, 397; —pins hopes of victory on, 403; reviles Kumbhakarṇa, 278; Sugrīva beheads, with sword, 68, 405, 1284
Maināka, Mount, 422, 472, 616, 1326, 1368, 1483
Mainda, 126, 133, 165, 175, 190, 194, 238, 325, 327, 582, 585, 673; adept at good and bad policy, 146; approaches eastern gate, 198; attacks Atikāya, 316; attacks Kumbha, 337; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; drinks the nectar of immortality, 166; fights Vajramuṣṭi, 207–8; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; —strikes down, 327; Kumbha strikes down, 337; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; posted at eastern gate, 740; Prahasta cuts down, 175; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; returns to battlefield, 288; rewarded, 492, 1542; son of Aśvins, 172, 582; takes counsel with Rāma, 190
Maithilī. See Sītā
Makarākṣa, 12, 78, 1140–42, 1146–48, 1150, 1481; boasts, 344; challenges Rāma, 346; date of death of, 1167, 1253, 1491; fights monkeys, 345; —Rāma, 346–48; longs for sight of Rāma, 1146; name of, 1141; Rāma kills, 348; —kills father of, 346; Rāvaṇa sends forth, to battle, 343; sallies forth, 344; son of Khara, 343, 346, 1148; talkative, 346, 1147
Malaya, Mount, 1094; located in Laṅkā, 292, 998; as metaphorical reference to Mount Trikūṭa, 998
Malaya mountains, 825; abode of serpents, 825–26; dense with trees and creatures 130, 131; Dey places south of Kāverī, 534; monkeys cross, 537; part of Western Ghats; 534; Satyatīrtha identifies sandalwood forest as, 633
malignant spirits (bhūtas), 369, 522, 879, 905, 1017, 1194; Maheśvara surrounded by, 314, 1050; Rudra surrounded by, 250, 252, 873, 879–79; serve Śiva, 1017
Mālyavān, 80, 84, 702, 1267, 1397; advises Rāvaṇa on policy and counsels peace, 9, 32–34, 50, 72, 186–88, 712–16; arguments of, based on dharma and adharma, 33, 708; assists in funeral of Rāvaṇa, 1402; believes Rāma is Viṣṇu in human form, 713; castigates Rāvaṇa for oppressing sages, 22; commentators disagree as to relationship of, to Rāvaṇa, 705–6; hopes to provoke Rāvaṇa to fight, 716; humiliated, 189, 717; Rāvaṇa reviles, 188–89; rebukes Rāvaṇa for past misdeeds, 187; reports evil omens, 714
Mandara, Mount, 23, 89, 153, 154, 164, 283, 196, 338, 386, 437, 896–97, 1372–73; Mandodarī and Rāvaṇa sport on, 443; Rāvaṇa capable of lifting, 259; used as churning rod, 896, 977, 1028, 1244–45, 1452
Mandodarī, 472, 1269, 1307, 1320; advises Rāvaṇa to make peace with Rāma, 442; Aṅgada attempts to drag, Mandodarī (continued)

by hair, 1320; believes Rāma is Viṣṇu, 1389; etymology of name of, 1387; fears that Rāma is no mere human, 1388; gives Rāvaṇa sage advice, 951; granddaughter of yātudhāna, 444; Hemā, mother of, 1397; laments, 51, 74, 88, 441–44, 1387–99; Maya gives as wife to Rāvaṇa, 556, 1302; Maya, father of, 556, 1209, 1299, 1302, 1397; mother of Indrajit, 1219, 1221; praises Sītā, 1390; Rāvaṇa has not been able to sleep with, 789; rebukes Rāvaṇa, 870, 951–52, 1388, 1390; regards herself as superior to Sītā, 442; sports on Mount Mandara with Rāvaṇa, 443
Maṇibhadra, 596–97
Mantharā, 676, 1251; Sītā curses, 390
mantras (I) (spells), 410, 437, 1383; of Brahmā, 652, 931; "hum" as, 1041; invoked and infused into weapons, 112, 890, 1077, 1083, 1224, 1297, 1374; to restore life, 227; translation of, 112, 777, 912, 1078 mantras (II) (policy), 912, 949; of rākṣasas, 349
Manu, 1084, 1342, 1539, 1544
Manusāvarṇi, eighth Manu, 645, 921; weapon of, 1259
Manusmṛti: on a brahman as unworthy recipient, 943; on criminals going to heaven, 746; on etymology of Nārāyaṇa, 1446; on independence of women, 1435; on modes of policy, 706; on period of impurity after death of a relative, 1407; on sūtas, 1513; on widows, 1162; on the yātanāśarīra, 1529 mare. See equine similes mare's head fire, 265, 298, 330, 921, 1014, 1095, 1535
Mārīca, 296, 1259; assumes form of golden deer, 26, 480, 747; encounters Rāma in Bālakāṇḍa, 100, 1259; offers oblations of blood, 1167; —Rāvaṇa advice, 1396; Rāma kills, 436, 1010, 1369; skilled in māyā, 84, 747
Mārkaṇḍeya: legend of, 1453
Mars (aṅgārika), 341, 422, 529, 531, 625, 844, 922, 1136, 1179, 1227, 1248–49, 1329, 1507; as angry planet, 389; color of, red, 341, 624
Marukāntāra, "The Wasteland," 615. See Drumakulya
Māruta. See Vāyu
Māruti. See Hanumān
Mātali, 19, 420–21, 435–36, 446, 1323, 1351; arrows of Rāvaṇa unable to injure, 1365; Rāma orders to engage Rāvaṇa, 430. See also charioteer materialism: discourse of Jābāli on, 56; —of Lakṣmaṇa on, 56, 358–61; Nāgojibhaṭṭa rejects Lakṣmaṇa's position on, 1170; philosophy of, 38 matted locks: of Bharata, 60, 477, 1501; of Rāma, 60, 478 maxims, 479, 1501, 1503; of befuddlement as death approaches, 679, 704, 746; of the cattle and the bull, 1198; of the central gemstone, 740; of the crow and the palmyra fruit, 717; of the crow as destroyer of curds, 884; of the crow's eye, 740, 973; of dawn at the toll station, 883; of elders being praised to their face, 497; of the existing situation, 669; of the immediacy of karmic fruition, 942; of an inferior party suing for peace, 717; of the king and his subjects, 1501; of misery loving company, 956; of not harming one's own, 895; of not refraining from action because there are obstacles, 965, 1366; of people not refraining from setting their cooking vessels on the fire, 966; of the people with umbrellas, 627, 629, 681, 788, 828, 1227, 1241; of sleeping on a single bed, 547; of a son not becoming learned through the learning of a father, 592; of the wall, 1502; of a well-trained acrobat, 113; of the writing of a bark beetle, 717. See also proverbs Maya: craftsman of the asuras, 411, 414, 1268, 1299, 1302, 1397; daughter of (Mandodarī), wife of Rāvaṇa, 137, 556; divine weapon-spell of, 411; magical illusion of, 1302

māyā. See magical illusion māyāsītā, 104, 1422, 1443, 1456 measurement: aṅgula as, 1136–37; bhāra as, 997–98; bow length as, 979–80, 1279; droṇa as, 536; finger's breadth as, 782; hasta as, 1051; krośa as, 1500–1501; of Laṅkā, 731; ogha as, 741–42; tāla as, 631; of time, 789, 857, 1362; —, ghaṭika as, 1261; —, yāma as, 534, 737, 789, 1107–8, 1261; units of, 631: vyāma as, 634, 737; of weight, 987; yojana as, 1500–1501. See also yojana medicine: ayurvedic, 1026, 1217, 1353; herbal, 547; japā flower in ayurvedic, 1353; nasal administration of, 1239, 1317; universal tonic (rasāyanam); White on, 547. See also healing herbs men, three types of (highest, in between, lowest), 29, 135–136
Meru, Mount, 25, 143, 263, 292, 576, 611, 903, 914, 998, 1005–6, 1027, 1094, 1265, 1520; arrow of Rāma compared to, in weight, 25, 437, 1372–73; haṃsas fly through gap in Krauñca mountain on way to, 951, 992; Hanumān heads toward, 330; hurled into ocean by Vāyu, 896–97; identified as axis mundi, 645, 921–22; —as golden mountain, 645, 649, 1102; Indra strikes, with vajra, 261, 903, 1135; Jambū River located on, 643; king of mountains, 330, 1096–97; Mount Ṛṣabha one of twenty mountains that flank, 1091; Puṣpakavimāna resembles, 469; Rāvaṇa able to lift, 259; —sports with Mandodarī on, 443; struck by lightning, 340; sun illuminates peaks of, 303; —revolves around, 698, 921–22; —rises from, 154, 266, 485 messenger: Hanumān as, of son of Vāsava, 1102–3; for a king, 745; not to be slain, 751 military formations, 514–15, 623, 625, 633, 674, 718, 720, 722–23, 735, 740, 753, 755, 757, 853, 858, 863, 980, 987–79; garuḍa, 664–65; Kāmandaka on, 521, 623, 664–65; puruṣa, 665; textual references to, 514, 516, 521–22 ministers (saciva), 583, 584; Arthaśāstra on king's consultation with, 943; Mahodara, Mahāpārśva, and Virūpākṣa as, 1270; tests of their loyalty, 950–51; translation of saciva as, 504, 581, 648, 811; understand true nature of things, 947–48; of Vibhīṣaṇa, 25, 191–93, 576, 719, 723–24, 1181 monkeys (vānaras): accompany Rāma to Ayodhyā, 25, 471; Akampana assails, with weapons, 239; Aṅgada turns back, 286–87; army of, divided by species, 539–40; Atikāya does not strike, who do not resist, 315; —fights, 316; —terrifies, 313; attack Laṅkā by night, 333; attempt to revive Rāma, 358; beat drums and sound conches, 230; beat up rākṣasa spies, 170; behaviors of, 533–34, 632–33, 741, 831–32; believe Kumbhakarṇa is a scarecrow, 286; —Vibhīṣaṇa is Indrajit, 225–26; boons to, from Indra, 466–67, 532; bring down birds with their roars, 264, 730, 916; bring water for Rāma's consecration, 490–91; —water for Vibhīṣaṇa's consecration, 1407; build bridge to Laṅkā, 155, 619–20, carry trees for sport, 524; celebrate death of Indrajit, 384; change size, 888; climb Mount Suvela and survey Laṅkā, 194; as danger to Rāvaṇa, 885; darts removed from, 261; delay Rāma's arrival, 1517; delighted at recovery of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 230; —with Nīla's strategy, 256; description of, 185, 199; —, wounded, 327; Dhūmrākṣa kills, 235; drag rākṣasas, 241, 852; fight Indrajit, 356, 357;

monkeys (vānaras) (continued)
—Kumbhakarṇa, 269, 288; —rākṣasas, 237, 304–6, 333–36, 345; flee battlefield, 20, 225–26, 286–87, 235, 307, 313, 345, 355, 383, 401, 818; —from Atikāya, 315; —from Indrajit, 355 —from Kumbhakarṇa, 68, 76, 268, 271, 285–87, 289, 985; flightiness of, 484; form of, sign of recognition in battle, 192; gather around Hanumān, 239; gather materials for construction of bridge, 619; Hanumān comforts, 327; —rallies, 355; honor Hanumān, 236, 241; —Lakṣmaṇa, 322; ignore Aṅgada, 287; Indrajit fights, 212, 324–27; —kills, 212, 324, 351; —threatens, 371; inebriated, 131, 524, 536–7, 539; Jāmbavān reassures, 226; kennings for, 617, 816; kick up dust, 238; kill monkeys, 238; —rākṣasas, 209, 234, 236, 239; Kumbha fights, 337–41, 1129; Kumbhakarṇa fights, 288–98; lay down lives for Rāma, 204, 237, 846; leaders of, approach Sugrīva, 307; —, search for Indrajit, 212; —, slain, 290; magical illusion of, 25, 85; magical illusion (māyā) of Indrajit baffles, 324; march on Laṅkā, 198, 204, 230, 333; numbers of, 741–43; —, billions, 128, 165; —, hundred million, 172, 199, 200, 204, 205; —, innumerable, 157, 159; —, six hundred seventy million struck, down in battle, 327; as ornament of parks, 284, 980; panic, 20, 269; Prahasta kills, 247; protect Rāma, 218; Rāma asks Indra for boon to restore life of, 466–67; —gives leave to, 225; —instructs, not to take human form, 192; —posts, at gates of Laṅkā, 192; —praises, 224–25; —rallies, 295; Rāvaṇa describes, 242; —kills, 252; references to, in Sundarakāṇḍa, 131; regain consciousness, 293; resign themselves to death, 288, 990–91; return to battlefield, 226, 288, 401, 990; revived by fragrance of healing herbs, 332; Roussel and Shastri understand that, are clothed, 633; Sāraṇa describes leaders of, to Rāvaṇa, 160–62; scout route of march, 127; seek refuge with Rāma, 253, 269, 291, 313, 392; seize weapons of rākṣasas, 405–6, 763, 848, 868; set fire to Laṅkā, 333; similarity of, to humans, 885; slaughtered, 205, 246; smash palaces, 204; sounds of, 524, 533–34, 598, 847; species of, 632, 639–40, 674, 718, 773, 986; spread rumors, 217; strike down rākṣasas, 235; Sugrīva orders, to attack by night, 333; Sugrīva threatens to kill those, who would flee, 335; suspect Vibhīṣaṇa, 578; swarm Kumbhakarṇa, 290, 295; take on any form at will, 123, 638, 723, 729; take on human form, 485, 1522; tenderness of Rāma toward, 1427; trust Hanumān, 239; unable to find Indrajit, 212; —to remove javelin from Lakṣmaṇa, 1305; —to see Indrajit, 215; use claws and fangs as weapons, 211, 639, 770; —trees and boulders as weapons, 204, 230, 234–35, 304–5, 756, 832, 862, 935, 985; —weapons of rākṣasas, 208, 238; vegetarian diet of, 773; Vibhīṣaṇa comforts, 13, 326–27; —honors, with gems, 470; —prevents, from fleeing, 225; —rallies, 217; —urges, to attack Indrajit, 377; vigilance of, 575; vision of, obscured, 238; weapons of, 20, 234–35, 246, 391, 1255; wounded, 235, 246; wounded and slain, described, 400

moral causation: Lakṣmaṇa denounces, 358–61 moral debates, 28

moral discourse, 33

mountain of healing herbs. See healing herbs, mountain of mountains. See Ariṣṭa, Mount; Asta, Mount; Candra, Mount; Citrakūṭa, Mount; Dardara, Mount; Droṇa, Mount; Himalaya; Kailāsa, Mount; Krauñca, Mount; Kṛṣṇagiri mountains; Mahendra, Mount; Maināka, Mount; Malaya, Mount; Mandara, Mount; Meru, Mount; Pariyātra, Mount; Prasravaṇa, Mount; Ṛkṣavant mountains; Ṛṣabha, Mount; Ṛṣyamūka, Mount; Sahya mountains; Saṃkocana, Mount; Suvela, Mount; Trikūṭa, Mount; Uśīrabīja, Mount; Vindhya mountains

mṛdaṅga, 264–65, 624, 1275. See also drums mṛtasaṃjīvanī, "the restorer of life to the dead," 329, 822–23, 1091–92, 1102, 1314; as saṃjīvakaraṇī, "restorer of life," 228, 823, 1102, 1192; as samjīvanī, "restorer of life," 823, 1092, 1314, 1315; —, used on Yudhiṣṭhira, 823. See also healing herbs Mṛtyu, 167, 653, 892, 1036. See also Death; Vaivasvata; Yama musical instruments, 482, 567, 696, 769, 858, 917, 1527, 1532; conches (śaṅkha, kumbha); 185, 210, 230, 244, 250, 264–65, 283, 323, 344, 483, 489, 567, 758–59, 842, 917, 978, 1275, 1152, 1516; flute, 210, 769; kumbha (pot), 182, 917; trumpets, 388, 696, 1152, 1246, 1275, 1402. See also drums myrobalan wood (vibhītaka or āmalaka—Terminalia belerica): as kindling, 324, 349, 1075

Nāgojibhaṭṭa (Nāgeśa, Ct), 115, passim; argues that liberation is not possible for Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa, 1400–1401; chronology of the epic of, 519; cites Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, 499; —Rāmānuja's commentaries on BhG and Viṣṇusahasranāmastotra, 499; criticizes Maheśvaratīrtha, 816; on pleasure of Rāma, 1479; quotes Maheśvaratīrtha, 525, 820, 1127; relationship of, to Kataka and Maheśvaratīrtha, 105–6; on restoring monkeys to life, 1468–69; Satyatīrtha critical of, 106–7, 820–21, 534, 937–38, 982–83, 1182, 1217, 1241, 1270, 1294, 1320, 1365–66; sees lamentations of Sītā as demonstration of her human nature, 689; text of, inferior to that of Govindarāja, 113, 115; translation of Dutt based on text and commentary of, 113; —of Gita Press based on text and commentary of, 113–14; —of Pagani based on text and commentary of, 114–15; —of Roussel based on text and commentary of, 114; —of Shastri based on text and commentary of, 113
Nala, 69–70, 126, 165, 190, 198, 204, 218, 272, 285, 408, 482, 633, 881, 934; Aṅgada addresses, 285; as architect or chief engineer, 619, 1482; boons of, from father, Viśvakarman, 154, 617; brings water for consecration, 1536–38; builds bridge, 90, 154–55, 619, 1482; charges, 238; designs bridge to Laṅkā, 616; encourages monkeys, 286; fights Pratapana, 207; fights rākṣasas, 238, 253; follows Rāma into battle, 198; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; Indrajit strikes down, 327; kills Tapana, 764; as king of the apes, 739; langurs assist, in building bridge, 645; maintains watch, 218; one hundred million troops surround, 165; Rāvaṇa pierces, with arrows, 253; refrains from self-praise, 617; seeks refuge with Rāma, 253; seizes mountain peaks, 271; son of Viśvakarman, 154, 172, 617; takes counsel with Rāma, 190. See also bridge; nalasetu
Nalakūbara: curse of, on Rāvaṇa, 572, 907
nalasetu, 1482. See also bridge names: alliteration of, 734 (see also echoing); of characters vary across recensions, 881; commentators on discrepencies in, of monkeys, 669; of names (continued) companions of Vibhīṣaṇa, 576, 595, 719; confusion of, 1025, 1038, 1048, 1293, 1536, 1538–39; duplication of, 762–63, 771, 815, 1047, 1270; echoing of (see echoing); of kāṇḍas, 18; Mallinātha on, of rivers, 545; proclaiming of, in battle, 202, 234, 280, 313, 401, 759, 838, 1090; puns on, 673–75, 875; siṃharkṣa as, 1381; translation of, 110–11; of vedic divinities, 1377; of Viṣṇu, 458–61, 1342–47, 1446–55

Namuci, 240, 850
Nandigrāma, 1468, 1530–31; Bharata dwells in, during exile of Rāma, 58; —orders highway built from, 483; chonology of return to, 1491; citizens of Ayodhyā travel to, 483; Hanumān spies, 477; return of Rāma to, 43, 483–85; reunion in, 1470; wives of Daśaratha travel to, 483, 1514
Nandīśvara: curses Rāvaṇa, 907
Nārada: reminds Rāma of his divinity, 824
Narāntaka (I) (nephew of Kumbhakarṇa), 251, 302, 306–8; Aṅgada attacks, 307; —kills, 68–69, 308, 865, 877; boons of, 302; capable of flying through air, 302; death of, on sixth day of dark half of Bhādrāśvina, 1067; fights monkey forces, 306–8; —with or against mountains, 877–88; identification of, 856; javelin of, 306; Kumbhakarṇa, paternal uncle of, 299; looses dart at Aṅgada, 307; magical illusion of, 302; Mahodara and Mahāpārśva dispatched to protect, 302; mourned, 308; name of two rākṣasas, 856; one of four sons of Rāvaṇa, 877; path of, mired in blood, 306; pierces seven hundred monkeys, 306; possesses higher knowledge, 302; —divinely charged weapons, 302; rage of, 307; Rāvaṇa sends, to battle, 302; resplendent as Guha, 303; skilled at magical illusion, 302; Vibhīṣaṇa describes, 251; vows to fight, 302; white horse of, 303, 306; —, slain, 308
Narāntaka (II) (rākṣasa): Dvivida kills, 246; identification of, 856
Narasiṃhāvatara, 81, 1400
Nārāyaṇa, Lord, 715, 1067, 1341, 1549; etymology of, 1446; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 269, 283, 929, 978; Rāma identified as, 459, 1446
Narmadā, 163, 544, 640 narrative: annular nature of, in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 17–18; chronology of (see chronology of the epic); demands of, in Rāmāyaṇa, 19; demonic voice in, 34; differences of, attributed to different yugas, 1379; problems in, 663, 669, 695, 725, 823, 825, 899, 928, 942, 1015, 1029, 1035, 1069, 1295, 1316, 1399, 1406, 1483, 1504–5, 1530, 1536
Nāṭyaśāstra, 25, 952 nectar of immortality (amṛta). See churning of the ocean night: army spends, on Mount Suvela, 194; battle at, 20–21, 209–12, 335–36, 767–70; battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa rages throughout, 436; duration of, 1107–8, 1261; massacre of rākṣasas during, 85, 174–76; monkeys attack Laṅkā by, 333–35; Rāma spends last, of exile with Bharadvāja, 477; search of battlefield by Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa at, 66, 327. See also Kālarātrī
Nikumbha (I) (rākṣasa), 562; fights with Nīla, 206; head of, severed by Nīla, 208, 766; identity of, 563, 845; vows to kill Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 139, 140
Nikumbha Kaumbhakarṇi (II) (son of Kumbhakarṇa), 139, 377, 1140–41, 1481; brother of Kumbha, 335, 350; capable of leading troops, 242; death of, concludes ninth day of battle, 1140, 1253; death of, concludes tenth day of battle, 1491; Hanumān fights, 341–43; —kills, 63, 343, 562, 1141; —kills, in revenge, 1138; identity of, 563, 845; iron club of, 251, 341–42,

1337–39; —, shattered, 342; Rāvaṇa, angry at death of, 343; —sends, forth to battle, 335; son of Kumbhakarṇa, 12, 139, 335, 562; Vibhīṣaṇa describes, 251; vows to kill Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 139; witnesses brother struck down by Sugrīva, 341
Nikumbhilā grove/shrine, 17, 28, 79, 1074, 1167, 1183, 1186–87, 1189, 1191, 1193–94; as goddess, 79, 1167, 1185–86; —, Bhadrakālī, 1074; Indrajit guards, 365; —performs sacrifice at, 80, 323–24, 356–57; —returns to, 362; Lakṣmaṇa departs for, 365; location of, 1159; Rāvaṇa performs sacrifices at, 1320; Vibhīṣaṇa instructs Lakṣmaṇa to interrupt sacrifice at, 364, 1186
Nīla, 126–29, 133, 194, 198; Añgada remonstrates with, 285; appears in many forms, 257, 889–90; attacks Mahodara with mountaintop, 310; Bharata embraces, 485; changes size, 256, 888; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; comes to aid of Añgada, 310; as eager to win as Vāsava, 248; endowed with his father's divine power, 257; fights Atikāya, 316; —Kumbhakarṇa, 289; —Nikumbha, 206; —Prahasta, 248, 867–68; —Rāvaṇa, 63, 255–57, 888–90; follows Rāma into battle, 198; goes to aid of Añgada, 310; Hanumān rebukes, for interfering, 255; heads Sugrīva's army, 160; hurls mountaintop at Triśiras, 310; immobilized by Triśiras, 310; Indrajit pierces, 325; —strikes down, in battle, 327; kills horse of Prahasta, 248; —Mahodara, 310; —Nikumbha, 208; —Prahasta, 248–49, 482; as king of the apes, 739; Kumbhakarṇa hits, with knee, 289; loses consciousness, 257; makes camp, 133; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; Nikumbha pierces, 208; one hundred million troops surround, 165; only monkey other than Hanumān to change size, 888; perches on Rāvaṇa's flagstaff, 256; placed at vanguard of monkeys, 526; Prahasta strikes, 248; praised, 249; prevents troops from harassing cities, 526; protects Rāma, 218; Rāma orders, to advance upon Laṅkā, 271; —orders, to find Indrajit, 212; —rewards, 492; Rāvaṇa hits, with divinely charged weapon, 257; returns to battlefield, 288; —to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 249; rushes Kumbhakarṇa, 289; Sāraṇa describes, 160; Śārdula describes, 172; severs heads of Nikumbha and his charioteer, 766; son of Agni, 172; as son of Agni is immune to Agni's weapon-spell, 890; stationed at eastern gate 192, 198; swift, 256, 890; trickery (magical illusion) of, 257, 882, 889, 890; unable to help Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 326; wounded, 310–11, 256, 327
Nirṛti, 130, 530, 1044, 1153; as personification of death, 788
nīti, 33, 36, 80, 550, 744 nītiśāstra, 5, 12, 28, 31–32, 77, 279, 501, 552, 563, 586, 657, 854, 943, 945, 947, 948, 1053, 1498; of Kāmandaka, 501, 521, 563, 564, 706; on consultation of king with ministers, 943; on modes and categories of political action, 943–50, 961, 971; on proper time to fight, 854; political expedients of, 563, 616, 744–45, 963–68
Nivātakavacas, 940, 1394 noose, 574, 703, 1053; of Atikāya, 315; of death, 142, 558; of Dharma, 576; of Kāla, 193, 370, 558; of Kumbhakarṇa, 290; of Varuṇa, 315; of Yama, 843, 975, 1443 northern recension: glosses difficulties in southern recension, 504, 513, 565, 607, 657, 684, 700, 773, 939, 946, 986, 1537; Pollock on, 513, 565, 700, 773, 939, 946, 1030, 1056–57 number(s), 634–36, 648, 655–56, 1360; of days of Kumbhakarṇa's sleep, 262, 909–12, 932–33; in divisions of army, number(s) (continued)

514 (see also army); interpretation of, 991, 1003, 1051; of monkeys, 43, 62, 66, 93, 124, 157, 159, 165, 327, 522, 622, 625, 632–38, 648, 655–66, 668, 716, 720, 741–43, 753; of rākṣasas, 191–92, 514, 597, 721 numbers, large, 634–36, 648, 655–56, 1360; billions, 128, 155, 161, 165, 204–5, 533, 622, 634–35, 648, 656; ten billion, 160, 162–63, 167, 597, 632, 648, 656, 743; millions, 636–37, 1088; one hundred million, 128, 161, 165, 172, 199, 200, 204–5, 481, 514, 525, 634, 668, 757–58; one hundred million (pieces of gold), 492; six hundred seventy million, 327; tens of millions, 128, 189, 199, 204, 716, 720, 743, 1017; quadrillions, 165, 64; septillions, 165, 648; trillions, 167, 648, 656, 758; one hundred trillion, 656 ocean: as the abode of Varuṇa, 608, 832; agitated at Rāma's assault, 610; anthropomorphic form of, described, 154, 611; appears to Rāma in a dream in Rāmopākhyāna, 612; arrogance of, 604; bridging of, 4, 90, 95, 123, 154–56 (see also bridge); churning of (see churning of the ocean, story of); description of, 89–90, 122, 132–33, 154; fears Rāma's weapons, 611; Hanumān's leap of, 62, 66–67, 121, 140, 185; hates defiling touch of Abhīras, 614; as home of enemies of the gods, 543; impossible to cross, 122, 131–32, 154, 542, 613, indistinguishable from sky, 132; instructs Rāma to have a bridge built over, 154; intransigence of, 604; as kinsman of Rāma, 151, 616; as lair of rākṣasas, 132, 540; lair of Varuṇa, 132, 541; locus of, Candra and Droṇa mountains, 1091, 1314; —, in purāṇic cosmology, 1482; manifests himself before Rāma, 154; of milk, 10, 65, 75, 228, 823, 896, 1244–45; —, in Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa, 1535; monkey army crosses, 155–56, 189; monkeys discuss how to cross, 151–52, 538; origin myth of, told in Bālakāṇḍa, 600; overflows at time of cosmic dissolution, 837; propitiates Rāma, 154, 612; Rāma assaults, 152–53; —capable of drying up, 506; —confronts, 45–46, 68, 89–90, 121, 123–26, 131, 152–53; —consecrated with waters from, 490–91, 1535–38, —contemplates suicide in, 134; —crosses, with army, 85–86, 273; —encamps army at shore of, 131, 181; —propitiates, 81, 152; Sāgara as god of (see Sāgara); Samudra as god of (see Samudra); seven, of purāṇic cosmology, 822; Vibhīṣaṇa consecrated with water from, 150. See also Sāgara; Samudra ochre garments, 60, 478, 1501

omens, 108; Agnipurāṇa on, 520; bodily, 520, 845–46, 981; Dange on, 520; Kapadia on, 520; Kāśyapa on, 737; Sharma on, 520; Varāhamihira on, 531, 736–37; Vyas on, 520
omens, auspicious, 735; auspicious breeze as, 129; Bhārgava Uśanas's shining as, 129; blossoming trees as, 130; breeze blowing in direction of army's march as, 129, 528; clear directions as, 130; clear water as, 130; clockwise movement as, 324, 349, 1077; constellation Brahmarāśi as, 129; forest laden with fruit as, 130; fragrant breeze as, 130; Great Seers shining as, 129; illumination of Dhruva as, 129; Lakṣmaṇa learned in, 527; Lakṣmaṇa observes, 129; presage Rāma's victory, 431–32; Rāma as conversant with, 624; —observes, 126, 506; shining sun as, 130; sweet voices of animals and birds as, 129; throbbing eyelid as, 126–127, 520; Trijaṭā points out, to Sītā, 88; Triśaṅku shining as, 129; twin stars Viśākha shining as, 130 omens, inauspicious, 2, 9, 10, 13, 33, 531, 567, 710, 735, 836, 842, 862,

980, 1143, 1206, 1276, 1340, 1352, 1357; Agnipurāṇa on, 710–713, 980–82; Akampana encounters, 237; Akampana ignores, 237; appearing, 188, 284; battle flags not shining as, 187; battle standard falling as, 344; beasts of prey as, 187, 711; birds as, 233, 399, 712, 836, 1276; birds flying clockwise as, 284; birds flying in houses as, 712; birds on battle standard as, 233; birds swooping down as, 197, 431, 738; birds that feed on flesh as, 244; carrion birds perch on standard as, 233, 836; cats mating with tigers as, 187; celestial bodies as, 929; clockwise movement as, 244, 284, 859, 981; cloudless sky as, 244, 859; clouds resembling beasts of prey as, 197, 736; clouds thundering as, 187, 245, 284, 711; constellations appearing strange as, 197; constellations occluding each other as, 130, 245, 421, 422, 531, 860, 1248, 1352, 1326; corona of sun as, 197, 737; cows giving birth to donkeys as, 187, 712; crimson twilight as, 431, 1353; dark women with white teeth laughing as, 187, 711; darkness as, 233, 399, 431; Death peering into households as, 188; Dhūmrākṣa encounters, 233; discordant sounds as, 233; dogs devouring bali as, 187, 712; dust blowing as, 344, 431; earth appearing on fire as, 431; earth shaking as, 197, 233, 399; facing south as, 245, 860; fire plummeting from sun as, 197; as hair-raising, 285; halting steps of horses as, 344; harsh wind as, 197, 237, 245, 284, 344, 431, 982, 1143, 1353; headless corpse as, 233; horses emitting sparks from hindquarters as, 431; horses stumbling as, 245, 399, 1143, 1276; howling of animals at sun as, 197; howling of jackals as, 197, 244, 284, 399, 431; howling or screeching of beasts and/or birds as, 187, 197, 237, 244, 399, 736, 842, 1276; jackals as, 187, 197, 244, 284, 431, 738, 860, 869, 1276; jackals emitting flames as, 244, 284, 431, 842; kinnaras mating with humans as, 187, 712; kinnaras mating with rākṣasas as, 187; Kumbhakarṇa encounters, 284; laughing as, 187, 711; left arm throbbing as, 284, 400; left eye twitching as, 237, 284, 400; lightning bolts as, 284, 431; looting of houses as, 187, 711; loss of strength of chariot horses as, 344, 1143; Makarākṣa encounters, 344; Mālyavān observes, 187, 712, 714; meteors as, 245, 284, 842, 860, 982, 1276; meteors thundering as, 400, 431; miscegenation as, 187, 712; moon glowing dully and emitting red glare as, 197, 736; occlusion/eclipsing of Mūla as, for rākṣasas, 130; pigs mating with dogs as, 187; Prahasta encounters, 244–45; predict destruction of rākṣasas, 187–88; presage destruction of Dvārakā, 710; raining down of blood as, 197, 233, 245, 399, 430, 736, 836, 860, 1276, 1352; raining down of hot blood as, 187, 710, 1208; rākṣasas pay no heed to, 345; rats mating with mongooses as, 187, 712; Rāvaṇa encounters, 13, 33, 399–400, 431; rays of sun as, 431; red garments as, 1076; red sky as, 197, 736; screeching of tethered birds as, 188, 712; sky growing dark as, 237; stumbling as, 842; sun growing dim as, 284, 399, 1276; tears in eyes of horses as, 187, 344, 431, 710; thundering storm clouds as, 187, 189, 197; trembling of earth as, 284; unfavorable wind as, 233, 836; unnatural cries as, 244, 859; untimely darkness as, 431, 1353; vultures as, 187, 197, 400, 431, 1353; vultures circling as, 431; vultures perching on flagstaff, as, 233, 245, 284, 399, 1276; vultures resting on chariots, as, 233; voice growing faint as, 400; whip slipping from hand as, 245, 344, 1143;

omens, inauspicious (continued)
whirlwinds circling left as, 430, 1352–53; white doves with red feet as, 188, 712; white teeth as, 187, 711; wild animals entering Laṅkā as, 187, 711; wind blowing in face as, 431

Padmavana, 32, 142, 573
Pagani, 114–15, passim; on circling of birds and men as ominous, 860; discusses curses on Rāvaṇa, 907; follows Roussel, 116–17, 622, 633, 641, 658, 683–84, 708, 749, 751–54, 777, 779, 785, 808, 822, 825, 836, 848, 850, 857, 876, 910, 920, 930, 940, 944, 950–52, 967, 976, 985, 987, 996, 1010–11, 1017, 1032, 1042, 1045, 1057, 1077, 1083, 1091, 1101, 1112, 1118, 1128, 1212, 1214, 1222, 1225, 1256–57, 1262, 1275, 1293, 1301, 1322, 1326, 1333, 1340, 1354, 1357, 1362, 1368, 1382, 1383, 1386, 1401–2, 1413, 1423, 1425, 1436, 1450, 1462, 1468, 1476, 1501, 1506, 1511, 1527, 1529, 1531, 1533, 1541; interprets battle as sacrifice, 766; notes of, 641, 643–44, 702, 748, 765–66, 777, 803, 823, 850, 863, 895, 903, 1061, 1138, 1151, 1381, 1546; reads deeper symbolism into text, 766; translation of, based on text of Nāgojibhaṭṭa, 114–15
Panasa, 65, 126, 128, 161, 175, 726, 756, 823; assigned to right flank, 525–26; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; Indrajit strikes down, 327; instructed to bring healing herbs, 228; pun on name of, 175, 673; recognizes herbs, 824; returns to battlefield, 288; Suṣeṇa sends, for healing herbs, 65; takes counsel with Rāma, 190 paṇava, 264, 769, 872, 916. See also drums pañcamahābhūtas, 612, 1258, 1373 parables: of Kaṇḍu and the dove, 587, 590–91; of the monkey, the tiger, and the hunter, 591; of the sterile tree, 487, 1526
Paraśurāma. See Rāma Jāmadagnya
Pāriyātra, Mount, 161, 637
Parjanya, 162, 494, 640, 836, 1155, 1276, 1352, 1548
Parṇāśā, 161, 637–38
Pārśvamauli. See Māṇibhadra paṭaha, 250, 264, 872, 915, 1275. See also drums Pātāla, 89, 132, 153, 198, 263, 266, 290, 435, 540–43, 558, 608–10, 740, 913–14, 921, 994, 1100–1101, 1117, 1243, 1366 pāyasa, 1521
perfected beings (siddhas), 255, 303, 421, 435, 465; as witnesses, 90, 155, 156, 430 phalaśruti, 96–97; complexity of, 1549; late addition of, 1550; significance of, 1548–49; textual evidence for, 1548–49
Phālguna (February–March), 419, 767, 842, 853, 870, 906, 1019, 1141, 1150, 1234, 1238, 1371, 1378, 1490, 1491
Piśāca (I) (rākṣasa), 251, 876, 1003
Piśāca (II) (consort of Kaśyapa), 930 piśācas, 294, 603, 930, 1003 poetic figures (alaṃkāras), 22, 24, 527, 537, 541–46, 543, 549, 557–59, 574, 576, 601–2, 626, 629, 646, 657, 659, 680, 690–91, 695, 698, 727, 731, 734, 740–43, 761, 804–5, 812, 817, 839–40, 850, 856–57, 866–68, 874, 891, 921–22, 929, 932, 936, 947, 951, 956, 968, 982–83, 1138, 1246, 1296, 1299, 1305–6, 1326, 1330, 1332, 1339, 1357, 1367, 1378, 1384, 1386, 1388, 1404–5, 1411, 1427, 1430–31, 1433–34, 1474, 1526, 1535, 1541. See also alaṃkāras political expedients, 563, 616, 744–45, 963–68; enumerated in śāstras, 706; Sternbach on, 563–64. See also nīti; nītiśāstra political science. See nīti
Pollock, Sheldon, 3, 4, 46–47, 50, 53, 65, 81, 83–84, 99, 109, 516, 729, 838, 969, 1386, 1432; on boon of Rāma, 39, 723, 930; on divinity of Rāma, 545, 626, 689, 713, 830, 895, 1061, 1445; on madness of Rāma, 46–47, 546; on northern tendency to gloss southern recension, 513, 565, 700, 773, 939, 946, 1030, 1056–57

Praghasa (I) (one of Vibhīṣaṇa's counselors), 191, 576, 719, 723–24
Praghasa (II) (vānara), 199, 727, 740, 757
Praghasa (III) (rākṣasa), 1213; fights Sugrīva, 206; Sugrīva kills, 207
Prahasta, 85; boasts, 856; claims to have counseled the return of Sītā, 855–56; companions of, slaughter monkeys, 246; compared to a bull elephant in rut, 248; compared to Uśanas Kāvya, 243; concludes Sītā should be returned, 243; confers with Rāvaṇa, 179; as eager to win as Vṛtra, 248; encounters bad omens, 244–45; evil-minded, 244; fights Nīla, 248–49, 867–68; general of Rāvaṇa, 243, 568; goes forth, 244; Hanumān kills son of, 560; head of, severed, 249; hurls himself upon the monkeys, 244; in charge of rākṣasa garrison, 834, 842; intoxicated with own valor, 560; kills monkeys, 247; mansion of, 560; ministers of, 858; mounts a chariot, 244; Nīla kills, 11, 248–49; rākṣasas circle, 244; Rāvaṇa assigns to eastern gate, 189, 191–92; —furious at death of, 73; —orders, to lead troops, 242; —tells Sītā that, severed Rāma's head, 52, 174–75; resembles Kāla, 244; vows victory, 138–39, 560
Prajaṅgha (I) (rākṣasa), 1115, 1122–24, 1126, 1132, 1139, 1141, 1481; fights Sampāti, 206–7, 762–63
Prajaṅgha (II) (vānara), 129
Prajāpati, 421, 460, 843, 931; abode of, 1100; as Brahmā, 1342; Cg distinguishes, from Brahmā, 1344; creates Indra, 1449; Daśaratha as partial incarnation of, 827–28; Jāmbavān, son of, 327; Sugrīva, grandson of, 291, 996; use of name of, 1445, 1454
prakṛti, 1389; ambiguity of term, 1409
Pramāthin, 644–45, 740; guards western gate, 199; haunts the banks of the Ganges, 164; launches assault, 379
Prasravaṇa, Mount: named for its flowing streams, 783; near scene of Sītā's abduction, 783; Rāma and Hanumān on, at beginning of Yuddhakāṇḍa in northern recension, 497
Pratapana: engages with Nala, 207, 764 primogeniture, 1504
prince regent. See yuvarāja proverbs, 359, 1174; of failure at a minor task after accomplishing a major feat, 685; of "Having listened to the entire Rāmāyaṇa," 107, 1182, 1366; of the housewife called the house, 935; of how to award praise, 497; of the lion as foe of the elephant, 1043; of "misery loves company," 956; of the rabbit's horn, 1169. See also maxims Pṛthu: maintains watch, 218 psychological warfare, 25, 52, 78; fascinates Vālmīki, 27; māyā as, 12; as theme, 27
Punarvasu, 315, 529, 1015–16, 1052; earrings of Atikāya compared to, 315 punishment, 201, 575, 660, 662, 943; daṇḍa as, 983; hell as, in afterlife, 1171; physical, 579; rod of, 200, 983; should not inflict, 55, 1419–20; in story of Aṣṭāvakra. See also torture Puñjikasthalā: cause of curse on Rāvaṇa, 907; daughter of Varuṇa, 572; name of apsaras, identified with Hanumān's mother, 907; Rāvaṇa rapes, 570, 907 puruṣakāras. See fate; human effort puruṣārthas, 408–9, 946–47, 963, 1432, 1447. See also artha; dharma; kāma puruṣasūkta, 1451–52
Puṣpakavimāna (the flying palace Puṣpaka), 53, 218, 484, 936, 1474, 1486, 1495, 1519; belongs to Kubera, 1518–19; built by Brahmā, 1518; built by Viśvakarman, 1518; a car for all seasons, 1524; Kubera obtains, through austerities, 1519; —returns to Rāma, 1524; monkeys join Rāma in, 471;

Puṣpakavimāna (the flying palace Puṣpaka) (continued)
Mount Meru resembles, 469; Rāma returns to Ayodhyā in, 96, 471–72, 482, 1507; —returns, to Kubera, 486, 1473; —uses, 1474; Rāvaṇa seated in, 272, 936; takes from Kubera, 440, 468, 555, 1384, 1470–71; Sītā views battlefield from, 26, 53, 87, 218–22, 794, 796, 1486; Vibhīṣaṇa lends, to Rāma, 82, 468; widows not transported in, 88, 221, 807, 1486
Pūtanā: black complexion of, 711

Rabhasa, 129, 139, 379
Rāhu, 298, 314, 408, 421, 527, 531, 543, 1014, 1018, 1050, 1179, 1248, 1289, 1291, 1321, 1411. See also eclipse rajas, 1194, 1196
rākṣasas, 70–86; abandon Laṅkā, 540; all, should not be slain, 351; amazed and gratified, 216; appear to have human forms, 723; armor of, 182, 198, 206, 232, 244, 305, 336, 391, 410; attack Rāma, 211; assume any form at will, 334, 561, 761; bloodthirstiness of, 773, 838; boast of their martial power and vow to defeat Rāma, 137, 139–140; Brahmā curses, 396; breath of Kumbhakarṇa drives back, 263; bring gifts for Vibhīṣaṇa, 446–47; clad in armor, 244; contract and expand their bodies, 873; description of, 344; despondent at Prahasta's fall, 249; difficulty of, seeing Rāma in battle, 392–93; enemies of the gods, 542; fall from the sky, 202; fight monkeys, 237, 304–7, 333–36, 345, 391–92; fight unfairly, 829; flee battlefield, 236, 241, 248–49, 312–13, 348, 383, 393, 438, 839, 851, 1376; given over to sensuality, 560; grow more powerful at night, 767; Hanumān kills, 185, 356; hearts of, sink seeing Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa alive, 231; humanization of, 88; ignore inauspicious omens, 345; injuring others the natural behavior of, 1420; kill rākṣasas, 238, 392; Kumbhakarṇa addresses, 266; —crushes, 269; —devours, 294, 295; Lakṣmaṇa vows to exterminate all, 351; low morale of, 185; magical powers of, 25, 27, 539; Mālyavān foresees destruction of, 187; mantras of, 349; monkeys attack, 333–36; —beat up, 170; —crush, 211; —kill, 209, 234; —use weapons of, 208, 238; mounts of, 232–33, 250; must perish for the crimes of Rāvaṇa, 193; not to be trusted, 230; numbers of, 191–92, 393, 514, 597, 721; over-confident, 560; panicked, 241; perform sacrifice before battle, 243; powerless to assail Laṅkā, 121; prepared to die for Rāvaṇa, 237; Rāma kills, 392–94; —kills all in Janasthāna, 172; —stops, 345; —will destroy, 201; Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa slaughter, 210, 335; Rāvaṇa addresses, 249, 252; —invulnerable to, 262; —orders, to awaken Kumbhakarṇa, 262; —orders, to fight, 205, 232, 237; —orders, to kill Aṅgada, 202; —stations, at gates, 262; report Kumbhakarṇa's slaying to Rāvaṇa, 299; report Rāma's siege, 203; retreat to Pātāla, 540; return to Laṅkā, 249; severed arm of Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 298; Sītā argues, should not be punished, 55; specialize in deception, 26; spy on enemies, 85; tell Rāvaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa escaped Indrajit's bonds, 231; terrified by monkey army, 203, 231; terror of, at Rāvaṇa's grieving, 387; theme of righteous, 34; theriomorphic heads of, 835, 878; think Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are dead, 216; treacherous fighters, 216, 229, 230; troop commanders of, muster forces, 243; unable to withstand Rāma, 571; unrighteous, 186; Vibhīṣaṇa predicts destruction of, 443; vision of, obscured, 238; wake Kumbhakarṇa, 263–66; weapons of, 205, 232, 234,

243, 245, 366–67, 391–92, 399, 405, 770, 1255; willing to lay down their lives, 846
rākṣasīs, 86–88, 445, 810, 1405, 1457; abuse Sītā, 690, 794, 1416, 1493; believe Rudra, Viṣṇu, Indra, or Yama are appearing in guise of Rāma, 396; blame Rāvaṇa for rākṣasas' destruction, 441; —Śūrpaṇakhā for rākṣasas' destruction, 394; describe Rāma's body, 394; —Śūrpaṇakhā, 394; descriptions of, in Sundarakāṇḍa, 86–87, 794, 878; —, in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 86–88; follow orders, 450; guard Sītā, 144, 174, 184, 218–19, 222, 389, 461, 577, 670, 701, 794; Hanumān wants to kill, 449, 1419; humanization of, 88; lament of, 394–97, 439–41, 1263–69, 1272, 1283; predict Sītā will destroy rākṣasas, 396; recount appearance of portents to Rāvaṇa foretelling his death, 396; search battlefield for Rāvaṇa, 439–40; —Sītā battlefield in Puṣpakavimāna, 218–22, 795–96; show Sītā Rāma's body on battlefield, 218; Sītā refuses to allow Hanumān to kill, 54, 88; sympathetic to Sītā, 87–88, 689–90; take Sītā to aśoka grove, 222; tell Sītā of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa's death, 218; wear red turbans, 348, 1151; worship Nikumbhilā, 1074
Rāma, 44–51, passim; abandons forbearance and forgiveness, 45–46, 152–53, 604–5; able to destroy Laṅkā, 126; absence of, causes Bharata's abjection, 60, 477, 1501; accepts Vibhīṣaṇa, 148–50; actions of critiqued by Lakṣmaṇa, 37, 358–61; addresses Rāvaṇa's javelin, 57–58, 414, 1303–4; advised by Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva to have bridge built, 151, 601–2; —by Vibhīṣaṇa to solicit aid of Samudra, 151, 599–600; advises Lakṣmaṇa how to fight, 254; Agni instructs, to take Sītā back, 49, 462–63, 1456–57; allows Lakṣmaṇa to fight Rāvaṇa, 254; ambivalence of over return to Ayodhyā, 59, 476–77, 1407; argues that Sītā's chastity needs to be publicly proven, 49, 462, 1457; armor of, acquired from Indra, 420, 1246; —, shattered, 219, 796–97; —, unassailable by gods and asuras, 159, 200; arrow(s) of, 421, 437, 1372–74; —, description of, 25, 437, 1372–73; —, as eagles, 421; —, fletching of, 258, 298, 319, 421, 435, 780, 837, 1148, 1203, 1293; —, like the staff of Brahmā, 262; —, penetrates underworld, 608; —, take any form at will, 421; ascends Mount Suvela, 193; ashram of, 26, 480, 1393, 1487, 1506; assaults Sāgara, 8, 45, 152–53, 607–8; assumes role of god-king, 60; attempts to consecrate Bharata a second time, 61; —to thwart Rāvaṇa's javelin, 57; as avatāra, 3, 49–51, 713 (see also Rāmāvatāra); Aviddha shows sympathy for, 184, 702, 703, 1251; avoids scandal, 14, 454–63; awareness of status as avatāra, 44, 51, 897 (see also Rāmāvatāra); banishes Lakṣmaṇa, 61; barkcloth garments of, 60, 177, 474, 478, 677, 1492; battle standard of, knocked down by Rāvaṇa, 421, 1325; beheads Agniketu, Raśmiketu, Suptaghna, and Yajñakopa, 208; bleeding of, 100–102, 176, 213–15, 223, 226–27, 425, 778–79, 811; boons to, from Bharadvāja, 474, 532,1494, 1517–18; —, from Brahmā, 475–76, 1511; —, from gods, 482; —, from Indra, 15, 466–67, 484, 1466, 1494, 1511–12, 1518; —, from Viśvāmitra, 1061; bound by Indrajit with serpent-arrows, 46, 50, 212–13, 231–32, 776, 864; bow of, 24, 123, 153, 156, 180, 198, 214, 252–53, 295, 348, 364, 392–93, 408, 410, 412, 416, 420–21, 424, 430, 432, 435, 437; —, consists of the Vedas, 335; calls Lakṣmaṇa irreplaceable, 46, 56, 223, 811; capable of defeating gods, 722; —of drying up Sāgara, 506;

Rāma (continued)
carried by Hanumān, 527, 622–23, 651–52, 727, 902; character of, 44–51; chariot battle of, with Rāvaṇa, 432–38; claims no interest in battle, kingship, or Sītā, 46, 223, 811; —to value Lakṣmaṇa more than Sītā, 56–57; commends Hanumān, 67, 121, 497; compared to Bhava; —to Garuḍa, 262; 335, 1113; —to Viṣṇu, 260, 900; competition of, with Bharata annulled, 60; complexion of, dark, 176, 653; —, contrasted with fair complexion of Lakṣmaṇa, 1305; confidence of, bolstered by Agastya, 1342–44; confronts Sāgara, 45–46, 68, 89–90, 121, 123–26, 131, 152–53; confused, 47, 361–63, 1182; consecrates Bharata as yuvarāja, 58, 61, 493, 1544–45; consecration of, 17, 42, 44, 58, 61, 96, 464, 488, 490–93, 1102, 1461, 1479, 1491–92, 1512, 1528, 1530, 1535, 1538–40, 1543–44, 1549–50; —, ceremonies at, 61, 482–83; —, vessels for 490–91; contemplation of suicide of, 134; —not accepted by commentators, 546–47; crosses ocean with monkey army, 85–86, 181, 273; cuts down foremost among rākṣasas, 210; —Rāvaṇa's bow, 261; deeds of, recalled by Bharadvāja, 474–75, 1492–94; —, related to Bharata by Hanumān, 479–82, 1504–12; defoliates and grants boon to drumakulya, 614–15; deliberates crossing the ocean, 131–32; despairs, 7, 10, 13, 27, 36, 46–47, 121, 131, 223–25, 810–16; determined to kill Rāvaṇa himself, 192; devoted to the welfare of all, 158; disabled by Indrajit, 326, 1085; dismisses Puṣpakavimāna, 486, 1524; —Rāvaṇa from the battlefield, 13, 74, 261, 267; divine mission of, 39–40; divine weapon-spells (astras) of, 13, 221, 1372–74; —, described, 1372–73, 1374; —, received from Viśvāmitra,1296; —, vaporize Rāvaṇa's body in Rāmopākhyāna, 1393, 1404; divinity of, Brockington on, 50, 713; —, Pollock on, 545, 626, 689, 713, 830, 895, 1061, 1445; —, proclaimed by Brahmā, 54; 458–61, 1443–55; —, in Rāmāyaṇa, 50; does not recognize Garuḍa, 229; does not refute Lakṣmaṇa's anti-dharma speech, 39, 56, 358–61, 1169–80; dreads reproaches of family over the loss of Lakṣmaṇa, 223; eager to see Bharata, 469; emotional turmoil of, 41, 45, 47–49, 57, 452, 545, 1422, 1425–26, 1431; encamps at shore of ocean, 131, 181; equal of Indra in skill at weaponry, 393; equanimity of, fails, 45; eulogizes Rāvaṇa, 1379–80; exemplar of dharma, 4, 36, 38; —of self-control, 47; exhorted by Lakṣmaṇa to abandon dharma, 358–61, 1175–76; exile of, completed, 15, 478–91; expunges affront caused by fate, 454; eyes of, red with rage, 152, 1007, 1431; falls when struck by Indrajit, 213–14; fate of, 679–80; fears his boast is in vain, 224; —entire rākṣasa race must perish for the crimes of Rāvaṇa, 193; feels he must follow Lakṣmaṇa in death, 46; fights Agniketu, Raśmiketu, Suptaghna, and Yajñakopa, 206; —Kumbhakarṇa, 294–98; —Makarākṣa; 346–48; —Rāvaṇa, 13, 19, 74, 260–61, 407–12, 416, 419–38; fire of love consumes, 134; followed by Bharata into the Sarayū and then to heaven, 61; follows advice of Vibhīṣaṇa, 47; forbearance of, 45–46, 152–53, 179, 459, 579, 1415; free from vagaries of fate, 565; freed and healed by Garuḍa, 228, 229; —from bonds, 231–32; frees Rāvaṇa's spies, 9, 86, 158; fulfills terms of Kaikeyī's boon, 59; —vow by killing Rāvaṇa, 1462; gives gifts to brahmans, 492; —monkeys leave, 225; —Vibhīṣaṇa image of presiding divinity of the Ikṣvākus, 1544; gods identify, as

Supreme Lord, 458–61; —rebuke, for treatment of Sītā, 1444; —remind, of true identity, 45, 50, 458–61; —request, to return to Brahmaloka, 1454; —, seers, and gandharvas desire his victory, 186; grants boons to petitioners, 1549; —protection to all beings, 150, 593; —Vibhīṣaṇa protection, 150; Hanumān advises to see Sītā, 451; —as supreme devotee of, 51; —reports Sītā as slain to, 27, 36, 47, 357–58; has Lakṣmaṇa consecrate Vibhīṣaṇa, 150, 446; has no evil thoughts toward Kaikeyī, according to commentators, 1170; healed by fragrance of healing herbs, 332; —by Garuḍa, 230; hears that Indrajit killed Sītā, 27, 36, 47, 55, 357–58; humanity of, 41, 45, 57; ignorant of his own divinity until task is complete, 44–5, 459, 1445–46; illuminates all directions with arrows, 211; impelled by power of fate, 190, 427; impervious to weapons of Indrajit, 325; impossible to slay, 180; Indra sends chariot and Mātali to, 19, 420, 1321–23; Indrajit disables, 10,12, 46, 50, 65, 212–13, 324, 326, 1083; inquires of Bharadvāja about Bharata and Ayodhyā's residents, 474; inspects troops, 197, 738; instructed by Agni to accept Sītā, 461–62, 1456–57; —by Daśaratha's shade, 463–65, 1459–61; —to give wealth to brahmans, 463, 1451; instructs army to ascend Mount Suvela, 193; —Hanumān to watch facial expressions of Bharata, 59; 476–77, 1497–98; —monkeys not to take human form in battle, 192; —Nīla to prepare for battle with Kumbhakarṇa, 271; —Vibhīṣaṇa to perform Rāvaṇa's funeral rites, 14, 74, 444; invests arrow with brahmāstra, 437; iron arrows of, 347; Kausalyā would follow, 390, 1251; kills all rākṣasas in Janasthāna, 172; —Khara and Dūṣaṇa, 174, 442, 788; —Kumbhakarṇa, 24, 297–99, 300; —Makarākṣa, 348; —Rāvaṇa for sake of honor, 14, 455, 1435; —Valin, 37, 473; —Virādha, 100, 172, 395, 436, 473, 479–80, 625, 668, 1010, 1263, 1369, 1488; —Yajñakopa, 208; kinsman of Sāgara, 151, 616; Kubera returns Puṣpakavimāna to, 1524; Lakṣmaṇa as agent of, 55; —asks, to fight Rāvaṇa, 253–54; —carries out supporting role in consecration of, 58; —comforts, 38; laments for Lakṣmaṇa, 46, 56, 223–25, 811–15; —for Sītā, 7, 133–35; leads army across bridge, 156; lies wounded on a bed of arrows, 26, 214, 223–25; lives in Daṇḍaka Forest, 478–79; loses composure rarely, 47; —consciousness, 47, 358; lured away from ashram by golden deer, 26, 84–85; Mahodara advises Rāvaṇa against fighting, 280; —advises Rāvaṇa using arrows marked with name of, 280; makes no effort to refute Lakṣmaṇa's critique of dharma, 37, 56; Mālyavān convinced, no ordinary human but an avatāra of Viṣṇu, 50, 188, 713; manifests Lordship in brahmans, 460; matted locks of, 60, 478; māyā of, 101, 772, 778, 1260, 1262, 1388; model of ideal human, 3, 44; monkeys accompany, to Ayodhyā, 25, 471–74; —counsel, about Vibhīṣaṇa, 145–48; —prepared to die for, 237; —seek refuge with, 253, 291, 313; mortality of, 4, 36, 39–40, 51, 101, 107, 125, 323, 440, 442, 779, 885; mounted on Hanumān, 127, 129, 523–27; obeys Daśaratha, 1170; offers forgiveness and refuge to Rāvaṇa, 210, 747; —to consecrate Lakṣmaṇa as yuvarāja, 61, 493; orders Aṅgada to serve as emissary to Rāvaṇa, 200; —Hanumān to care for Lakṣmaṇa, 415; —Hanumān to tell Sītā of Rāvaṇa's death, 447, 1410; places family harmony over political power, 59; 113–14, 1497–98; —political over personal, 48;

Rāma (continued)
playground of, is Ayodhyā, 1454; points out sites to Sītā, 472–74; 1480–85; posts troops at gates of Laṅkā, 192; praises monkeys' deeds, 225; prepares for siege, 10, 127, 197; prey to conflicting emotions, 48–9, 66, 451–52, 454, 1422; propitiated by Sāgara, 154, 612; propitiates Sāgara, 81, 152; prostrated by false report of Sītā's death, 39, 55, 358, 361, 363, 1181; protects brahmans from demons, 465, 709; questions Vibhīṣaṇa about Kumbhakarṇa, 269; reaches Laṅkā, 198; rebukes Lakṣmaṇa for proposing the annihilation of the rākṣasas, 12, 351, 1157; —Sugrīva for unauthorized sortie, 68, 735; receives boons from Indra, 15, 466–67; 1465–67, 1511; —Puṣpakavimāna from Vibhīṣaṇa, 15, 82, 468, 1470–71; —reins of power from Bharata, 59–61, 486–94, 1525–51; as refuge of all the world, 81, 144, 150, 253, 269, 313, 392, 578, 596, 599, 603, 882, 928, 1049, 1256; refuses to bathe before Bharata, 468, 1528; refutes non-dharmic arguments, 38, 56; regards expedition to Laṅkā a failure, 46–47; reign of, shared with Bharata, 1526; remarks on Rāvaṇa's splendor, 252, 878–79; removes and breaks Rāvaṇa's javelin, 415, 1305; removes darts from monkeys, 261, 905; renunciant and selfless character of, 60; repudiates Sītā, 14, 49, 53, 454–56; resolves to ascend Mt. Suvela, 193, 725; restores golden age (Rāmarājya), 4, 493–94, 1547; resumes trappings of royalty, 6, 487–88, 1526–27; returns home in Puṣpakavimāna, 96, 471–74, 1480–89; —Puṣpakavimāna to Kubera, 486, 1473; —to Ayodhyā in Puṣpakavimāna, 471–72, 482, 1507; reunion of, with Bharata, 5, 41, 44, 61, 485–87, 1485; —, with Sītā, 15, 42, 47–48, 54, 451–63; revealed as Supreme Lord, 44, 458–61, 1444–55; —as Viṣṇu, 40–41, 84, 459–60, 713, 827, 830–31, 1061, 1262, 1389, 1400, 1444, 1461, 1549; revived by healing herbs, 332; sandals of, placed in position of honor, 60; saves Daśaratha from committing falsehood, 1460–61; seems near death, 214–15, 225, 227; sees Rāvaṇa strike Lakṣmaṇa with javelin, 46, 57, 414, 415; sends Aṅgada as emissary to warn Rāvaṇa, 10, 200–201, 744–49; —Hanumān as messenger to Bharata, 15, 25, 63, 476–77; —Hanumān to tell news of victory to Sītā, 14, 58–59, 63, 447; —Lakṣmaṇa to confront Indrajit, 27, 364–65; —Vibhīṣaṇa to battle Indrajit, 365; —Vibhīṣaṇa to fetch Sītā, 14, 451, 1413; severs Rāvaṇa's heads, 14, 435–36; Sītā rebukes, for his harsh treatment, 52–53, 456–57, 1437–39; —wheedles, to catch the golden deer, 51; slaughters rākṣasas, 13, 210, 335; spares Rāvaṇa, 11, 261, 904; strikes six rākṣasas, 211; strives to be unlike Daśaratha, 48; submits to Brahmā's weapon, 325–27; suffers in service of dharma, 51; Śuka describes to Rāvaṇa, 166–67; supported by dānavas, 420, 1321, 1325, 1328; as Supreme Lord or Spirit, 14, 40, 459–61, 1350, 1389; tells Rāvaṇa to return Sītā, 201, 747; —Sītā to turn to Bharata, 456; terrorizes the rākṣasas with twanging of bow, 335; thinks Lakṣmaṇa slain, 56–57, 417; —of himself as ordinary man, 15, 36, 39–40, 49, 459; thoughts of, analyzed by Cg, 500; —, toward Kaikeyī, 1170; threatens to take own life, 223; ultimatum of, to Rāvaṇa, 201; unable to refute Lakṣmaṇa, 39, 56; —to return to battle, 27, 55; unaware of true identity, 41, 49, 50, 459; understanding of own divine nature, 44; unequalled in valor according to Śārdūla, 172; unfit for combat until Indrajit slain, 36; unwavering adherence of, to rājadharma, 49; unwilling to transgress Brahmā's boons,

781, 783, 826; urged by Hanumān to accept Vibhīṣana, 586; urges Vibhīṣaṇa not to mourn Rāvaṇa, 1379; uses divine weapon-spells against Sāgara, 609; —against Atikāya, 321–22; uses Puṣpakavimāna, 15, 468, 470–71, 482, 484, 1474; vaporizes Rāvaṇa's body in Rāmopākhyāna, 1393, 1404; Vāyu exhorts, 825; —gives golden necklace to, 491, 1540; Vibhīṣaṇa advises to solicit the help of Samudra, 151; —lends Puṣpakavimāna to, 82, 468; Vidyujjihva creates simulacrum of severed head and bow of, 85; virtues of, beyond count according to Śārdūla, 172; as Viṣṇu, 188; vital glow of, 217, 222; vows destruction of Laṅkā, 158; —to destroy ocean and to kill all its creatures, 152; welcomed by Bharata and dowager queens, 485–86; willing to renounce kingship in favor of Bharata, 477; wounding of, denied by Cm, 102–3; wounds Indrajit, 351; wrath of, 45–46, 152–53

Rāma Jāmadagnya, 1500; pierces Mount Krauñca, 951

Rāmānuja (Crā), 81, 106, 993, passim; Nāgojibhaṭṭa cites, 499

Rāmasetu. See bridge; Nala; nalasetu

Rāmāvatāra, 3, 4, 34, 44, 50; Ātreya Āhobala on, 1449; end of, 1544; Govindarāja notes thirty-eighth year of, 529; Govindarāja on, 831, 895–96, 1307; Hanumān's significance to, 66; 1453; Kataka on, 748–49, 821, 895; Maheśvaratīrtha on, 715, 894–95, 1246, 1448, 1453; Nāgojibhaṭṭa on, 748–49, 821; occluded nature of, 84; purpose of, the destruction of Rāvaṇa, 895, 1304, 1307; Rāma as, 44, 51, 897; Rāma's awareness of his status as, 830; Satyatīrtha on, 506, 665, 1304; Śivasahāya on, 903, subversion of mission of, 665; Vālmīki's portrayal of, 39, 41; Varadarāja on, 894–95; Vibhīṣaṇa's awareness of, 596; Yuddhakāṇḍa completes mission of, 96. See also avatāra; Rāma

Rāmāyaṇa: arguments contrary to dharmic norms in, 37–39; benefits of hearing, 1549; chronology of (see chronology of the epic); commentators on (see commentators); divinity of Rāma in (see Rāma, divinity of), as first poem (ādikāvya), 1549; Hanumān's role in, 62, 65; humanity of Rāma in, 411; original, 96–97; and pacification of malicious spirits, 1549; as quest saga, 96; as secular, 50; as supplement to vedas, 1550; textual history of, 50; theological message of, 51; translation, conventions of, 109–112; translations of, 112–18; Vaiṣṇava theological frame for, 50. See also Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa

Rambha, 161, 163, 288, 634, 641, 726; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; maintains watch, 218

Rambhā, 572, 907

Rāmcaritmānas, 41, 46, 104; Brahmā revives monkeys in, 1465; chāyāsītā in, 1422; contradictions with Vālmīki in, 1406; fire ordeal of Sītā in, 1422, not focused on sequence of events, 1406; Sītā appears before Rāma unbathed in, 1424

Rāmopākhyāna, 527, 702, 751, 823, 825, 1016, 1158, 1260, 1393, 1404, 1406, 1424, 1465, 1477, 1486; appears to contradict Vālmīki, 612; used as a comparative source, 760

rasa: adbhuta, 25, 75; bhayānaka, 25; bibhatsā, 25; hāsya, 75; jugupsā, 25; polysemic nature of term, 615, 1032; as sentiments, 25

Rasātala, 137, 139, 183, 352, 597, 615

Raśmiketu, 139, 1213; fights Rāma, 206; Rāma kills, 208

Rāvaṇa, 18, 19, 26, 32, 70–75, passim; able to lift Mount Meru, 259; acknowledges own folly and bad policy, 12, 276, 953; advisers remind, of greatness, 8, 137–38, 555–60; ambivalent attitude toward, 74–75; Aṅgada as emissary to, 10, 210–12, 745–52;

Rāvaṇa (continued)
—foils attempt of, to capture him, 10, 202, 752; as anti-hero, 4; armor of, from Brahmā, 301, 388, 1245–46; assumes form of ascetic, 25; attempts to kill Sītā, 73, 388–90, 1246–53; begs Kumbhakarṇa for assistance, 36, 273, 276, 938–40, 952–54; boons of, 192, 200, 254, 340, 590, 596–97, 710, 723, 746, 779, 830, 885, 895, 930, 1060, 1133, 1267, 1269, 1320, 1481, 1494; —, from Brahmā, 15, 39, 42, 44, 101, —gained through asceticism, 1388; —, terms of, 895; —, women would know of, 1269; character of, 70–75; claims he and his troops have slain Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and all the monkeys, 26, 174–76, 671–75; compared to Brahmā, 272; —to lord of the asuras, 243; —to Rudra, 250, 252; —to Yama, 252; crushes the pride of Indra and Vaivasvata, 252; defeats dānavas, 137, 557; —serpents, 137, 556; —sons of Varuṇa, 137, 557; —yakṣas, 137; —Yama and his hosts, 137–38, 557–58; delights in harming and oppressing others, 192; discourses on three types of kings and counsel, 28, 135–36, 552–53; dispatches spies, 9, 156–57, 169, 626–27; enraged at Akampana's death, 242; expands body, 335, 1115; fights Gavaya, 63, 253; —Hanumān, 11, 63, 73, 254–55, 259; —Jyotimukha, 63, 253; —Kubera, 68, 137, 192, 721; —Lakṣmaṇa, 11, 63, 73, 257–59, 409, 412–14, 1300–1304; — Nīla, 63, 73, 255–57; —Rāma, 11, 63, 73–74, 260–61, 408–39, 1288–1383; —Ṛṣabha, 63, 253; —Sudaṃṣṭra, 63, 253; —Sugrīva, 11, 63, 73, 252–53; —Vibhīṣaṇa, 413, 1301; final duel of, with Rāma as standard for the heroic duel, 74; forces Mārīca to assume form of golden deer, 26; funeral of, 41, 444–45, 1401–4; furious at death of Prahasta, 73; garments of, red, 733; grief and anger of, at death of Prahasta, 249, 871; Hanumān as indispensable in the defeat of, 62, 328; —knocks unconscious, 64, 258, 897–98; —tells, to fear monkeys, 254, 885; has Sītā flown over battlefield, 53; heads of, grow back when severed, 14, 435–36, 1368–69; —, number of, 896, 914; inspects military encampments, 242; instructs Saramā to protect Sītā, 180, 689; invokes divine weapon-spell of Agni, 256; Kumbhakarṇa chides and lectures, on Nītiśāstra, 274–75; laments for Indrajit, 13, 73, 386–87; —Kumbhakarṇa, 12, 73, 299–301; lectures counselors on importance of sound counsel, 28; magical illusion of, 85, 137, 173, 181, 184, 411, 414, 427, 433, 442, 557, 670, 692, 734, 803, 807, 814, 932, 1183, 1297, 1359, 1392; —, used to lure Sītā, 201, 747; Mālyavān lectures, 9, 32–33, 50, 187; master of illusion, 173, 670; Maya gives daughter as wife to, 137; as menace, 24; mother and Aviddha advise, to release Sītā, 184; orders awakening of Kumbhakarṇa, 11, 34, 262–63, 908–12; —defenses, 189–90, 203; —ministers to capture and kill Aṅgada, 202, 751; —rākṣasīs to take Sītā to view battlefield, 87, 218–19, 794; —rākṣasīs to tell, that Sītā, Rāma, and Lakṣmaṇa are dead, 218; —Śuka and Sāraṇa to infiltrate monkey army, 157; —Vidyujjihva to create simulacra of Rāma's severed head and bow, 26, 52, 85, 173–74, 670; protests Brahmā's curse on Kumbhakarṇa, 271, 932–33; purified by Rāma's arrows, will attain realm of gods and seers once killed, 201, 746; rākṣasas prepared to die for, 237; Rāma attempts to thwart javelin of, 57–58, 414, 1303; —determined to kill, 192; —kills, 437–38, 1371–76; —knocks crown off head of, 74, 261, 904; —remarks on splendor of, 252; —spares, 11, 74,

261; rampages through the worlds, 186, 708; reborn as Śiśupāla, 749; rebukes charioteer and orders to return to field, 14, 427–29, 1336–41; —Kumbhakarṇa, 275–76, 952–53; —Mālyavān, 10, 188–89, 714; refuses to give up Sītā, 73, 171; rejects mother's and counselors' advice, 185; remembers Brahmā's words, 262; represented as having abducted women, 74; retreats to Laṅkā, 261; reviles Mālyavān, 188; —spies, 168–69; —Vibhīṣaṇa, 8, 31, 141–42, 572–75; Saramā eavesdrops on, 180, 184, 702; Śārdūla tells, impossible to spy on monkeys, 86, 170; self-pitying tone of, 73, 76, 953; sends forth Kumbhakarṇa, 282; —Nikumbha, Kumbha, and rākṣasas, 335; —Prahasta, 242; Sītā lectures, 51; sleepless for fear of Rāma and his forces, 215, 789; sports with Mandodarī in mountains and gardens of the gods, 443; steals Puṣpakavimāna from Kubera, 440, 468, 555, 1384, 1470–71; Śuka and Sāraṇa deliver Rāma's message to, 158; Supārśva dissuades, from killing Sītā, 13, 73, 390, 1251–52; surveys damage to city wrought by Hanumān, 28, 135, 549–50; —monkey army, 159, 168; thinks his austerities worthless, 262; —Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed by Indrajit, 217–18, 793; as "thorn in the side of the world," 28; transforms self into mendicant, 85; tries to convince Sītā that Rāma has been slain, 26, 52–53; Triśiras exhorts, 301, 1023–24; unable to lift Lakṣmaṇa, 51, 64, 259, 895–96; uses sorcery and psychological torture against Sītā, 52, 173–76; utters harsh words about false friends and the nature of kinsmen, 141–42, 573–74; Vibhīṣaṇa abandons, 8, 141–43, 563–66; —counsels, to return Sītā, 8, 30, 140–41; —describes, to Rāma, 251–52, 878–79; —performs funeral rites for, 14, 444–45, 1399–1404; weapons of, invested with power of māyā, 435, 1359; —, given by Brahmā, 258, 301, 1023; wounds Lakṣmaṇa, 11, 258–29, 413–14, 893–94, 1302–4; wreaks havoc among the monkey troops, 73; younger brother of Kubera, 158, 174, 315, 390, 395, 426, 1053, 1100, 1252, 1266

Rāvaṇi. See Indrajit

red color: as inauspicious, 188, 712; of Atikāya's garland, 314, 1052; of eyes, as sign of rage, 45, 152, 202, 213, 236, 254–55, 272, 339, 352, 367, 374, 388, 397, 409, 412, 422, 423, 427, 430, 741, 751, 848, 937, 1007–8, 1191, 1244, 1283, 1285, 1299, 1326, 1351; of garlands on Mahāpārśva's mace, 312, 1046; of garments of sacrificial victim, 1456; of Indrajit's garments, 324, 349, 1076; of Mars, 341, 624; of rākṣasīs' turbans, 348, 1151; of Rāvaṇa's garments, 733; of Sāgara's garments, 154, 611; of serpents, 381, 1223; of Sītā's garment, 461, 1456; of wedding dress, 1456; of white doves' feet, 188, 712 refuge, 260, 270, 590, 593, 260, 591–96, 601, 900; as duty, 149; monkeys seek, with Rāma, 253, 291, 313, 392, 561; must accept one seeking, 1420; must not slay one seeking, 251; rākṣasas have no, 397, 1269; Rāma as, of all beings, 81, 144, 150, 253, 313, 392, 460, 578, 928, 1049, 1256, 1420, 1449; Rāma seeks, 603; Rāma's vow of providing, 581; Rāvaṇa seeks, with Rāma, 201, 744, 747, 971; Rāvaṇa renounces, 871; seeking, with a bird makes commentators uncomfortable, 591; —, with Rāma, 81, 144, 150, 748, 882, 928, 1256; Sītā equal to Rāma in providing, 1420; —seeks, with Brahmā, 698; Śrīvaiṣṇava doctrine of, 575, 586, 588, 591–96, 665, 747, 882; there is no, for someone who opposes elders, 1195; Vibhīṣaṇa seeks, with Rāma, 144–50, 578–79, 586, 591–96, 599–600, 747 religious practice: two types of, 964 repetition: commentators try to eliminate or justify, 497, 498, 508, 534, 537, 549, 577, 618, 631, 658, 660, 666, 669, 674, 683–84, 703, 725, 732, 738, 744, 750, 761, 768, 787, 806, 819, 829–31, 833, 861, 874, 885, 889, 893, 897, 917, 928, 969, 977, 993, 998, 1069–70, 1091, 1094, 1101, 1110, 1114, 1119, 1144, 1188–89, 1211, 1241, 1246, 1344, 1346, 1349, 1482, 1492, 1509, 1536, 1544

Ṛgveda: anugamana in, 686; Aśvins in, 1445; derivation of Indra's name in Sāyaṇa's commentary on, 1352; enmity between Indra and Śambara in, 1024, 1133; as exhalation of Viṣṇu, 1454; gāyatrīmantra of, mapped onto Rāmāyaṇa, 1159 (see also gayatrīmantra); puruṣasūkta of, 1451–52; Pūṣan in, 1136; Rudra in, 1445; Savitṛ in, 1026; story of Bala in, 1204; story of Indra and Namuci in, 850; story of Vṛtra in, 672, 1204; the term svarbhānu in, 1321; the term vibhītaka in, 1075 rhetorical devices/techniques: 24, 92, 543, 574, 594, 657, 676, 703, 909, 960 rhetorical figures, 543, 557, 947, 1364, 1373, 1413, 1427, 1432, 1446, 1528, 1532, 1535. See also poetic figures rhetorical flaw, 660 rhetorical questions, 501, 657, 691, 703, 804–5, 958, 961, 1161, 1172, 1472, 1503 righteousness. See dharma rivers: of blood, 21–22, 207, 210, 236, 247, 263, 391; Mallinātha on names of, 545; as metaphor for battlefield, 22, 92, 247, 866–67; seven heavenly, 611 rivers, proper names of: Betwa, 637; Chembal, 637; Citraśilā, 1101; Ganges, 164–65, 403, 477, 482, 612, 637, 644, 647, 1281, 1488, 1490, 1495, 1512; Godāvarī, 473, 480, 1470; Gomatī, 160, 477, 484, 1500; Indus, 544, 612, 637; Jambū, 611, 643; Kāverī, 534; Kokca River, 1152; Narmadā, 163, 544, 640; Parṇāśā, 161, 637–38; Śālmalī as name of river in Pātāla, 558; Sarayū, 61, 1488, 1492; Śiprā, 637; Vālukinī, 447, 484, 1500, 1518; Varūthi, 1500; Yamunā, 5, 474, 477, 1488, 1490
ṛkṣa. See ape; bear
Ṛkṣarajas, 996; Dutt renders as, "king of bears," 996; Sugrīva as son of, 171, 291, 666, 723, 996; transformed into apsaras, 996
Ṛkṣavant mountains, 163
Rohiṇī, 389, 443, 1390; beloved of the moon, 421, 1249, 1390; compared with Sītā, 447, 480, 1411; exemplar of wifely devotion, 1390; fourth lunar mansion, 1248–49, 1411; occluded, 390, 624, 1248–49, 1251, 1325, 1411, 1507; presided over by Prajāpati, 421
Roussel, 114–17, passim; influenced by Gorresio, 115–17, 1338, 1383, 1385, 1386; Pagani follows (see Pagani); Shastri follows (see Shastri) royal consecration ceremony. See consecration royalty, insignia of, 1275, 1428; white umbrella as, 878, 1275, 1517, 1531; yak-tail fly whisks as, 1275
Ṛṣabha, 199; fights Mahāpārśva, 312; —Rāvaṇa, 63, 253; kills Mahāpārśva, 313; Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 289; maintains watch, 218; Rāma orders, to find Indrajit, 212; Rāvaṇa pierces, with arrows, 253; returns to battlefield, 288; rushes Kumbhakarṇa, 289; seeks refuge with Rāma, 253; uses Mahāpārśva's sword, 312
Ṛṣabha, Mount, 329, 1101; flanks Mount Meru, 1091; located in Himalayas, 824; made of gold, 329, 1101–2; mountain of healing herbs located between, and Mount Kailāsa, 329, 1091, 1096, 1314

Ṛṣabhaskandha, 212
Ṛṣyamūka, Mount, 395, 473, 481, 1485–86
Rudra, 873, 1071, 1293, 1458, 1463; Akampana resembles, 249; battlefield resembles playground of, 393, 1262; curses on, by Brahmā, 1136; dark god, 930; divine weapon-spell of, 294, 381, 410, 1005, 1062, 1149, 1295, 1298–99; equal to the fire at the end of time (kālāgni), 1021; four-faced, 559, 1113; Indrajit uses weapon-spell of, 381; Narāntaka resembles, 251; place where, discharges arrows, 331, 1099; rākṣasa women believe Rāma is, 396; Rāma equal to, 459; —invokes divine weapon-skill spell of, 294, 410; Rāvaṇa compared to, 335. 387; in Ṛgveda 1445; skill at archery of, 1099; surrounded by malignant spirits (bhūtas), 250, 252, 873, 878, 879; three-eyed, 1009; vanquishes Sūrya, 541, 1136; wielder of the Pināka, 1262; wrath of, 335, 387, 1115. See also Śiva Rudras: Rāma eighth among the Rudras, 459, 1445 sacrifice, 19, 79, 709; agnihotra, 187, 685, 709, 1252, 1343, 1347, 1401–2; agniṣṭoma, 178, 684, 799; aśvamedha (Horse Sacrifice), 559; —, in Balākāṇḍa, 1459; —, of Daśaratha, 1459; —Maheśvara tells Rāma to perform, 463; —of Rāma, 335, 493, 799, 1546–47; Indra performs, 359, 1176; of Indrajit, interrupted, 367; Indrajit performs, 323–24, 348–49, 356–57, 362–63, 788, 1167–68, 1186–87; —sacrifices black goat in, 324, 349, 1075, 1076, 1404; invincibility of Indrajit if he completes, 362, 364; jyotiṣṭoma, 684; Pagani interprets battle as, 766; pauṇḍarīka, 493, 1546; pitṛmedha as sacrifice to ancestors, 1403; putreṣṭi, 1526; rākṣasas perform, before battle, 243; Rāma equated with, 460; Rāvaṇa performs, at Nikumbhilā, 1320; soma, 684, 1546; vājapeya, 493, 1546; Vibhīṣaṇa performs agnihotra, for Rāvaṇa, 1401–2; woman can appear in public during, 453

Sagara: causes ocean to be dug, 151; sons of, excavate the earth, 600
Sāgara, 161, 476, 602–4, 606, 608–17, 1482–84; advises Rāma, as to how to cross, 154–55; black as color of complexion of, 611; child of Sagara, 600; consents to bridge, 154; described, 154, 611–12; does not manifest self, 45; fathomless nature of, 154; forbids passage of Rāma to Laṅkā, 45; garments of, red, 154, 611; lapis as color of complexion of, 611; obdurate, 152; Rāma fires arrows at, 153; —propitiates, for three days, 152; —says, is ignoble, 152; —worships, 152; Rāma's encounter with, different in Rāmopākhyāna, 612; rises from the sea, 154. See also ocean; Samudra
Sahya mountains, 129–31, 161, 634; Dey places north of Kāverī, 534; Law on, 526; monkeys cross, 537; —rest on, 531; as northern portion of the Western Ghats, 526; one of seven mountain ranges of Bhāratadvīpa, 526; as southern portion of Western Ghats, 534
Sāketa, 1459–60, 1551
Śakra (Indra), 135, 164, 167, 200, 213, 250, 263, 272, 277, 290, 307, 309, 312–13, 374, 393, 473, 482, 486, 549, 557, 642, 912, 1026, 1303, 1487, 1525; abode of, 331; Aṅgada as grandson of, 172; bow of, 251, 875, 1127; cannot see Indrajit, 213; creatures seek refuge with, 270, 272; delighted at killing of Indrajit, 383; divine weapon-spell of, 224; fights Śambara, 340, 1133; flagstaff of, 341; has Vāyu give Rāma a pearl necklace, 491, 1540; Indrajit as foe of, 266, 296, 325, 384–86, 440, 783, 1010, 1235, 1262; Indrajit defeats, 214; Jāmbavān renders service to, 163;

Śakra (Indra) (continued)
Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 290; as Kumbhakarṇa's foe, 266; Mātāli charioteer of, 446; petitions Brahmā on behalf of creatures, 270; protects creatures against Kumbhakarṇa, 270; rescues Śrī, 227, 822; severs heads of Tvaṣṭṛ's son, 312, 1044; steeds of, 382, 1229; strength of Kumbhakarṇa equal to that of, 263; thunderbolt of, 253; Viṣṇu, younger brother of, 384. See also Indra; Vāsava śakti. See javelin sāla tree, 165, 195, 204, 285, 297, 477, 484, 576, 618, 1518; Aṅgada fights Kumbha with, 338; arrows of Rāma pierce, 297, 1011, 1369; Dvivida uses, as weapon, 208; Hanumān kills rākṣasas with, 356, 378, 1215; Nīla kills Prahasta's horses with, 248; Sugrīva fights Mahodara with, 404; used to build bridge, 90, 155; as a weapon, 143, 756; white flowers of, 618. See also in the Glossary of Flora and Fauna śalabha: as locust, 742; as mythical beast, 742–43 śālmali tree, 137, 535, 536, 557–58; red flowers of, 92, 558, 376, 558, 733–34, 1210. See also in the Glossary of Flora and Fauna
Sālveya mountains, 161
saṃdhānī, "the joiner of limbs," 329, 1091, 1092
Saṃhrādin, 279, 1213
saṃjīvakaraṇī. See mṛtasaṃjīvani saṃjīvanī. See mṛtasaṃjīvani
Saṃkarṣana. See Balarāma
Sāṃkhya: guṇa theory of, 707, 1196, 1389; prakṛti in, 1389
Saṃkocana, Mount, 160, 634
Saṃnādana: fights Śakra, 163, 642
Sampāti (I) (vānara), 65, 228, 762, 763, 815, 823, 1507; fights Prajaṅgha, 206–7, 762; Rāma praises deeds of, 225; Suṣeṇa sends, for healing herbs, 65
Sampāti (II) (one of Vibhīṣaṇa's counselors), 191, 576, 719, 723–24, 762
Sampāti (III) (vulture), 481, 815, 1510
Samudra, 45, 81, 151, 604, 611, 615, 837, 1095, 1484; as a large number, 656, 742; manifests himself, 154; Rāma angry at, 152; Rāma must solicit, 151; refuses to manifest himself, 152; Śivasahāya disturbed by Rāma taking refuge with, 600. See also ocean; Sāgara sāmudrikaśāstra, 53; bodily signs in, 219–220, 798–803; —, closely set teeth, 220; —, deep navel with sloping sides, 220; —, eyebrows not meeting, 220, 801; —, faint smile, 220; —, fine body hair, 220; —, fine, dark, and even hair, 220; —, finely colored hands and feet without gaps, 220; —, full, closely set breasts, 220; —, lotus marks, 220, 800; —, nicely developed temples, eyes, hands, feet, ankles, and thighs, 220, 802; —, radiant complexion, 220; —, round and glossy nails, 220, 802; —, smooth and tapered legs, 220, 801; —, standing on all twelve points of feet, 220; —, sunken nipples, 220; —, well-proportioned fingers and toes, 220, 802; —, whole barleycorn sign on thumb, 220, 803
Samunnata, 246–47, 858, 865
Śaṅkara, 331, 1100, 1392. See Śiva
Śaṅkha (I): in Ādityahṛdaya, 1342, 1345
śaṅkha (II) (conch), 917
Śaṅkha (III) (snake), 137, 556 saptaparṇa tree, 90, 155, 207
Śarabha (I) (vānara), 161, 190, 191, 225, 585, 636, 657, 726, 789, 794, 1079, 1522; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; exhorts Rāma to send a spy, 145; fights Atikāya, 316; Indrajit strikes down, 327; Kumbhakarṇa strikes, 289; launches assault, 379; maintains watch, 218; patrols all sides, 205; Rāma orders, to find Indrajit, 212; —praises deeds of, 225; reports to

Vibhīṣaṇa, 191; returns to battlefield, 288; rushes Kumbhakarṇa, 289; seizes mountain peaks, 271; son of Vaivasvata, 172; struck down in battle, 327
Śarabha (II) (one of Vibhīṣaṇa's counselors), 191, 576, 584, 719, 723–24
śarabha (III) (a mythical, eight-legged beast), 742–43
Saramā, 86–88, 180–85; able to fly, 694; caresses Sītā, 701; compassion of, for Sītā, 690; confidant and agent of Rāvaṇa, 691; counterpart to Vibhīṣaṇa, 87; describes Rāvaṇa's preparations for war, 182–83; devoted to Sītā, 689; friend of Sītā, 180; Govindarāja's comments on status of, as servant, 692; informs Sītā she is victim of illusion, 87, 181; as metaphor for human sinner, 87; not mentioned in Sundarakāṇḍa, 87; places Sītā's welfare above her own, 692; Rāvaṇa deputes, to attend Sītā, 87, 689; reassures Sītā, 52, 87, 180–82, 689; spies for Sītā, 52, 87, 180, 183–84; vows to guard Sītā, 690; wife of Vibhīṣaṇa, 689
Sāraṇa, 43, 71, 82, 84–86, 156–169, 626–28, 630–31, 647, 651–52, 658, 660, 663–64, 720, 771–72; assigned to northern gate, 190, 717–18; enumerates monkeys, 43, 85–86, 159–65; infiltrates monkey army, 157; a rākṣasa spy, 647; Rāma orders, to return with message for Rāvaṇa, 158; Rāma releases, unharmed, 86, 158; Rāma strikes, 211; Rāvana orders, to spy, 156–57; Rāvaṇa rebukes, 168–69; reports to Rāvaṇa about Rāma and monkey army, 86, 158–59; Vibhīṣaṇa recognizes, 86, 157–58 śarapatra grass, weapons as, 324, 349, 1075–76
Sarasvatī River, 460, 908–9, 932
Sarayū River, 61, 1488, 1492
Śārdūla, 84–86, 170–73, 602, 662–68; chief of spies, 662; describes capture and beating, 170–71, 665; enumerates monkeys, 171–73; fails miserably, 665; Rāma releases, 171; special treatment of, 662. See also Sāraṇa; Śuka śārikas. See bird
Sārvabhauma, 127, 312, 522, 1046
Śatabali (v.l. Śatabalin), 128, 165, 218, 647, 727, 757; blocks southern gate, 204 śataghnī. See hundred-slayers satī, 1250, 1251, 1458. See also anugamana
Śatrughna, 735, 1311, 1468, 1512–13, 1515–16, 1528, 1535, 1537–38; assists in consecration, 491; Bharata instructs, to arrange welcome party for Rāma, 482–83; holds the umbrella for Rāma, 489, 491; orders highway built from Ayodhyā to Nandigrāma, 483; Rāma dreads telling, of Lakṣmaṇa's death, 223; sees to the arrangements for Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and guests, 488, 490, 1528–29; welcomes Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and Sītā, 485
Satyatīrtha (Cs), 106–7 passim; critical of Maheśvaratīrtha, 106–7, 820–21, 534, 937–38, 982–83, 1182, 1217, 1241, 1270, 1294, 1320, 1365–66; critiques Nāgojibhaṭṭa, 106–7, 534, 821, 982–83, 1320, 1365; "Having listened to the entire Rāmāyaṇa," favorite maxim of, 106–7, 1182, 1366; identifies sandalwood forest as Malaya mountains, 633; idiosyncrasy and ingenuity of, 106, 497, 541, 595–96, 605, 628, 651, 682, 687–88, 691, 704–5, 789, 819, 861, 962, 1020, 1140, 1296; notes that Rāma's encounter with Sāgara differs in Rāmopākhyāna, 612; on Rāmāvatāra, 506, 665, 1304; scoffs at parable of dove, 591; on Sītā appearing before Rāma in the Rāmopākhyāna, 1424; theological readings of, 739, 1386; on the three causes of Rāvaṇa's death, 902, 1365. See also commentators
Saumitri. See Lakṣmaṇa
sauvarṇakaraṇḍī, restorer of a golden glow, 329, 418, 1091–92, 1314 scent-elephants (gandhahastin). See elephants, scent scribal error, 498, 804, 997, 1508, 1516 sea. See ocean; Sāgara; Samudra seers, 164, 187, 201, 259, 306, 318, 379, 387, 393, 415, 421, 435, 440, 442, 460, 464–65, 482, 489, 609, 645, 707, 746, 1218, 1307; anoint Rāma with holy water, 156; battle watched by great, and *vidyādhara*s, 306; brahman-, 270, 353, 609, 1523; cannot free Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 215; cheer, 161, 306, 383, 898; —at death of Indrajit, 383; —at death of Kumbhakarṇa, 300; —when Hanumān strikes Rāvaṇa, 255; desire Rāma's victory, 186; divine-, 299, 464, 609, 1017, 1449, 1460, 1463; —, possess knowledge of avatāra, 1449; frightened at battle between Indrajit and Lakṣmaṇa, 379; gather to watch building of bridge, 155; Govindarāja on distinction between great, and divine great, 1449; great-, 156, 164, 192, 201, 299, 306, 318, 370, 379, 383, 430, 435, 460, 645, 1017, 1232, 1242, 1402, 1404, 1449; —call Rāma fit for refuge, 460, 1449; Great Seers (constellation) shining of as auspicious omen, 129, 529; Himalaya frequented by gods and seers, 331; Rāvaṇa abducts wives and daughters of, 709; Rāvaṇa, enemy of, 192, 200, 202, 255, 370, 442, 726; —will gain realm of, 201; rejoice at Rāvaṇa's humiliation, 261; royal-, 178, 201, 683; Seven, 529–30; sun beyond the reach of, 166; watch battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, 422, 430; watch over Lakṣmaṇa in battle, 381; words of, never false, 907 sentiments. See, rasas serpent(s), 32–33, 141, 183, 187, 190, 232, 250, 253, 261, 279, 295, 297, 307–8, 317–20, 330, 337, 374, 381, 414–15, 422, 433, 436, passim; banners, 244; believed to carry luminous gems in their heads, 541; confluence of Ganges and Yamunā abode of, 477; descendants of Kadrū, 229, 829; emit fire from mouths and eyes, 608; enmity of, Garuḍa with, 262, 290, 301, 303, 824, 826, 1096, 1307; fear Garuḍa, 826; five-headed, 410–11, 1296–97; flee from Garuḍa, 10, 46, 50, 228–29, 231, 232, 776, 864; glance of, venomous, 415, 1306–7; great, 45, 89, 90, 121, 132, 137, 152–54, 190, 200, 202, 212, 223, 229, 261–62, 265, 269, 288, 290, 293, 296, 299, 301, 347, 381, 422, 435–36, 440; hissing of, 23, 214, 223, 232, 263, 307, 372, 374, 410–11, 437, 787, 810, 834, 842; jump into ocean, 228; Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 269; —hisses like, 263; labored breathing like hissing of, 214; Malaya mountains abode of, 825–26; as military mounts, 979; monkeys compared to, 288; names of, Jaṭin, 556; —, Śaṅkha, 556; —, Takṣaka, 556; —Vāsuki, 232, 421; —, Vāsuki as churning rope, 283, 556, 834, 977, 1244, 1324; Rāvaṇa compared to, 261; Rāvaṇa invulnerable to, 262; red color of, 381, 1223; roam the heavens, 543; Śeṣa (see Śeṣa); three-headed cobras, 350, 1154; types of, 825–26; 1297, 1307 serpent weapon(s): 23; Garuḍa frees Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa from, 228–29; of Indrajit, 46, 50, 56, 65, 78, 82, 87, 100, 212, 228–29, 232, 420–21, 775, 778–79, 820, 828, 829, 1194, 1206, 1228, 1324, 1452, 1486; Indrajit binds Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with, 213–24 servant(s): Bharata's gift to Hanumān of sixteen maidens as, 1503; description of woman who will become, 801; with faces of animals, 252; Govindarāja's comments on Saramā's status as, 692; kiṃkaras as, 983, 1334; to be praised at the end of assignments, 497; Sītā cautions Hanumān against anger toward, 449–50, 1418; types of, 121, 498–99; of Vaivasvata, 331, 1099, 1197, 1334; willing to sacrifice their lives when honored, 856; of Yama, 285, 558, 883

Śeṣa (cosmic serpent), 547, 1452–53; Lakṣmaṇa as incarnation of, 546–47, 606, 883, 1305, 1545; Viṣṇu rests on, 460, 547, 1452 setubandha, 122, 506, 743, 789, 1361; derivation of setu, 1482. See also bridge sexuality: commentators on, 545; of Hanumān, 1503
Shastri, Hari Prasad, 113–16, passim; English translations of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, 115–16; follows Roussel, 115–16, 504, 510, 513, 579, 607, 622, 633, 683, 708, 752, 754, 777, 779, 785, 793, 807–8, 822, 836, 848, 850, 857, 869, 876, 888, 913, 921, 925, 930–31, 935, 937, 940, 947, 950, 967, 976, 979, 985–87, 994, 1000–1001, 1006, 1010–11, 1017, 1032, 1042, 1044–45, 1053, 1057, 1060, 1066, 1072, 1082, 1087, 1101, 1107, 1112, 1118, 1124, 1128, 1199, 1212, 1214, 1222, 1225, 1238, 1253, 1256–57, 1262, 1266, 1275, 1278, 1293, 1301, 1308, 1319, 1321–22, 1326, 1333, 1340, 1354, 1356, 1357, 1368, 1372, 1374, 1386, 1398, 1401–4, 1425, 1436, 1462, 1472, 1501, 1506, 1511, 1527, 1529, 1531, 1533, 1541 ships, 225, 513; image of foundering of, popular with epic poets, 817 Siṃhikā: a rākṣasī of the deep, 540, 1024 sin (evil), 149, 502, 565, 1233, 1346, 1448, 1483; of brahmahatyā, 1176; cessation of, through practice of dharma, 965; Indra without, 1531; man freed from, when listening to Rāmāyaṇa, 1549; no one without, 1419; of omission, 965; practiced by Vaiṣṇava devotees becomes dharma, 966; as product of abduction, 531; purification of, 749; Rāma without, 565, 681; sinner reaps, 1391; Sītā without, 461, 1456–47; taking own life as, 499 sinner(s) (evildoers), 152, 914, 965, 1173; descend into hell, 274; durātman as meaning compassionate toward, 1146; merciful treatment of, 1419–20; obtain salvation through devotion to Lord, 87; perish through force of unrighteousness, 359, 942; Rāvaṇa as, 891; role of avatāra to defeat, 831; Śivasahāya on, 1162
Śisupāla: as exemplar of dveṣabhakti, 1400–1401, 1446–47; Kṛṣṇa (or Viṣṇu) kills, 1447; Rāvaṇa reborn as, 749
Sītā (Jānakī, Maithilī,Vaidehī), 44, 51–55; abduction of, 30, 56, 94, 100, 129, 131, 133, 140, 144, 149, 167, 200, 267, 394, 425, 473, 476, 528, 531, 539, 545–46, 560, 565–66, 569–70, 584, 591, 602–3, 697, 716, 726, 735, 783, 844, 870, 879, 892, 900, 902, 911, 942, 966, 974, 1182, 1265, 1304, 1333, 1380, 1385, 1390, 1393, 1431, 1443, 1456, 1493, 1507; abduction, chronology of—, 1490; adornment of, 1423; affection of Trijaṭā for, 808; age of, 683; anger of Lakṣmaṇa at repudiation of, 1440; apparent murder of, 55, 357–58, 361; appearance of, 1423; argues refined people do not requite evil with evil, 55, 450, 1419; asks Rāma to catch golden deer in Araṇyakāṇḍa, 51; —Saramā to spy on Rāvaṇa, 183–84; assumes Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are dead, 219; attributes own suffering to karmic retribution, 55; avoids gaze of males, 1430; barkcloth garments of, 677; birth of, 1439; blames herself for Rāma's apparent death, 680, 685; bodily signs of, 219–221, 798–803; born for destruction of rākṣasas, 396; calls upon gods to testify to her chastity, 1441; commentators on emotions of, at reunion with Rāma, 1430;

Sītā (Jānakī, Maithilī, Vaidehī) (continued)
—on gifting of necklace of, 1542; —on Rāma's emotions at reunion with, 1425; —on Saramā as an agent of Rāvaṇa and confidante of, 691–93; compassion of Saramā for, 690; contemplates hanging herself, 500; control of, over body, 457; conversations between Hanumān and, in Sundarakāṇḍa, 1422; critiques Rāma's attempt to persuade her to stay in Ayodhyā, 51; —tenets of sāmudrikaśāstra, 53, 219–21, 798–803; criticizes scholars, 53, 179, 219–21, 679–80, 798–803; curses Mantharā, 390; Daśaratha instructs, to obey Rāma, 465–66; declines Saramā's offer to serve as messenger, 700; description of, 134, 219–21; despair of, 9, 10, 26, 456; devotion of, for Rāma, 389, 457, 462; discovery of, preserves Raghus from unrighteousness, 121; emotions of, 51–52, 453; fails to recognize Hanumān, 1412; as faithful wife, 456–57, 1413; fears Rāvaṇa has slain Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 389; fire ordeal (agniparīkṣā) of, 49, 54, 103–4, 456–62, 890, 1422, 1429, 1431, 1436–55; —in Kūrma Purāṇa, 104, 1422; —in Rāmcaritmānas, 1422; forbids slaughter of rākṣasīs, 14, 449–50, 1418–20; forceful speeches of, 51; fortunate, 220; garments of, red, 461, 1456; Garuḍa assures Rāma he will recover, 230; gives Hanumān garments and necklace, 64, 492; Govindarāja on compassion and tolerance of, 1420; —on equality of, with Rāma in virtues, 1420; —on lamentation of, 687; grief of, for Kausalyā, 221; —, somewhat abated, 497; Hanumān asks permission of, to kill rākṣasīs, 54, 449; —finds, 62, 185; —reports, as eager to see Rāma, 48; —reports Rāvaṇa's slaying and Rāma's wellbeing to, 447–48; —reports, as slain to Rāma, 27, 36, 47, 357–58; —urges Rāma to see, 451; hopes Trijaṭā's words are true, 222; illusory form of, described, 353; impugns Lakṣmaṇa's motives, 51; as independent, 51; Indrajit creates and destroys a simulacrum of, 27, 47, 36, 78, 85, 352–54, 1159–64, 1465; —seizes illusory form of, by the head, 353; invisibility of, 1430; jewelry of, S. Goldman on, 795, 1160, 1423; joy of, 448; as Kālarātri, 680; Lakṣmaṇa vows to avenge, 37; lament of, 52–54, 85, 176–79, 219–21, 389–90, 684, 686–87, 689, 806; lament of Rāma at loss of, 133–35, 545; lineage of, 457, 683, 1438–39; looks to Rāma for permission to give necklace to Hanumān, 492; magical illusion, as victim of, 87, 181; Maheśvaratīrtha sees, as aware of Vidyujjihva's illusion, 689; —sees lament of, as feigned, 689; Mandodarī praises, 445, 1390; may be rebuking Rāma for having abandoned his lineage on earth, 683; māyāsītā, 104, 1422, 1443, 1456; mother of, the earth goddess, 457, 56, 1390, 1439; mother of, as the earth goddess or Janaka's wife, 805; Nāgojibaṭṭa sees, as feigning lamentation as sign of human nature, 689; Nāgojibaṭṭa and Kataka believe suffering of, caused by past karma, 549; name of, 457, 1438–39; orders Lakṣmaṇa to build pyre, 54, 457; political instincts of, 52; power of chastity of, 546; Prahasta concludes, should be returned, 243; praises Hanumān, 449, 1415; Pṛthivī takes back, 1439; purity of, 461, 1439; rākṣasīs abuse, 690, 794, 1416, 1493; —guard, 144, 174, 184, 218–19, 222, 389, 461, 577, 670, 701, 794; —predict, will destroy rākṣasas, 396; —show, battlefield from Puṣpakavimāna, 218–22, 795–96; Rāma argues that chastity of, needs to be publicly proven, 48–49, 462, 1457; —asks Rāvaṇa to return, 201; — claims no interest in battle, kingship, or, 46,

223, 811; —dreads telling, of death of Lakṣmaṇa, 223; —fails to comprehend Vibhīṣaṇa's assurances that, is not dead, 39; —gives necklace to, 492; —instructed by Agni to accept, 461–62, 1456–57; —orders Hanumān to tell, of Rāvaṇa's death, 46, 347, 1410; —orders Vibhīṣaṇa to bring, bathed and ornamented, 451; —repudiates, 14, 49, 53, 454–56; —shows, sites of his adventures, 472–74; Rāma's displeasure with, 453–56; — modes of address to, 1431; —suspicions regarding conduct of, 455–56; Rāvaṇa attempts to kill, 73, 388–89; —as devotee of, 671; —instructs Saramā to protect, 87, 180, 689; —orders Trijaṭā to show battlefield to, 53, 87, 218; —presents illusory head of Rāma to, 173–74; —sets deadline for submission of, 697; —tells, Prahasta severed Rāma's head, 52, 174–75; rebukes Rāma, for his harsh treatment, 52–53, 456–57, 1437–39; —Rāvaṇa, 670; recites ancient verse on not requiting evil with evil, 450, 1419; refuses Hanumān permission to kill rākṣasīs, 54, 88, 449–50; regrets not heeding Hanumān's advice to return with him, 389; rendered with great skill by Vālmīki, 51; reply of, reported to Rāma by Hanumān, 1421; response of, as humane and modernist, 54; returns to Laṅkā with Rāma in Puṣpakavimāna, 222, 809; reunion of Rāma with, 42, 47–48, 54, 451–63; reviles Kaikeyī, 176–77, 676–67; Rohiṇī, compared with, 447, 480, 1411; rules of decorum prevent Vibhīṣaṇa from addressing, 1423; Saramā describes Rāvaṇa's preparations for war to, 182–83; —devoted to, 689; —informs, she is victim of illusion, 87, 181; —places welfare of, above her own, 692; —reassures, 52, 87, 180–82, 689; —spies for, 52, 87, 180, 183–84, 700; —vows to guard, 690; Satyatīrtha on, appearing before Rāma in the Rāmopākhyāna, 1424; seclusion of, 362; shame of, 453, 456; spies Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa unconscious on a bed of arrows, 219; Śrī compared to, 134, 184, 189, 547, 702, 716, 1390; —incarnate, 451, 1421; suffering of, 1443; Supārśva dissuades Rāvaṇa from killing, 390; surrounded by rākṣasīs, 174; terrified at sight of Rāvaṇa, 389; thinks Lakṣmaṇa will die of a broken heart, 178–79; Trijaṭā assures, that Rāma is still alive, 221–22, 806–9; —brings, back to Laṅkā, 222, 809; —consoles, 10, 27, 88, 221–22, 794; —shows, battlefield from Puṣpakavimāna, 218–19, 794, 1486; truth-act of, 456–58; Vibhīṣaṇa brings, to Rāma, 453, 1413; —denies murder of, 27, 47, 361–62; —protects, from gaze of unrelated males, 1426; —tells Rāvaṇa to give, back to Rāma, 141; Vibhīṣaṇa's wives instruct, 451; wants to see Rāma, 450; —to see Rāma without bathing, 452; wheedles Rāma to catch golden deer, 51; as wife of heroic king, 220; wishes to follow Rāma in death, 179, 461, 671, 686–87, 1456 (see also anugamana; satī); women wash hair of, and adorn, 452

Śiva, 260, 317, 360, 522, 603, 722, 762, 834, 873, 900, 930, 983, 1009, 1027, 1050, 1101, 1342–43, 1345, 1347, 1444, 1459, 1483; Andhaka fights, 206, 762; as architect of Puṣpakavimāṇa, 1518; as "auspicious," 1326; Bhava as common epithet of, 1113; as bull-bannered, 458, 1268; destroyer of Tripura, 396, 1268; divine weapon-spell of, 393, 1062; epithets of, 1443, 1444, 1458; gods propitiate, 396; grants gods boon that woman will be born to destroy rākṣasas, 396; incinerates body of Kāma, 1391; instructs Rāma to worship father, 463, 476; as Mahādeva, 1460, 1484, 1497; Maheśvara as epithet of, 1458; Paśupati as epithet of, 1187; pays homage to Rāma, 458; playground of, 1262; praises Rāma, 463; propitiated by the gods, 396; retinue of, spirits, 873, 878–79; Rudra as epithet of, 1445; tāmasic nature of, 873; three-eyed, 393, 458, 1262, 1443; unable to save Rāvaṇa, 260; vibhuḥ as epithet of, 1061; weapon of, 317, 1056. See also Bhava; Maheśvara; Rudra; Śaṅkara

Śiva (continued)
Śivasahāya (Cr), 101–2, 106, 115, passim; believes Rāvaṇa deputes Saramā to protect Sītā from rākṣasīs, 690; claims Rāma's bleeding illusory, 782; claims Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa pretend to be bound, 810; denies wounding of Hanumān, 903; denies wounding of Lakṣmaṇa, 1304–5, 1309, 1318; denies wounding of Rāma, 765, 781; denies wounding and bleeding of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 101–2; discomfort of, at exclusion of Viṣṇu from list of deities, 1444; idiosyncratic interpretations of, 651, 783, 785, 800; on omniscience of Rāma, 929; portrays Rāma as invulnerable, 782–83, 796–97, 811, 826; theological interpretations of, 778, 783, 786, 929, 968, 1304, 1344, 1350, 1432; unwilling to associate Rāma with anything unworthy, 813–14
Skanda, 522, 532; javelin of, pierces Mount Krauñca, 81, 951, 992, 1027, 1102. See also Guha (II) social classes (varṇas), 1124; four, of traditional India (varṇas), 60, 478, 1146, 1202, 1252, 1513; kṣatriya as, 682; śūdras as, 46, 1548; svadharma as associated with, 1252 Soma, 460, 1342, 1403, 1405, 1454; Dadhimukha, son of, 272; sacrifice, 684, 1546 song of the wild elephants, 31–32, 142 572–74 spotted antelope skin (rañku), 1402, 1403. See also antelope spy (spies), 585, 687, 717–18; discover enemy's intention for a king, 169; monkeys think Vibhīṣaṇa is, 144; rākṣasa, 84–86; Rāvaṇa dispatches, 9, 85, 156–57, 169, report to Rāvaṇa, 158–68, 170–73; Sāraṇa as (see Sāraṇa) Śārdūla as (see Śārdūla); Śuka as (see Śuka); Vibhīṣaṇa recognizes Śuka and Sāraṇa as, 86, 157
Śrī, 103; abides in Vālin's necklace, 655; consort of Viṣṇu, 1452; Indra (Śakra) said to have restored lost, 822; obscure mythological reference to, 822; Sītā compared to, 134, 184, 189, 547, 702, 716, 1390; Sītā as, incarnate, 451, 1421; Viṣṇu said to possess, 1444. See also Lakṣmī
Śrīrañganātha, 1544
Śrīvaiṣṇavism, 81; expansion of narrative, 825; interpretations of, 578, 586, 588, 992, passim; Rāma as śaraṇya in, 81, 575, 747; theology of, 499, 545, 578, 675–76; 687, 795, 827, 912. See also commentators; refuge statecraft. See nīti; nītiśāstra Sternbach, L.: cites aphorisms from MBh, etc., 498, 551, 1177, 1178; on political stratagems, 563 stotra: Āditayahṛdaya, 1342 (see also Āditayahṛdaya); of Brahmā to Rāma, 40, 458–461, 1454; Maheśvaratīrtha has Rāvaṇa deliver, to Rāma, 715; Viṣṇusahasranāma, 499 stratagems, 200; force (daṇḍa) as fourth, 564, 745 (see also force); six, 744; three non-violent (sāma, dāna, bheda), 30, 140, 563 strides, three, of Viṣṇu, 283, 731, 978, 1058, 1454
Subāhu (I) (rākṣasa): son of Tāṭaka, Rāma kills in Bālakāṇḍa, 100, 1167
Subāhu (II) (vānara), 204
Sudaṃṣṭra, 63, 253, 881
Sudarśana: name of elephant of Mahodara, 302–3, 1026; name of a mountain, 634; name of Viṣṇu's discus, 1260 śūdras, 46, 1548
Sudurdhara, 172, 668

Sugrīva, 67–68, passim; account of birth of, in Uttarakāṇḍa, 666; acquires necklace, kingdom, and Tārā through Rāma, 167, 655; agrees with Rāma to make Vibhīṣaṇa an ally, 148; Aṅgada tells, why monkeys flee, 225; armor of, 402, 1280, 1134; asks why army is fleeing, 225; assures Vibhīṣaṇa that he will be king, 227, 820; backgrounded in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 67; blockades northern gate, 205; breaks bow of Kumbha, 339–41; change of heart of, regarding Vibhīṣaṇa, 148, 588–89; character of, 67–68; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; commands Suṣeṇa to tour the gates, 203; confronts Kumbhakarṇa, 291; consoles Vibhīṣaṇa, 227; consults Suṣeṇa, 20; crosses ocean, 273; deliberates with monkeys, 143; disavows any friendship with Rāvaṇa, 602; dispels Rāma's sorrow, 122; divine ancestry of, 68; enters battle with rākṣasas, 401; excels all other monkeys, 167, 654; exhorts Aṅgada to advance against rākṣasas, 307; —Rāma, 68, 122–23, 501–6; fights Kumbha, 339–40, 1131; —Kumbhakarṇa, 291–94, 1000–1002; —Mahodara, 404–5, 1282–85; —Praghasa, 206; —Rāvaṇa, 68, 252–53; —Virūpākṣa, 402–3; first monkey to address Rāma in Yuddhakāṇḍa, 67–68; follows Rāma into battle, 198; godlike power of, 68; Hanumān in service of, 121; heads monkey army, 128; hurls body of Kumbha from Mount Trikūṭa, 1134; Indrajit boasts he will slay, 354; —pierces, with weapons, 68, 325, 327; kills Kumbha, 341, 1135–36; —Mahodara, 13, 68, 405, 1284; —Praghasa, 207; —Virūpākṣa, 13, 68, 402–3, 1279–80; Kumbhakarṇa carries off, 292–94; lord of all monkey leaders, 167; mutilates Kumbhakarṇa, 293–94, 1000–1002; necklace of, given by Indra, 167, 655; —, Lakṣmī resides in, 167, 655; orders night attack on Laṅkā, 333, 1107; overcome with grief at wounding of Rāma, 223; picks up and fights with iron club, 404, 1283; places Suṣena in charge of encampment, 401, 1277; precognition of, 821; —, commentators debate, 821; prepares army for battle, 197; prone to panic and despair, 68, 216–17, 790–91; questions Vibhīṣaṇa as to how to cross the ocean, 599; Rāma agrees to visit of, to Ayodhyā, 471; —gives diadem to, 492, 541; —instructs, to return to Kiṣkindhā, 224, 471; —orders, and Hanumān to care for, wounded Lakṣmaṇa, 415; —rebukes, for unauthorized attack on Rāvaṇa, 735; —stations, at central encampment, 192, 199; Rāvaṇa strikes down, 253, 881; reassures Vibhīṣaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are merely stunned, not killed, 227, 820–21; reputation of, for harshness, 987; restores Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with herbs in Rāmopākhyāna, 825; saves Aṅgada, 339, 1130; shaken at fall of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; shares central command with Jāmbavān and Vibhīṣaṇa, 68, 192, 723; shield of, 405, 1284; son of Ṛkṣarajas, 666; suspects Vibhīṣaṇa's motives, 143–44; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; tells Vibhīṣaṇa to take Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to Kiṣkindhā, 227; terrified at fall of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 216; threatens monkeys who disobey him with death, 335, 1115; unauthorized attack of, on Rāvaṇa, 733–35; urges that Vibhīṣaṇa be put to death, 144, 588; Vibhīṣaṇa comforts, 68, 326–27; —reassures, 10, 216–17; —tells to guard Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 217; —wipes eyes of, 216; vows to kill Rāvaṇa and recover Sītā, 227; —to slay Virūpākṣa, 402; —victory, 123 suicide, 56, 499, 987, 1251; Rāma contemplates, 134, 546–47

Śuka, 43, 71, 82, 84–86, 156–69, 568, 602–3, 625–28, 647, 630–31, 658, 660, 663–64, 719–20, 771–72; addresses Rāvaṇa, 158, 165–68; assigned to northern gate, 190, 717–18; enumerates monkeys, 43, 85–86, 165–68; infiltrates monkey army, 156–57; Rāma orders, to return with message for Rāvaṇa, 158; —releases, unharmed, 86, 158; —strikes, 211; Rāvaṇa assigns, to the northern gate, 190; —orders, to spy, 156–57; —rebukes, 86, 168–69; reports to Rāvaṇa about Rāma and monkey army, 86, 158–59; Vibhīṣaṇa recognizes, 86, 157–58
Śukrācārya, 529, 556, 822; advises Rāvaṇa to perform homa ritual in Nikumbhilā grove, 1320. See also Uśanas Kāvya
Sumantra, 488, 1490, 1515, 1517, 1530, 1531, 1540; in epic chronology, 1490
Sumitrā, 469, 483, 486, 490, 1239, 1311–12, 1516, 1549; Maheśvara instructs Rāma to console, 463; meaning of, in etymology of name Saumitri, 1016; and pāyasa, 1312; Rāma dreads telling, of Lakṣmaṇa's death, 223, 811–12; Rāma fears reproaches of, 223
Sumukha, 166, 172, 787; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; name of, explained, 667; son of Mṛtyu, 166
Sundarakāṇḍa, 44, 51, 94, 114, 718, 1215, 1503; Akṣa in, 886, 1266; aśoka grove in, 795, 1510; Brahmā grants invulnerability to Mainda and Dvivida in, 582; chronology in, 911–12, 1489; Dadhimukha in, 667; Dhānyamālinī in, 1053; graphic description of rākṣasīs in, 86–87, 690, 794; Hanumān in, 28, 62, 66–67, 515, 745, 1095–96, 1160, 1422, 1510; —changes size in, 729, 888; as the heart of the Rāmāyaṇa, 3; Indrajit in, 77; kāṇḍa division between Yuddha and, 497; Kesarin in, 667; kiṃśuka tree in, 1112; madhuvana episode of, 76, 520, 1478; Nikumbhilā in, 1074; Puṣpakavimāna in, 1473, 1518–19; Rāma infuses darbha grass with weapon-spell in, 1063; Śambasādana episode in, 644; structure of, compared to that of Yuddhakāṇḍa, 18, 96; Trijaṭā in, 87–88, 794; the word caitya in, 550; words of Sītā to Rāvaṇa in, 546, 560, 671; Yūpākṣa in, 924
Suparṇa. See Garuḍa
Supārśva, 377, 1507; dissuades Rāvaṇa from killing Sītā, 73, 390, 1251–53; as a variant name of Mahāpārśva, 1270 supernatural weapons. See divine weapon-spells
Supreme Being: Rāma as, 49, 713, 1158–59, 1256, 1344
Supreme Lord: Rāma as, 44, 89, 101, 103, 1303, 1348
Supreme Spirit: Brahmā as, 1463; Rāma as, 458–61, 464–65, 578, 824, 1179, 1258, 1350, 1389, 1451, 1455, 1461, 1463
Suptaghna, 139, 762, 765, 1213, 1481; fights Rāma, 206; Rāma kills, 208
Surāntaka. See Devāntaka.
Śūrpaṇakhā, 480, 556–57, 566, 700, 1263, 1382, 1505–6; description of, 394, 1263–64; rākṣasīs blame, for destruction of rākṣasas, 394
Sūrya, 23, 260, 322, 437, 473, 645, 1095, 1135, 1227, 1285, 1299, 1321, 1488; Ādityahṛdaya as exaltation of, 1341–43; bringer of light, 135, 172, 224, 260, 334, 342, 437, 462, 609, 813, 1104, 1321, 1342, 1344–45, 1372; divine weapon-spells of, 320, 412, 1062; divinity of Sītā's family, 698; impeller of all creatures, 302–3, 1026; lord of cows, 341, 1136; maker of day, 126, 129, 209, 266, 464, 485, 698, 767, 921, 1325, 1342, 1345, 1377, 1379, 1391, 1461, 1520; resides in Rāma's arrowhead, 437, 1372; Saramā urges Sītā to take refuge with, 183; Sugrīva, son of, 957, 996; Śveta and Jyotirmukha, sons of, 172

Sūryaśatru, 139, 1213, 1481
Suṣeṇa, 45, 65, 67, 69–70, 218, 288, 523, 625, 657, 669, 727, 821, 822, 1289, 1315–18, 1481, 1522; brings water for Rāma's consecration, 491, 1536; consoles Rāma, 417, 1312; fights Kumbhakarṇa, 339; —rākṣasas, 325; —Vidyunmālin, 207–9; guards rear of army, 127–28, 526, 741; —western gate, 205; Hanumān places, in charge of encampment, 401, 1278; hears of devāsura war from the lord of the monkeys, 227; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; —strikes down, in battle, 327; kills Vidyunmālin, 209; location of, 757; medical skills of, 70; mourns Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; returns to battlefield, 288; revives fallen comrades, 385; —Lakṣmaṇa, 385, 418; saves some herbs, 1238–39; sends Hanumān to fetch herbs, 418, 1315; sends Hanumān, Sampāti, and Panasa for healing herbs, 65, 228, 1091; son of Dharma, 172, 207, 667; —Varuṇa, 667, 762; sons of, 718–19, 776; struck down in battle, 327; Sugrīva commands, to survey gates, 203; —, son-in-law of, 227; takes counsel with Rāma, 190; tells of Bṛhaspati restoring the gods with healing herbs and mantras, 227; tours Laṅkā's gates, 203, 753; two figures of this name, 667
Suvela, Mount, 669, 732, 734; as alternative name for Mount Trikūṭa, 662, 730, 743; Apte sees, as an alternative name for Mount Trikūṭa (q.v.), 662–63; army of monkeys camped near, 170, 173, 669; charming slopes of, 725; chronology of ascent of, 728, 767, 1253, 1371, 1489, 1491; Rāma ascends and camps with army on, 193–94, 727, 738; —resolves to ascend, 193, 724–25; —wishes to climb to enjoy its beauty, 724; real purpose of ascent of, is surveillance of Laṅkā, 725; Śuka and Sāraṇa hide near, 169, 662, 663
svadharma, 48, 1252, 1548
svastika: as auspicious sign painted on houses, 1533; as a musical instrument, 489, 1532–33
Svātī, 90, 155, 621
Svayaṃprabhā: rescues monkeys from enchanted cavern; 506–7, 1509–10
Śveta, 160; son of Sūrya, 172
synonymity: as a feature of the epic, 109–10, 501–2, 504, 523–24, 528, 541, 544, 566, 601, 724, 742, 752, 757, 807, 903, 975, 977, 1011, 1014, 1139, 1144; commentators try to minimize, 502, 523–24, 528, 555, 561, 592, 605, 657–59, 717, 721, 724, 742, 760–61, 777, 781–82, 787, 794, 821, 827, 846–47, 858, 863, 865, 871, 886, 889, 892–93, 903, 915–16, 926–27, 977, 982, 1008, 1028, 1032, 1051, 1150, 1174, 1241–42, 1257, 1344, 1400, 1407, 1428, 1454, 1492, 1516–17
synopsis of Yuddhakāṇḍa, 7–15 syntax, awkwardness of, 503, 507–8, 524, 534, 548, 559, 565, 587–88, 621, 642, 655, 669, 672, 678, 680, 691, 696–98, 700, 703–4, 751, 782, 809, 833, 838, 865, 885, 887, 892, 916, 928, 939, 1001, 1153, 1159, 1186, 1199, 1213, 1217, 1247, 1270, 1273, 1278, 1282, 1284, 1288, 1333, 1391, 1438, 1462, 1479, 1520, 1531, 1537. See also ambiguity

Takṣaka, 137, 556
tamas: quality, or guṇa, of darkness or turbidity, 707, 1194, 1196, 1389; nature of Rudra, 873. See also darkness
Tāmasa (divine weapon-spell), 408, 1289, 1297
Tapana: fights Gaja, 206–7, 764, 1213
Tāra, 865, 1079; kills Kumbhahanu, 247; returns to battlefield, 288
Tārā, 167, 749, 1266, 1485–86, 1521
Tāraka, 130, 532
Tārakā, 532
Tāṭakā, 100, 1164, 1451; slaying of, 1012

ten directions. See directions thrice-curved bow. See bow, thrice-curved time: as enemy of Viṣṇu, 1446; as Kāla, 667, 679, 805, 859, 1008, 1014, 1024, 1050, 1052, 1338, 1344 (see also Kāla); measures of (see measurement); of universal destruction (pralaya), 759, 771, 859, 865 time frame of Yuddhakāṇḍa. See chronology of the epic Tiṣya (Kali) Age, 33, 186, 708. See also golden age, yugas torture, 144, 558, 580; psychological, 52. See also punishment towers, 204, 208, 333, 515, 765, 1108, 1287; gateway, 196, 1000. See also watchtowers trees: bear fruit out of season, 467, 475, 484, 494, 531–32; blossoming of, as auspicious omen, 130; blossoming of, in all seasons, 195, 484, 494, 531–32, 645, 729; golden, 271, 932; Hanumān uses, and a mountain peak as weapons, 236; Kubera disports himself among the Jambū trees, 163, 643; lists of, 90, 130–131, 155, 195, 256; monkeys carry, for sport, 524; monkeys use, as weapons, 199, 204–5, 208, 212, 218, 230, 234–41, 245–48, 256, 264–65, 271–72, 284, 286, 288–89, 304–6, 316, 338–39, 343, 355–56, 366–67, 375, 385, 398, 438, 693, 743, 756, 762, 832, 837, 846, 848, 862, 873, 935, 985, 998, 1029–30, 1033–34, 1054, 1143, 1163, 1166, 1191, 1255, 1272, 1278, 1280; Narāntaka uses, for weapons, 877–78; parable of the sterile tree, 487, 1526; Rāvaṇa uses, as weapon, 433; through the grace of Brahmā, always in fruit and flower, 484; types of, used for funeral pyre, 1402; used to build bridge to Laṅkā, 155 trees, types of: arjuna (II) (Terminalia arjuna), 90, 155, 195, 535; aśvakarṇa tree, 618; jambū tree, 163, 642; —identification of, 643; kiṃśuka tree (Butea monosperma), red flowers of, 22, 92, 213, 290, 325, 334, 351, 376, 425, 733, 734, 779, 844, 993, 1082, 1112, 1156–57, 1210, 1225, 1333; sāla tree, 165, 195, 204, 285, 297, 477, 484, 576, 618, 1518; śāla tree, Aṅgada fights Kumbha with, 338; —, arrows of, pierce Rāma, 297, 1011, 1369; —, Nīla uses, to kill Prahasta's horses, 248; —, Dvivida uses, as weapon, 208; —, Hanumān kills rākṣasas with, 356, 378, 1215; —, Sugrīva fights Mahodara with, 404; —, used to build bridge, 90, 155; —, as a weapon, 143, 756; —, white flowers of, 618; śālmali tree, 137, 535, 536, 557–58; —, red flowers of, 92, 558, 376, 558, 733–34, 1210; 558, 376, 558, 733–34, 1210; saptaparṇa tree, 90, 155, 207. See also aśoka grove; flowers; Glossary of Flora and Fauna
Trijaṭā, 86–88, 218–22; accompanies Sītā, 219; acts against interest of her lord, 808; affection of, for Sītā, 808; argues ex silentio, 806; assures Sītā that Rāma is still alive, 221–22, 806; brings Sītā back to Laṅkā, 222, 809; commentators on how, can befriend Sītā, 689–90, 796; consoles Sītā, 10, 27, 88, 221–22, 794; dream-vision of, 808; filial relationship of, with Rāvaṇa, 796; gives reasons why Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are alive, 221; as guard of Sītā, 218; has place in heart for Sītā, 222; observes vital glow of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 222; Rāvaṇa orders, to take Sītā to battlefield, 218; says Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa cannot be defeated, 222; shows Sītā battlefield from Puṣpakavimāna, 218–19, 794, 809–10, 1486; Sītā hopes words of, are true, 222; in Sundarakāṇḍa, 87–88; takes Sītā back to Laṅkā, 222
Trikūṭa, Mount, 743, 772–73, 1094, 1104, 1128, 1231; battlefield on, 1094; caverns of, resonate, 211; description of, 195–96; Hanumān lands on, 332; Laṅkā located on peak of, 123, 472, 503, 727, 986, 1003, 1327; Mount Malaya as metaphorical reference to, 998; not purely natural, 513; Rāma's forces ascend, 739–40; Sugrīva hurls Kumbhakarṇa's body from peak of, 1134; Suvela as alternative name for, 662; three peaks of, 730

Trimūrdhan. See Triśiras (II) triple heaven, 463, 559, 999, 1459
Tripura, 319, 386, 1009, 1059, 1099, 1268, 1299
Triśaṅku, 129, 530, 681–82
Triśiras (I): identification of, 877, 1020; Rāma kills, in Araṇyakāṇḍa, 172, 346, 395, 472, 668, 1147, 1506
Triśiras (II) (Trimūrdhan) (son of Rāvaṇa), 251, 301–3, 309–12, 322, 472, 1023–24, 1026, 1040–44; assaults Aṅgada, 309; boons of, 302; capable of flying through air, 302; charges Aṅgada, 309; compared to Himalaya, 303; —to Yama, 311; death of, on sixth day of dark half of Bhādrāśvina, 1067; described, 303; divinely charged weapons of, 302; exhorts Rāvaṇa, 301; fights Aṅgada, 309–10; —Hanumāṇ, 311–12; —Nīla, 310; garments of, 311, 1043–44; Hanumān breaks arrow of, 311; —breaks javelin of, 311—cuts off heads of, 312; —grabs sword of, 311; —kills horses of, 311; —strikes in the chest, 311; hurls javelin at Hanumāṇ, 311; identification of, 877, 1020, 1038, 1048; immobilizes Nīla, 310; Kumbhakarṇa, paternal uncle of, 299, 876; looses arrows at Nīla, 310; Mahodara and Mahāpārśva dispatched to protect, 302; Mahodara, paternal uncle of, 311; Nīla hurls mountaintop at, 310; Rāvaṇa embraces, 302; riddles Hanumān with arrows, 311; sets forth for battle, 302; skilled at magical illusion, 302; son of Rāvaṇa, 1020, 1023; strikes Aṅgada with arrows, 310; —Hanumān in chest with sword, 311
Triśiras (III) (son of Tvaṣṭṛ), 1176 truth act: of Lakṣmaṇa, 382, 1230; of Sītā, 458, 1441
Tulsī Dās, 46, 104, 522. See also Rāmcaritmānas
Tvaṣṭṛ: as architect of the gods, 1044, 1176, 1331, 1342; divine weapon-spell of, 1063; Triśiras as son of, 1176

Uccaiḥśravas: Narāntaka's horse compared to, 303, 1027 unrighteousness. See dharma Uśanas Kāvya: ability of, to restore the dead to life, 556; purohita of the asuras, 556, 855, revives Kaca, 557. See also Śukrācārya uśīra grass, 1403
Uśīrabīja, Mount, 164, 644
Uttarāphalgunī, 126, 519

Vaidehī. See Sītā
vaidūrya: as cat's-eye beryl, 558, 1152, 1535; as color of Sāgara's complexion, 611; as emerald, 1540; as lapis, 509, 611, 1152, 1322, 1473, 1535, 1541
Vairocana: Rāvaṇa compared with, 260, 900
Vaiṣṇava. See Śrīvaiṣṇavism
Vaiśvānara. See Agni
Vaivasvata, 172, 252, 260, 269, 323, 386, 1242; servants of, 331, 1099, 1334; sons of, 172. See also Mṛtyu; Yama vajra: as distinguised from aśani, 893, 903, 997, 1118, 1144, 1299. See also aśani; Indra Vajradaṃṣṭra, 139, 211, 771, 842, 853, 1213, 1481, 1491; death of, marks end of third day of battle, 842, 1253; iron club of, 139; killing of, 842–44
Vajrahanu, 139,
Vajramuṣṭi, 765; engages with Mainda, 207–8
Vālin, 68, 296, 602, 1010; Aṅgada, son of, 225; birth of, 996; brother of Sugīva, 1509; death of, in chronology of story, 1490; former king of the monkeys, 1040; killing of, 147–48, 473, 475–76, 481, 584, 652, 1010–11, 1306, 1369, 1509; —, from ambush, 655; necklace of, 655; place where Rāma killed, 473; Rāma kills, with arrow, 167, 297, 580, 655; rebukes Rāma, 888; Tārā, former wife of, 1486

Vālin (continued)
Vālmīki, 23, passim; as aware of Rāma's and Lakṣmaṇa's status as avatāras, 49–50; cinematic techniques of, 91; demonstrates humanity of Rāma, 40–41; detailed descriptions of, 23, 89, 91–95; poetry of violence of, 91, 93; psychological warfare fascinates, 27; "realism" of, 39; theme of "righteous rākṣasa" of, 34; use of rasas by, 25
Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa: English translation(s) of Dutt, 113–14, 116; —of Gita Press, 113–14; —of Griffith, 113; —of Raghunathan, 114; —of Shastri, 113, 115–16; French translation(s) of Pagani, 114–16; —of Roussel, 114–17; Indian language translations of, 117–18; Italian translation of Gorresio 114–15; Jagat Singh, 94. See also critical edition of Yuddhakāṇḍa
Vālukinī River, 447, 484, 1500, 1518 vāmanāvatāra, 731, 828, 900, 929, 978, 1049, 1058, 1071, 1235, 1448, 1454 vānaras. See monkeys Varadarāja (Cv), 106, passim; on two types of avatāra, 831. See also commentators varāhāvatāra, 1446 varṇa. See social classes varṇāśramadharma. See social classes
Varuṇa, 221, 458, 608, 626, 632, 735, 1132, 1134, 1227, 1342–43; abode of as, lair of rākṣasas, 132, 541; daughter of, 907; —, Puñjikasthalā as, 572, 907; divine weapon-spell of, 221, 381; guards ocean, 198, 740; —the western quarter, 625, 1248; Hemakūṭa, son of, 172; identified with Sāgara, 611; noose of, 315; —, repelled by Atikāya, 315; ocean as abode of, 126, 131, 151, 153–54, 231, 277, 285, 340, 364, 472, 476, 482, 503, 505–6, 540, 599, 614, 616–17, 833, 959; Ṛṣabha as son of, 1047; sons of, 137, 557; Suṣeṇa as son of, 667, 762. See also ocean; Sāgara; Samudra
Varūthi River, 1500
Vāsava, 158, 161, 173, 221, 229, 259, 362, 408, 696, 898, 1102, 1290, 1330, 1388; defeats daityas, 182, 697; fights Śambara, 1204–5; —Vṛtra, 248, 410, 869, 1294; as god of rain, 424, 1102–3; grants Rāma boon, 484; Indrajit defeats, in battle, 323, 368, 1074; Kumbhakarṇa defeats, in battle, 269–70, 930–31; Mātali, charioteer of, 424; orders Vāyu to give Rāma a golden necklace, 491, 1540; rākṣasa women mistake Rāma for, 442; Vasus consecrate, 491, 1539; weapon of, 1331. See also Indra; Śakra
Vasiṣṭha, 1243; Arundhatī, wife of, 1390; consecrates Rāma, 491, 1516–17, 1538–40; grounded in Brahmā, 895; purohita of the Ikṣvākus, 530, 1523, 1525, 1530–31; Rāma superior to, 652; staff (daṇḍa) of, 906; Suyajña, son of, 1525; teaches parables, 587
Vāsuki, 137, 232, 421; as churning rope, 283, 556, 834, 977, 1244, 1324
Vasus, 172, 269, 559, 568, 1342; consecrate Indra, 491, 1539; eight, 861; Rāma identified with Vasu Ṛtadhāman, 459, 1445; Sudurdhara, son of, 172, 668
vātaskandhas: aborted fetus of Diti becomes, 1138
Vāyu, 824, 1441; able to cross the ocean, 121, 498; in Ādityahṛdaya, 1342, 1344–45; antagonism of with Indra, 1103; divine weapon-spells of, 221, 297, 320, 1012; encounter of, with Kuśanābha's daughters, 1429; exhorts Rāma, 825; father of Hanumān, 148, 190, 214, 288, 255, 259–60, 288, 328–30, 332, 342, 355, 492, 587, 718, 840,

900, 902, 990, 1041–42, 1138; gives Rāma a golden necklace, 491, 1540; guardian of the northwestern quarter, 740, 1248; Hanumān kills Nikumbha in revenge for, 1138; hurls Mount Meru into ocean off Laṅkā, 896–97; Mātariśvan as epithet of, 1089; as messenger of Indra, 1102; supports mission of Hanumān, 1105; tells Lakṣmaṇa how to kill Atikāya, 321
vedas, 1445; brahma in the sense of, 529, 1403, 1463; Rāma's bow consists of, 335, 1113; Rāmāyaṇa as supplement to, 1550; the role of the Rāmāvatāra and, 715, 831; specify use of red turbans for ṛtvik priests, 1076; statements of Mahodara contradict, 965
Vedavatī: curses Rāvaṇa for raping her, 907
Vegadarśin, 172, 523, 625; brings water for consecration of Rāma, 491, 1536; guards the rear, 127; Indrajit pierces, with arrows, 325; —strikes down, in battle, 327; name of, 667; rushes Kumbhakarṇa, 339
Vibhīṣaṇa, 80–83, 155, passim; abandons Rāvaṇa, 8, 142–43, 563–66; able to see invisible Indrajit, 28, 215, 787; able to see through illusion, 27–28, 157; assures monkeys that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa will recover, 216–17, 326–27, 790–92, 1087; boons of, 83, 578; —, uninjured because of, 1086; catches spies, 9, 86–87, 157, 169; character of, 80–83; climbs Mt. Suvela, 194; consecrated king of Laṅkā, 4, 14, 55, 150, 167, 201, 446, 596, 1407–9; consoles Rāma, 47, 361–62, 1182–83; counselors of, Anala, Śarabha, Sampāti, and Praghasa 191–93, 576, 719, 721, 724, 1181; counsels Rāvaṇa, 8, 140–41; defects to Rāma, 8, 142–43, 563–66; defends betrayal of Rāvaṇa, 370, 1196–97; denounces crimes of Rāvaṇa, 370, 1196–97; describes Atikāya, 313–15; describes Laṅkā's defenses to Rāma, 190–91, 719–22; encourages Rāma, 192; enumerates and describes rākṣasa warriors, 250–52; exhorts Lakṣmaṇa to kill Indrajit, 368–70; fetches Sītā for Rāma, 14, 451–53, 1423–29; fights Mitraghna, 206; Hanumān urges acceptance of, 10, 146–48; hovers in the sky, 142–44; Indrajit reviles, as traitor to rākṣasa race, 369, 1194–95; lacks evil nature of rākṣasas, 87, 370, 1196; laments Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 226; as metaphor for human sinner, 87; monkeys mistake, for Indrajit, 225; narrates history of Kumbhakarṇa to Rāma, 11, 269–71, 930–33; never employs power of illusion, 27; offers loyalty and service to Rāma, 150; perceives vital glow of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 217, 791–92; performs Rāvaṇa's funeral rites, 14, 444–45, 1399–1404; proposes telling monkeys that Kumbhakarṇa is mechanical device, 271, 933; rallies monkey army, 217; Rāma asks, about Atikāya, 313; —fails to comprehend assurances of, that Sītā is not dead, 39, 47, 363, 1185; Rāvaṇa claims, is captured, 175; reassures Rāma that Rāvaṇa would never countenance the killing of Sītā, 27, 47, 361–62, 1182–83; reviles Indrajit, 370–71, 1196–97; Saramā, female counterpart and possible wife of, 87, 689; searches battlefield with Hanumān, 66, 327, 1088; sees Jāmbavān on battlefield, 327, 1088; shaken at fall of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 214; shares command of central camp with Sugrīva and Jāmbavān, 68, 192, 723; shares nature of virtuous men, 370, 1196; Sugrīva consoles, 227; —reassures, he will be king, 227; — tells, to take Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to Kiṣkindhā, 227; surprised that Jāmbavān only asks about Hanumān, 328; unharmed by Indrajit's attacks, 68; 326–27, 1086; wipes eyes of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 226; —of Sugrīva, 216, 791

vibhītaka. See myrobalan wood vidyādharas, 269, 306, 318, 1094
Vidyuddaṃṣṭra, 325
Vidyujjihva, 84–86, 173–76, 670–75, 678, 1213, 1481; departure of, 176, 675; husband of Śūrpaṇakhā, 557; magical illusion (māyā) of, 26, 52, 84–85, 173; as master of, 26, 173, 670; name of, 675; produces simulacra of Rāma's severed head and bow, 25, 32, 52, 85, 173–76, 670
Vidyunmālin, 207–9, 766, 1481; fights Suṣeṇa with mace, 207–8; Suṣeṇa kills, 209, Vijaya: an auspicious juncture, 126, 518–19; identity of, 1538–39; name of a priest, 491, 1515, 1530
vilāpa. See lament vimāna, 1519–20, 1524, 1544; meaning of, 765. See also Puṣpakavimāna
Vinata, 161, 776, 1079; Rāma orders, to find Indrajit, 212
Vinatā: half sister of Kadrū, 829, 1228
Vindhya mountains, 89, 153, 161, 165, 251–52, 296, 481, 637, 875, 878, 1134, 1342, 1345
Vīrabāhu, 204
Virādha: disposal of body of, 1505; Rāma kills, 100, 172, 296, 395, 436, 473, 479, 625, 668, 1010, 1265, 1369, 1488, 1505
Virūpākṣa (I), 22, 372, 720, 762, 764; fights Lakṣmaṇa, 206; identity of, 718, 1270; Lakṣmaṇa kills, 208; stationed at central encampment, 191, 723; vows to kill Rāma, 139–40
Virūpākṣa (II), 22, 397–403, 407, 1279–81; calls out own name, 401; fights Sugrīva, 401–3; identity of, 718, 1270; name of, 1280–81; marches forth with Rāvaṇa, 399; Sugrīva kills, 68, 403
viśalyā, "healer of arrow wounds," 228, 329, 417, 418, 823, 1091–92, 1314, 1315, 1317–19; in Rāmopākhyāna, 823; Yudhiṣṭhira uses, 823
Viṣṇu, 322, 396, 522, 614, 624, 1050, 1386, 1400, 1454; in Ādityahṛdaya, 1341–43, 1347; and Bali, 322, 853, 900, 1071; crosses the three worlds, 313, 731, 978, 1049, 1058; dagger of, 1448; dark complexion of, 611; Devāntaka compared to, 303, 1027–28; discussion of, 332, 766; as ekaśṛṅga, 1446; eternality of, 1446; exchanges boons with Garuḍa, 828; exclusion of, from list of deities, 1444; fights Vairocana, 260, 900; as foe of rākṣasas, 50, 540, 665; form of Atikāya compared to, 313; Garuḍa as vāhana of, 50, 594, 665, 820, 828, 899–900, 1228 (see also Garuḍa) grants rākṣasas invulnerability, 590; Hanumān compared to, 241; as Hayānana, 1099; heroes as aṃśāvatāras of, 50; as inner spirit of Indra, 1449; invocation of, 497; Kāśyapa as father of, 828, 1448; Kaustubha gem of, 612; kills asura, 241, 852; kills Naraka, 301, 1024; as Kṛṣṇa, 1454; lack of devotion of Rāvaṇa to, 955; Lakṣmaṇa as avatāra of, 1463; Lakṣmaṇa as a portion of, 64, 259, 894–97, 899, 905, 1060–61; lord of all, 1447; lotus-naveled (padmanābha), 1449; Mālyavān thinks Rāma is, 72, 188; names of, 676, 693, 970, 1018, 1072, 1235; as nature of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, 50; Nīla compared to, 208; omniscence of, 1444; as primal cause of universe, 1446; priority of, 1451; as Puṇḍarīkākṣa, 1546; Rāma compared with, 260; —revealed as, 40–41, 84, 459–60, 713, 827, 830–31, 1061, 1262, 1389, 1400, 1444, 1461, 1549; Śiśumāra, form of, 1450; sleeps on cosmic waters, 1452–53; —on Śeṣa, 547, 883, 1452–53; Śrī as consort of, 702; sword of, 459; Vālmīki understands Rāma as avatāra of, 50; with Vāsava, 182, 408, 1290; as Vasu Ṛtadhāman, 1445; without beginning or end, 1445; world maintained inside belly of, 1453; younger brother of Indra, 384, 594, 1235, 1290. See also Kṛṣṇāvatāra;

Narasiṃhāvatāra; Rāmāvatāra; vāmanāvatāra; varāhāvatāra
Viṣṇusahasranāmastotra: Rāmānuja cites, 499
Viśvakarman, 615; in Ādityahṛdaya, 1343, 1347; as architect of the gods, 13, 913, 969, 1331; binds the sun, 1100; fashions council hall, 568; —Laṅkā, 472, 624, 732, 1480; —Puṣpakavimāna, 469, 1473, 1518; father of Nala, 69, 154, 172; gives boon to Nala, 154, 616
Viśvāmitra, 94, 1148, 1167; gives Rāma divine weapon-spells, 805, 1005, 1012, 1061, 1063, 1259, 1289; protector of Triśaṅku, 530; rival of Vasiṣṭha, 530, 895; urges Rāma to kill Tāṭakā, 1451 vital glow (lakṣmī): as a sign of life, 217, 222, 791, 898–89; without which death is apparent, 222
Viṭāpāvatī: identification of, 1138; iron club seems to set, spinning, 342
Vṛtra, 248, 340, 1132, 1204, 1294; as fierce fighter, 373; gods rejoice at death of, 382; Indra severs head of, 298; killing of, by Indra as a standard of comparison, 24, 174, 299, 382, 410, 438, 445, 672, 869, 1015, 1132, 1176, 1204, 1294, 1376, 1405, 1449; Tvaṣṭṛ creates, to avenge death of son, 1176 war hammers, 175, 191, 232, 234, 264–65, 282, 323, 345, 356, 367, 412, 719, 916, 919, 1031, 1073, 1227; of Kumbhakarṇa, 296–97, 1002, 1010, 1012–13 warfare, psychological, 12, 25, 27 warrior(s): call out their names on battlefield, 202, 401, 759, 838, 1090; code of, 677–78, 748, 864–65, 887–88, 988–89

"The Wasteland." See Marukāntāra watchtowers, 125, 507; for Laṅkā's guards, 512. See also towers weapon(s), 139; aśani as, 903, 997, 1118–19, 1144, 1299; chariot weapons, 261, 1053, 1220; chariot-javelin (rathaśakti), 463, 1050, 1357; of Greeks, 508, of Hebrews, 508; identity of, unclear, 763–64; of Indra, 420; of Indrajit, 214; lance of Kumbhakarṇa described, 282; lists of, 175, 191, 232, 234, 264–65, 323, 345, 356, 367, 399, 412, 1031, 1073, 1227; of monkeys, 239, 246, 271, 286, 391, 639, 693, 756, 837, 863, 1255; in place of śarapatra grass, 324, 349, 1075, 1076; of rākṣasas, 232, 234, 243, 245, 250, 283–84, 366, 367, 391, 392, 399, 837, 863; of rākṣasas and monkeys, 205, 234, 246, 248; of Rāvaṇa (see Rāvaṇa, weapons of) of Romans, 508; sharpened on whetstones, 695; translation of, difficult, 111–12; types of, 508, 672, 719–20, 760, 763–64, 835, 837, 863–64, 903, 916, 919, 979, 1299, 1329; See also archery; armguards; armor; arrow; bow; bowstrings; divine weapon-spells; hundred-slayers; Indrajit, serpent-arrows/weapons; iron arrows; iron beams; iron club; iron cudgels; iron mace; iron shafts; iron war hammers; javelin; noose; trees; Glossary of Weapons wedding ceremony, 453; clasping of hands in, 683, 1439; dress at, 1456 western mountain. See Asta, Mount widow(s), 52, 1386, 1393; adornment of, 1529; lament of, 41, 394; mount funeral pyre, 1251; no, when Rāma rules, 493, 1547; Puṣpakavimāna will not transport, 88, 807, 1486; Sītā as, must follow fate of husband, 177, 678; Sītā would never be, 219–20, 798; wife as accountable for her own condition as, 678. See also anugamana; satī woman (women): bodily signs of (see bodily signs); dependency of, 1435, 1541; devices to screen, 1428; dwelling of, in the house of a man other than one's husband, 455; killing of, 354; public appearance of, 453, 1428–29; seclusion of, 453; veiling of, 1395; virtuous conduct of, 453 wrist and finger guards, 596–97, 1148. See also armguards

Yadvābhaṭṭa: a derisive term for Govindarāja, 590, 966, 1240
Yajñakopa, 139, 1213; fights Rāma, 206; Rāma kills, 208
Yajñaśatru: Rāma shoots, 211
yakṣas, 121; Kubera associated with, 1017–18, 1138, 1158; Kubera ruler of, 127, 522, 1017–18, 1138; Kumbhakarṇa crushes, 269; Kumbhakarṇa's lance kills, 282; Rāvaṇa invulnerable to, 262
Yama, 23; as antaka, "ender of all things," 172, 241, 252, 253, 290, 306, 311, 386–87, 396, 522, 668, 843, 851, 975, 1003, 1005, 1034, 1043, 1242, 1293; arrows of, Rāvaṇa likened to, 253; compared to Hanumān, 241; —to Triśiras, 311; Death as, 1198; Kumbhakarṇa compared to, 268; 285; 290; noose of, 843, 975, 1443; Rāvaṇa compared to, 252; Rāvaṇa defeats, 137. See also antaka; Death; Mṛtyu Yamunā, 5, 474, 477, 1488, 1490
yātudhāna, 126, 202, 253, 264, 292, 305, 444, 1032, 1085; Sumāli, name of a, 1397; as synonym for rākṣasa, 881; type of rākṣasa, 515, 751
Yogamāyā: foretells the destruction of Kaṃsa, 575 yojana(s), 533, 541, 543, 642, 651, 1113; distance of Hanumān's search in, 1103; —of sun from earth in, 649–50; —Sugrīva hurls Kumbha, 1134; length of bridge to Laṅkā in, 619–20; —of Hanumān's jump to capture the sun in, 649–50; measurement of, 1500–1501; —Kumbhakarṇa's residence in, 913; —Laṅkā in, 731; speed of sun in, per half-second 1347 yoke pole. See chariots Yuddhakāṇḍa, 17, 34; action in, 17; annular structure of, 18, 96; characterization in, 43–88; cinematic quality of narrative of, 17, 44, 90–95; chronology of (see chronology of the epic); completes circle of story begun in the Ayodhyākāṇḍa, 41, 96; complexity of, 43; epithets, patronymics, kennings, and synonyms in, 109–10; extent of, in northern recension, 497, 626; grand scope of, 44; large number of characters in, 44; length of, 3, 43; as mini-epic, 96; narrative consistency of, 663, 942; — sarga divisions in, 1327, 1363; oral nature of, 94, 109; phalaśruti of, 96–97 (see also phalaśruti); political and social impact of, 42; reminiscent of Ayodhyākāṇḍa, 28; sequence of text of, 1387–88; setting of, as beyond human habitation, 43; shifting scene of, 44, 94–95; similarity of, to battle books of Mahābhārata, 19; style and structure of, 89–98; synopsis of, 7–16; themes of, 17–42, 89; time frame of, 7, 17 (see also chronology of the epic); titles of, 18; translations of, 112–18; use of animal names in, 110–11; visual elements in, 89–90, 94; vulgate text of, 114–15; weapons in, 111 (see also weapons; Glossary of Weapons). See also critical edition of Yuddhakāṇḍa
yugas (cosmic ages), 285, 334, 397, 754, 906, 1287; blazing meteors at end of, 424, 906; clouds at end of, 289; dvāpara, 1400–1401, 1416–47; fire at end of, 23, 153, 294, 312, 317, 342, 347, 367, 387, 397, 414, 424, 437, 482, 983, 1221; immutable progression of, 708; kali (tiṣya): 33, 186, 708; kṛta (golden age), 707–8; relative strength of dharma and adharma in, 707–8; specific characteristics of, 707–8; sun at end of, 398, 425; winds at end of, 203, 401, 412, 754, 1278. See also golden age Yūpākṣa, 925, 1115, 1122–24, 1126, 1132, 1141, 1270; addresses Kumbhakarṇa, 266–67; minister of

Rāvaṇa, 266–67; name of two rākṣasas, 924, 1270; slain by Hanumān, 924 yuvarāja, 632, 1243; Aṅgada as, 68, 160, 581, 1376, 1486; commentators discuss offer of post of, to Lakṣmaṇa, 1544–45; as heir apparent, 632; Lakṣmaṇa refuses consecration as, 58, 61, 493; Rāma consecrates Bharata as, 493; —offers post of, to Lakṣmaṇa, 493, 1544–45; two senses of (heir apparent, prince regent), 946